But the prohibition does indicate the important probation that our first parents were under while they were in the garden of Eden. Life and death were set before them in a manner calculated to enhance their dignity and happiness, if they fulfilled the condition of life. But if they did not fulfill the condition of life, dying they must die. And no word conveys an idea more terrible than death, whether it pertains to the body from the natural causes of mortality, or the destruction of both soul and body in the day of final retribution.

Adam's first state of probation was under the covenant of works, and the law knew no mercy; and for his first act of disobedience the curse of the law came upon him, as it is written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them." The language of the law is, "obey and live, disobey and die"; and its precepts and penalties cannot be abated. For not "one jot or one tittle shall . . . pass from the law till all be fulfilled." The threatened penalty expressed the just deserts of sin, and when our first parents transgressed the divine law, they were exposed to immediate death, under the abiding wrath of God. The only ground of reprieve was the revelation of mercy through the glorious Mediator, the woman's promised seed. And on this gospel ground they went forth from the garden, on probation for eternal life, being now under the covenant of redemption.

The curse that came upon Adam embraces all his posterity, and the whole race of mankind received hurt in the constitution of their bodies and moral state of the mind. Hence the same inability to satisfy the legal claim under the covenant of works, has passed upon every man. "Through the offence of one, many be dead." Had there been no plan of redemption in the divine purpose, death would have ensued the very day that Adam sinned, and the human race would have perished in his loins. Therefore every candid and reflecting mind must perceive that the plan of redemption is to be fully accomplished at the end of this mortal state. "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." The order and arrangement of the plan proves that the covenant of redemption was established before the beginning of creation. And if all that pertains to the great work of redemption by Jesus Christ be exhibited, we have an exhibition of the whole gospel of divine grace.

According to the covenant compact, it belonged to Christ to assume our nature, and suffer in the sinner's stead, that the law might be vindicated, and made honorable; hence he is, eminently "the Redeemer." And as his humiliation and death places him in the position of judge of "the quick and the dead," the final destiny of the race, for whom he died, will not be awarded until he comes the second time. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son." And since the Son "came not to judge the world" at his first advent, none have yet been judged and rewarded. Hence Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all."

"DOES THE SOUL LIVE IN DEATH?"

NUMBER TWO.

In our last we noticed Matthew 10: 28,—"Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul."

The next argument used to prove that the "soul lives in death," is taken from the Messiah's words in John 12: 23–26. Jesus said, "The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal."

The argument from the above passage is stated thus: "The life of the corn leaves the body in death, and the body is dead; but the life is more alive than before; that is, it is more active. If the life dies, the corn of wheat never produces fruit. The soul lives, then, when the body dies."

What relation has this argument to the words of Christ? Plainly, none. He speaks in reference to his own death and resurrection,

"Our Lord compares himself to a grain of wheat; his death to a grain sown, and decomposed in the ground; his resurrection to the blade which springs up from the dead grain; which grain thus dying brings forth abundance of fruit. I must die to be glorified; and unless I am glorified I cannot establish a glorious church of Jews and Gentiles upon the earth." (Clarke.)

Paul, using this illustration in reference to man (1 Cor. 15: 36–44), says, "That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body which shall be, but bare grain; it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain; but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed its own body. So, also, is the resurrection of the dead: it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul [or person], the last Adam was made a quickening [or life-giving] spirit. The first man was of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy [or mortal], such are they, also, that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they, also, that are heavenly [or immortal]. As we have borne the image of the earthy [or mortal], we shall, also, bear the image of the heavenly [or immortal]."

In all this argument, thus far, man is not once spoken of as a compound being; but simply as man; as mortal man, whose only hope in death is the resurrection, by the Life-giver, the Lord from heaven. He does not speak of the germ of the grain as being in one place, and the body in another, as separated; but the illustration by the inspired apostle, when applied to man in death, is that whatever is raised was dead; "sleeping in Jesus," the "life hid with Christ in God." He does not speak of the spirit of man coming at the moment of the resurrection to be united to the body from which it has been long separated: this idea is not even hinted at. Paul gives no place to this doctrine. Hear him: "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I show you a mystery: We shall not all sleep [die], but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; (for the trumpet shall sound;) and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Now, since neither Christ nor Paul speak of "the life of the corn leaving the body in death, and the body dead, and the life more alive than before; that is, it is more active" between death and the resurrection, than when living in the flesh: we conclude that it was no part of the doctrine of Christ, or of Paul. For, surely, if this were the true doctrine, the Master and Head of the Church would have spoken plainly upon it; and Paul, the "wise master-builder" in the Apostolic Church, would have at least hinted at it, in his great argument with the Corinthian fool, who denied the resurrection. 1 Cor. 15: 36.

Another argument for the existence and life of the soul in death, is founded on the fact that "man is called a soul because he has a soul, as a vessel is called a sail, because it has a sail. Hence the term, when expressive of the person, is used as a synecdoche, not literally. 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.' Here it means the person, not the life element. Adopt this principle and all is plain."

Let us look at this. "The first man, Adam, was made a living soul." God said to him, in the day of his transgression, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This convicted and doomed sinner is declared to be a living soul, having the "life element," and yet he is doomed to death, and to return to the dust from whence he was taken. Thus, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The "person," the "life-element," dies and goes to the dust.

But "The man is called a soul because he has a soul, as a vessel is called a sail, because it has a sail." The man, What is the man that has the soul? God says when he created man and breathed into him the breath of life, man became a living soul. The author of this tract defines man as composed of three elements: body, soul and spirit. Now if this man has a soul, does it mean that the two elements which help make up the perfect man, possess the third, and call it his soul? and in a change of circumstances, do the body and soul say my spirit? and still in another view, do the soul and spirit say my body? Which of these is the man? Is there more than one man? When one speaks of his soul, or his spirit, of his mind, or heart, does he mean to speak of more than one being, under different forms of expression? When one says, my soul, me, I, does he not simply mean himself, as a simple living soul, or person?

It is said if we will adopt the principle that soul, when applied to persons, is figurative, and refers only to the body, and not to the life element, then all would be plain. But would this, if it were true, be honest? Does God make this distinction? When he said to Adam, the living soul, "Thou shalt surely die," he told him what he meant by death: it was to return unto the ground: "for out of it thou wast taken: dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3: 19.) Did not God give the whole truth on this matter?

Here, then, we have man's destiny in death from the mouth of Jehovah. He not only says man shall die, but tells us what that death is: it is going back to dust. And he does not tell us of any part of man that survives the death. He does not speak of a life element in dead men; or of a soul going to the New Jerusalem. But if these things had been true, would God have omitted them when speaking to his fallen creatures? Assuredly not.

In this connection it may be remarked that the Scriptures speak of God having a soul no less than fourteen times. We give one example: "Your new moons and appointed feasts my soul hateth." (Is. 1: 14.) Does our brother believe that God has a soul in the popular sense of that word? or that he meant to say, simply, that HE hated the hypocritical worship of the Jews at that time?—Voice of the West.

WHO SHALL BE SAVED?

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord and righteousness from the God of his salvation."

David has here asked a question that should cause every one to pause in their course and listen to the answer, especially those who profess to be in the way that leadeth to Mount Zion, even unto his holy hill. It would seem that David had made the inquiry for the especial benefit of the church, and it becomes us, who profess to be one of that body, to ponder it. The promise is to him that hath clean hands and a pure heart. You here see that the axe is laid at the root of the tree, even to the heart, for the heart is the great source of all our action, and if that be pure, so will our lives be.

Christ pronounced blessings on the pure in heart, and says "they shall see God." A sweet fountain cannot send forth bitter water, neither will a pure heart, one that is sanctified to God, send forth the bitter fruits of hate, strife and malice. We are created with a heart which is represented as a heart of stone, but by the divine influence operating upon it in answer to prayer, we may have it changed to one of flesh, or a pure heart, and then by a faithful continuance in well doing may receive a foretaste of the blessings from on high and the fruition in the kingdom of his Son.

To help us to find if we are in possession of this pure heart, let us consider some of the fruits of an impure one, and if we find we are in possession of a pure heart, we have lost nothing by the few hours' reflection; but if, on the other hand, we find ourselves wanting, it is better to find it out now than to go on deceiving ourselves and hear it said, "Depart, I never knew you." Now the heart that is at enmity with God must be on pretty good terms with Satan, and of course always willing to do his bidding; and you will find it ever on the alert to do some mischief. It has such an experienced leader, and is such an adept in counterfeiting, that it is sometimes almost impossible to tell it from a pure heart. But though man may sometimes be deceived, God never; for man looketh upon the outward appearance, but God upon the heart, and he knoweth them that are his.

Some of the works of an impure heart, when under the christian guise, are these:—Going about reporting all manner of evil; stirring up discord among brethren; wounding where they should heal; ingratiating themselves into people's favor only to find out what they can to use to their disadvantage; when one brother or sister has a little difficulty they must know all about it, not with a view to act as peacemaker, but to tell, and make it much worse. Of course they know the private history of each member, and many are the dark sayings lisped into the ears of one brother to the detriment of another, and thus the peace of an entire church is destroyed by these impure hearts. They will always end with a pious hope that the erring one may see his faults, and make long prayers for the prosperity of Zion and love of the brethren, when every act is destined to distract and destroy. You see them seeking [illegible] always wishing to be first, and every thing that is not done by their direction is not done right; they are quick to pay homage to the rich, and slow to see the needs of the poor.

These are some of the fruits we see arising from an impure heart. Now let us consider some of the fruits of a pure one. Are any in sorrow, they are ready with sympathy. In distress, with help. In a strange land, they are as a brother or a sister. When cast down, they are ever ready with their prayers. Is there trouble among brethren, they go but to make peace. Patient in trials, firm of faith, strong in hope, long-suffering in adversity, abounding in charity, and with the whole christian armor on, are ever ready to do the will of the Lord, whether they gain the applause or condemnation of man. Trusting in God, he does his will here, and when he comes down to the stream of death, and the dark waters begin to embrace him, he can quietly yield himself, saying, as did Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of life."

When we see the eager manner with which the world is striving after earthly gain, gold, silver, honor, a great name, also the most trifling things, many whose greatest trouble is to know how to take a new step in some dance, the latest fashion, or the result of the coming election, we cannot forget that their honors will turn to shame, that earthly pleasure, when the cup is drained, leaves naught but bitterness, and that he that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver, nor he that loveth increase with increase, and that this is also vanity. We sometimes ask ourselves, where is the meek christian who wears the world only as a loose garment, to be thrown off at the first call of the Master, whose first question in the morning is, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do, and whose evening praise goes up like a sweet smelling savor?

In this dark night of sin, when mammon is worshiped by a wicked world, who quiet their conscience by the cry of peace, and are solacing themselves with the belief that to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant, the meek follower of Christ, with staff in hand, is wending his way towards his Father's home. The chilling winds of oppression blow fiercely against him. Torrents of persecution almost bear him to the earth. Thick clouds of darkness envelope him, almost hiding from him that bright "Star" by which he directs his course. He is buffeted, derided, scoffed at, and it seems as if the powers of Satan were combined against him; and, worst of all, the lovely face of his Savior seems hidden from his view. In agony he cries, Lord, hide not thou thyself from me. Lord, save, or I perish! He remembers the promise, that though all the world forsake thee, yet will not I forsake thee. Faith takes firm hold of the promise, and soon the clouds begin to move away. The glimmering of Bethlehem's Star is seen. Soon it comes out and shines with a clear and steady brilliancy. The bow of promise is again given in the heavens, to show him God still is, and is faithful.

With a shout of praise he goes on his way, full of hope in God; for even if around him are storms, lightning and thundering, and all is wrapt in despair, far, far above it all shines that lone star to guide him to his home, a land where he shall receive the blessings from the Lord, in the kingdom of Christ, bask in the smiles of Jesus, sing with the holy throng, feast with angels, shout victory, victory, over all trials, dwell in love with faithful Father Abraham and his children of faith, and wake the golden harp in one loud song of praise, while cherubim and seraphim shall echo the refrain, and that sweet singer of Israel will again sing forth his psalms, and all the mighty host unite in a song to God, and to him that sitteth upon the throne, and so shall they ever be with the Lord. A SERMON.

This text seems to express the final result of that great day of judgment, to which we are all hastening; therefore, it is of the greatest importance that we fully understand what is to take place when that awful day arrives. We will consider,

1st. The proof of a day of final judgment. I presume, at this present period of the world's existence, I shall find but very few who will deny the truth of the Bible, which speaks so plainly of that solemn event; which must take place at the closing up of all things in this world's history, and just before a new order of things begins. Now, dear reader, we will refer you to a few passages of Holy Writ, which portray in glowing colors the majestic scenes of that awful day.

We will first refer the reader to the book of Daniel, 7: 10, where it is said,—"Thousand thousands ministered unto them, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Here the prophet saw, as he relates in the next verse, the overthrow of the cruel horn power, which had done so much mischief in this world. The prophet also had a view of the setting up, and establishing for ever, of that glorious kingdom of the Son of God, when "He who is our life shall appear," and reign over his saints for ever. We also read in Psalms 9: 8, "He shall judge the world in righteousness"; also, Psalms 96: 13, "For he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth"; and in Psalms 98: 9, "with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity." We also read in Acts 17: 31, "Because he hath appointed a day in the which, he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained." St. Paul also tells us, in Rom. 2: 16, of a day when "God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel." The same apostle tells us, in Rom. 14: 10, "that we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ"; and in Heb. 9: 27, "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment." The apostle Jude also brings to view the dreadful scenes of the judgment, in verse 15th; and also the dreadful doom of the wicked at that time. St. Paul to Timothy (2 Tim. 4: 1), refers to the same time, where he charges him before the Lord Jesus Christ, "who shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing and his kingdom." Our dear Savior refers to the great judgment scene (Matt. 16: 27), where he speaks of his coming "in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."

We also have the scenes of the judgment day portrayed in awful grandeur, in Rev. 20: 12, where the Revelator informs us that he "saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened," and judgment was rendered according to what was there recorded; so that every one should receive his or her reward according to their works here on this earth.

We think the proof that is brought to view, in the above quotations, is sufficient for any person, who is willing to submit to the testimony of the word of God; and plainly shows us that there will be a day of judgment, when all the human family will stand before Jehovah's awful bar; and saint and sinner will hear their final sentence, the sinner to be finally destroyed, and the righteous to receive the reward of eternal life.

Here I would make a few remarks in relation to the trial of saint and sinner before the judgment seat of Christ. We read in the sacred book that our Savior declares, "My word shall judge you in the last day." But will there be a regular trial for each man and woman before the tribunal bar? or, in other words, a judicial court, to try every person separately? We think there will be no such trial; but we think that every man's sins will be made known, in such a manner that thousands, and perhaps tens of thousands, or millions, will know their final doom in a few moments; and, in fact, I do not believe there could be a judicial, or trial judgment; for in that case it would take more than ten thousand years to try the human family. But according to inspiration, we are very sure there will be an executive judgment; for the sacred word tells us, that the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, "to execute judgment upon all; and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches, which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Jude 15.

As to the punishment of the wicked, at the day of judgment, we think it will be dreadful indeed; but, from all we can learn from the sacred volume of divine truth, we are firmly convinced that the punishment of the wicked, at, or after the day of judgment, will not be endless torture; or, as some say, endless misery: but it will be "second death," just as inspiration informs us. Or, as St. Paul informs us, that "the wages of sin is death"; and the great reason why I believe it is death, which is an extinction of life, is because the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation, informs us that the instrument of punishment is "fire and brimstone;" and that, in all languages, is held forth as an element of destruction; and also by searching the sacred volume, we shall find the following words, which refer directly to the dreadful punishment of the wicked; viz: "destruction," "second death," "consume away," "be destroyed," "lose life," "perish," "burned up root and branch," "come to an end," "be as though they had not been," etc. But, in relation to a few crimes, which are brought to view by our Savior, who represents the sinner as making pleading excuses at the judgment seat of Christ, I would here remark, that there are many persons who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Savior, who are so hard-hearted and stingy that they will let their fellow beings suffer hunger, and suffer with the cold, and suffer them, even their brethren, to go naked, rather than to give a little money, or other things, to relieve their sufferings; but the dear Savior says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." I tell you, dear reader, you never can be a true christian unless you are free-hearted and kind-hearted to your brethren and sisters.

We will show in our next that all rewards and punishments are after the day of judgment. B. Freeman.

PULPIT INGENUITY.

A preacher in the neighborhood of Blackfriars, London, not undeservedly popular, had just finished an exhortation, strongly recommending the liberal support of a certain very meritorious institution. The congregation was numerous, and the chapel crowded to excess. The discourse being finished, the plate was about to be handed round to the respective pews, when the preacher made this short address to the congregation:—

"From the sympathy I have witnessed in your countenances, and the strict attention you have honored me with, there is only one thing I am afraid of; that some of you may feel inclined to give too much; now it is my duty to inform you, that justice, though not so pleasant, should always be a prior virtue to generosity; therefore, as you will all be immediately waited upon in your respective pews, I wish to have it thoroughly understood, that no person will think of putting anything into the plate, who cannot pay his debts." I need not add that this advice produced a most overflowing collection.

THE SHELTERING FOLD.

Children, now through a wilderness
All dark and drear we go,
And sin it was that brought us grief,
Sad pain, and death, and woe.
But our good Father hath prepared
For weary ones a rest,
And we may leave our sin and care,
And even here be blest.

CHORUS.—Then hasten to his fold, children,
Unto his sheltering fold;
In Jesus' arms, safe from alarms,
We'll rest within the fold.

O! the dim way in which we tread
With danger is replete,
Snares many, deftly hidden round,
And thorns for tender feet;
And enemies to God and man
Are prowling in the way.
Anger and self-will, bear and wolf,
The lambkins seek to slay.

Its night comes speeding on,
And dark the hour, dread the power,
Before the coming dawn!
And tempest clouds may gather fierce
Those tender heads above,
When more than earthly care you'll need,
And more than earthly love.

Yes, in the care of Him who when
On earth bade children come,
The weary little ones may rest
Till Christ prepares their home.
Then when our glorious Sun doth rise,
And bring us bright glad day,
We'll leave these desert walks and swift
To Zion take our way.

CHORUS.—And there by beauteous fields, children,
By lovely streams we'll roam,
For dangers flee when Jesus comes,
And takes us all safe home.

MAN'S FUTURE DESTINY.

BY J. P. BELT.

"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—GEN. 3: 19.

In discussing the subject of man's future destiny, the nature and extent of the threatened penalty is involved in the doctrine of the resurrection; and there is no point in the controversy on which so much stress is laid. And although the Bible is the standard by which the different premises are claimed to have been drawn, yet two views, the one directly opposed to the other, regarding the extent of the curse pronounced on Adam, have obtained among theologians.

The position is taken by some, that when the body returned to the ground, death, a negative of life, is the complete annihilation of all the wicked ones. That when Adam transgressed the divine commandment, his life was forfeited; and when death ensued the penalty was fully paid, and the law had no further claim; and unless his sin was forgiven, in consequence of the vicarious death of Christ, the glorious Mediator, he will not come again from the grave. The other position supposes that when the curse was pronounced, it embraced all the evils which in their nature terminate in death; that in the case of Adam, dying he did die, yet not in the sense of annihilation; and that this death came upon all his posterity, with the exception of Enoch and Elijah; that, although it is a negative of life, there will be a resurrection of the bodies "both of the just and of the unjust." This hypothesis is drawn from the premises that "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29.

It has been conceded by the advocates of the non-resurrection theory, that if the bodies of those that have returned to the ground were the subjects of Christ's prediction, his language is fatal to their position. Hence is seen and felt the necessity of ridding the text of a literal signification into a sense that obviates and does away the difficulty which otherwise interposes. But this requires a studied effort, and one has said that "it took him four years and a half to get over that text alone." And although it is agreed that the meaning must be determined by the principle, and not the mere language of the text itself, yet there is a diversity of opinion regarding the meaning designed to be understood, so far as the things which are claimed to be represented are concerned. By some it is contended that, by a mere figure of speech, the text represents the whole human family as being under condemnation to eternal death, in consequence of Adam's original sin. That none, but those who embraced the plan of redemption in the atoning blood of the Mediator, will be reprieved from the curse of the law that was imposed upon them. That "they who have done good" will come forth "unto the resurrection of life." That class will live again. But that those who have done evil will come forth "unto the resurrection of damnation." That is, they will not be made alive, although they come forth from the grave and appear in the judgment; for the wrath of God abideth on them.

Another class assume that the text was designed to represent the whole race of mankind in a lost condition, totally depraved in their nature, and spiritually dead in trespasses and sins. That the hour was coming, and now is, when those who are dead in sin will hear his voice, and they that hear and believe shall be spiritually made alive by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit. Consequently, in their view, the language has no reference to the bodies in the literal graves.

But the more general view is, that the whole subject of the chapter pertained to the nation of the Jews in their civil and religious polity. That they had refused to hear that prophet like unto Moses, whom the Lord their God had raised up to them; and for that reason, they were to be dispersed among the Gentile nations, and be destroyed nationally and ecclesiastically. That, by a figure of speech, the text represented that the time would come when they should hear his voice, and be restored to their own land in Palestine, where Christ would reign over them "a thousand years" on David's throne. This, in their view, they call "the age to come." And in that period it is contended that the prophecy of Ezek. 37 will be fulfilled to the whole house of Israel, including the return of the ten lost tribes.

It is no matter of surprise that one misled by such a strange theory should ask, Would it be just to raise Adam again to be punished for the same offence? Would it be just to disturb his slumber and pass on his case again repeating the same penalty? All such questions in that direction are the result of a wrong theory, inasmuch as the Bible no where intimates that either Adam, or any of his antecedents, are required to account for that first sin at the judgment seat of Christ. For that sin Adam was immediately arraigned before his God in the garden of Eden, and the curse was pronounced according to the penalty that had been threatened. Dying he did die, and all his posterity are under the same penalty. For "in Adam all die." Therefore, if Adam committed other sins after the curse had been pronounced, and afterwards died in a state of impenitence, he will be required to answer in in the day of final account for those sins, and not for the original sin which consigned him to the grave.

The account given by Moses is, "Now the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made." And through this cunning medium the "old serpent, which is the devil," proposed the temptation. In its original state, the common serpent probably lived on the delicious fruits of the garden, and walked erect like man. That this was its condition is indicated by the subsequent doom—"Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life." At all events, it was furnished with speech and rational faculties, as all the subsequent mediums have been; for "he said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" This faculty of speech was in the view of the woman miraculous, and she listened to its subtle wiles. He began the temptation by insinuating that the restriction was an interpolation, and that policy has generally been pursued when a positive declaration of Scripture stands in the way of some peculiar theory. But the woman's reply shows that she could not be induced to believe that it was not God who commanded them to refrain from eating of the restricted tree. "And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden; but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." The acute tempter saw that he had a difficult task before him, and he pressed the temptation in another direction. The woman could not be induced to believe that the prohibition was something added to the original matter, and he ingeniously perverted the words of caution into a sense that was calculated to excite her passions and lust, and then boldly said, "Ye shall not surely die. For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil." Then in order to prove his assertion, the serpent probably ate the fruit in her presence, thereby giving her to understand that, instead of producing death, it was this wonderful fruit which had elevated him from brutality to the rank of rational beings. It is also possible that he persuaded her not to be restrained in the laudable acquisition of knowledge, which was only attainable by eating this delicious fruit. And the idea was strongly urged that this wonderful fruit was calculated to enable her to choose the good and refuse the evil. It is evident that it was by some plausible argument and visible demonstration that she was influenced to try the fatal experiment; for it is said that "when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof and did eat; and gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat."

This is the particular account of the temptation and fall of man. It was by a plausible, yet false interpretation of the words of caution that the father of lies, and originator of perverted views of the Scriptures, beguiled the mother of us all; "and the woman being deceived was in the transgression." She was seduced by the sophistry of a talking medium, and was the instrument of her husband's ruin; for the curse was pronounced on him, because he "hearkened unto the voice of his wife." Lust had conceived in their hearts, and in heart they had apostatized. They did not heed the words of God, but on the first trial of their fidelity, they yielded to the sophistry of a subtle medium; and when their sin was finished, it brought forth death. Although the temptation was very plausible, the motive presented was only self-exaltation. The arch-deceiver knew that so long as they had access to the tree of life they would not die. And they had been commanded to "multiply and replenish the earth" by the ordinary laws of propagation, hence they were the more easily deceived.

Now whether we can particularly account for the introduction of sin and death into this world by the fall of man, is not of the greatest consequence. We know that by reason of the temptation man did apostatize, and we can only understand the consequence so far as God has seen fit to explain it. Our first parents were finite, moral beings, and the solemn warning indicated their liability of apostasy. If there had been no danger, why were they so strictly charged concerning the restricted tree of knowledge. Holiness and sin are equally the voluntary acts of moral agents; and the one is as possible as the other. In both cases the agent has the freedom of his own will; otherwise, Adam would have been incapable of either holiness or sin, and consequently unfitted for moral government. But it should be distinctly kept in view that when Adam sinned he violated the law of God, but not the divine decree and purpose. For the eternal covenant and plan of redemption by the death of the glorious Mediator was embraced in the decree; and the covenant compact clearly indicates that "God worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." He foresaw the end from the beginning, and this is the only way to account for every event whatever. That a change in the condition of man took place in consequence of the fall of man, is readily admitted by all. But how great the change, and the nature and extent of the curse, is a subject of much dispute among theologians. Some have supposed that all the posterity of Adam are guilty of his original sin; that, although they were not personally guilty of eating the forbidden fruit, yet there was a transfer to them of the guilt which he incurred. Therefore, they conclude that the whole race of mankind are under condemnation to eternal death for his personal act of disobedience in the garden of Eden. And this sandy foundation is the basis on which the theory of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead is mainly constructed. But the premises do not comport with the Scriptures, nor with reason and common sense. For the language of the Bible is, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father; neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son. The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him; and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him." This is also the language of reason and common sense. Personal acts and moral character are not transferable from one person to another. "For where no law is, there is no transgression." And sin is defined to be the voluntary transgression of the law; and until a person by the volition of his own will transgresses the law, sin and guilt cannot be imputed to him. Therefore the theory that the human family are under condemnation to eternal death for the original sin of Adam, in which they had no personal participation, is opposed to reason and common sense,—a contradiction of the Scriptures, an impossible conceit, a distorted image of human weakness attempting a philosophical deduction.

But the prohibition does indicate the important probation that our first parents were under while they were in the garden of Eden. Life and death were set before them in a manner calculated to enhance their dignity and happiness, if they fulfilled the condition of life. But if they did not fulfill the condition of life, dying they must die. And no word conveys an idea more terrible than death, whether it pertains to the body from the natural causes of mortality, or the destruction of both soul and body in the day of final retribution.

Adam's first state of probation was under the covenant of works, and the law knew no mercy; and for his first act of diobedience the curse of the law came upon him, as it is written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them." The language of the law is, "obey and live, disobey and die"; and its precepts and penalties cannot be abated. For not "one jot or one tittle shall . . . pass from the law till all be fulfilled." The threatened penalty expressed the just deserts of sin, and when our first parents transgressed the divine law, they were exposed to immediate death, under the abiding wrath of God. The only ground of reprieve was the revelation of mercy through the glorious Mediator, the woman's promised seed. And on this gospel ground they went forth from the garden, on probation for eternal life, being now under the covenant of redemption.

The curse that came upon Adam embraces all his posterity, and the whole race of mankind received hurt in the constitution of their bodies and moral state of the mind. Hence the same inability to satisfy the legal claim under the covenant of works, has passed upon every man. "Through the offence of one, many be dead." Had there been no plan of redemption in the divine purpose, death would have ensued the very day that Adam sinned, and the human race would have perished in his loins. Therefore every candid and reflecting mind must perceive that the plan of redemption is to be fully accomplished at the end of this mortal state. "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." The order and arrangement of the plan proves that the covenant of redemption was established before the beginning of creation. And if all that pertains to the great work of redemption by Jesus Christ be exhibited, we have an exhibition of the whole gospel of divine grace.

According to the covenant compact, it belonged to Christ to assume our nature, and suffer in the sinner's stead, that the law might be vindicated, and made honorable; hence he is eminently "the Redeemer." And as his humiliation and death places him in the position of judge of "the quick and the dead," the final destiny of the race, for whom he died, will not be awarded until he comes the second time. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son." And since the Son "came not to judge the world" at his first advent, none have yet been judged and rewarded. Hence Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all."

"DOES THE SOUL LIVE IN DEATH?"

NUMBER TWO.

In our last we noticed Matthew 10: 28,—"Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul."

The next argument used to prove that the "soul lives in death," is taken from the Messiah's words in John 12: 23–26. Jesus said, "The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal."

The argument from the above passage is stated thus: "The life of the corn leaves the body in death, and the body is dead; but the life is more alive than before; that is, it is more active. If the life dies, the corn of wheat never produces fruit. The soul lives, then, when the body dies."

What relation has this argument to the words of Christ? Plainly, none. He speaks in reference to his own death and resurrection,

"Our Lord compares himself to a grain of wheat; his death to a grain sown, and decomposed in the ground; his resurrection to the blade which springs up from the dead grain; which grain thus dying brings forth abundance of fruit. I must die to be glorified; and unless I am glorified I cannot establish a glorious church of Jews and Gentiles upon the earth." (Clarke.)

Paul, using this illustration in reference to man (1 Cor. 15: 36–44), says, "That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body which shall be, but bare grain; it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain; but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed its own body. So, also, is the resurrection of the dead: it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul [or person], the last Adam was made a quickening [or life-giving] spirit. The first man was of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy [or mortal], such are they, also, that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they, also, that are heavenly [or immortal]. As we have borne the image of the earthy [or mortal], we shall, also, bear the image of the heavenly [or immortal]."

In all this argument, thus far, man is not once spoken of as a compound being; but simply as man; as mortal man, whose only hope in death is the resurrection, by the Life-giver, the Lord from heaven. He does not speak of the germ of the grain as being in one place, and the body in another, as separated; but the illustration by the inspired apostle, when applied to man in death, is that whatever is raised was dead; "sleeping in Jesus;" the "life hid with Christ in God." He does not speak of the spirit of man coming at the moment of the resurrection to be united to the body from which it has been long separated: this idea is not even hinted at. Paul gives no place to this doctrine. Hear him: "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I show you a mystery: We shall not all sleep [die], but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; (for the trumpet shall sound;) and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Now, since neither Christ nor Paul speak of "the life of the corn leaving the body in death, and the body dead; and the life more alive than before; that is, it is more active" between death and the resurrection, than when living in the flesh: we conclude that it was no part of the doctrine of Christ, or of Paul. For, surely, if this were the true doctrine, the Master and Head of the Church would have spoken plainly upon it; and Paul, the "wise master-builder" in the Apostolic Church, would have at least hinted at it, in his great argument with the Corinthian fool, who denied the resurrection. 1 Cor. 15: 36.

Another argument for the existence and life of the soul in death, is founded on the fact that "man is called a soul because he has a soul, as a vessel is called a sail, because it has a sail. Hence the term, when expressive of the person, is used as a synecdoche, not literally. 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.' Here it means the person, not the life element. Adopt this principle and all is plain."

Let us look at this. "The first man, Adam, was made a living soul." God said to him, in the day of his transgression, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This convicted and doomed sinner is declared to be a living soul, having the "life element," and yet he is doomed to death, and to return to the dust from whence he was taken. Thus, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The "person," the "life-element," dies and goes to the dust.

But "The man is called a soul because he has a soul, as a vessel is called a sail, because it has a sail." The man, What is the man that has the soul? God says when he created man and breathed into him the breath of life, man became a living soul. The author of this tract defines man as composed of three elements: body, soul and spirit. Now if this man has a soul, does it mean that the two elements which help make up the perfect man, possess the third, and call it his soul? and in a change of circumstances, do the body and soul say my spirit? and still in another view, do the soul and spirit say my body? Which of these is the man? Is there more than one man? When one speaks of his soul, or his spirit, of his mind, or heart, does he mean to speak of more than one being, under different forms of expression? When one says, my soul, me, I, does he not simply mean himself, as a simple living soul, or person?

It is said if we will adopt the principle that soul, when applied to persons, is figurative, and refers only to the body, and not to the life element, then all would be plain. But would this, if it were true, be honest? Does God make this distinction? When he said to Adam, the living soul, "Thou shalt surely die," he told him what he meant by death: it was to return unto the ground: "for out of it thou wast taken: dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Ged. 3: 19.) Did not God give the whole truth on this matter?

Here, then, we have man's destiny in death from the mouth of Jehovah. He not only says man shall die, but tells us what that death is: it is going back to dust. And he does not tell us of any part of man that survives the death. He does not speak of a life element in dead men; or of a soul going to the New Jerusalem. But if these things had been true, would God have omitted them when speaking to his fallen creatures? Assuredly not.

In this connection it may be remarked that the Scriptures speak of God having a soul no less than fourteen times. We give one example: "Your new moons and appointed feasts my soul hateth." (Is. 1: 14.) Does our brother believe that God has a soul in the popular sense of that word? or that he meant to say, simply, that HE hated the hypocritical worship of the Jews at that time?—Voice of the West.

WHO SHALL BE SAVED?

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord and righteousness from the God of his salvation."

David has here asked a question that should cause every one to pause in their course and listen to the answer, especially those who profess to be in the way that leadeth to Mount Zion, even unto his holy hill. It would seem that David had made the inquiry for the especial benefit of the church, and it becomes us, who profess to be one of that body, to ponder it. The promise is to him that hath clean hands and a pure heart. You here see that the axe is laid at the root of the tree, even to the heart, for the heart is the great source of all our action, and if that be pure, so will our lives be.

Christ pronounced blessings on the pure in heart, and says "they shall see God." A sweet fountain cannot send forth bitter water, neither will a pure heart, one that is sanctified to God, send forth the bitter fruits of hate, strife and malice. We are created with a heart which is represented as a heart of stone, but by the divine influence operating upon it in answer to prayer, we may have it changed to one of flesh, or a pure heart, and then by a faithful continuance in well doing may receive a foretaste of the blessings from on high and the fruition in the kingdom of his Son.

To help us to find if we are in possession of this pure heart, let us consider some of the fruits of an impure one, and if we find we are in possession of a pure heart, we have lost nothing by the few hours' reflection; but if, on the other hand, we find ourselves wanting, it is better to find it out now than to go on deceiving ourselves and hear it said, "Depart, I never knew you." Now the heart that is at enmity with God must be on pretty good terms with Satan, and of course always willing to do his bidding; and you will find it ever on the alert to do some mischief. It has such an experienced leader, and is such an adept in counterfeiting, that it is sometimes almost impossible to tell it from a pure heart. But though man may sometimes be deceived, God never; for man looketh upon the outward appearance, but God upon the heart, and he knoweth them that are his.

Some of the works of an impure heart, when under the christian guise, are these:—Going about reporting all manner of evil; stirring up discord among brethren; wounding where they should heal; ingratiating themselves into people's favor only to find out what they can to use to their disadvantage; when one brother or sister has a little difficulty they must know all about it, not with a view to act as peacemaker, but to tell, and make it much worse. Of course they know the private history of each member, and many are the dark sayings lisped into the ears of one brother to the detriment of another, and thus the peace of an entire church is destroyed by these impure hearts. They will always end with a pious hope that the erring one may see his faults, and make long prayers for the prosperity of Zion and love of the brethren, when every act is destined to distract and destroy. You see them seeking honor from man, always wishing to be first, and every thing that is not done by their direction is not done right; they are quick to pay homage to the rich, and slow to see the needs of the poor.

These are some of the fruits we see arising from an impure heart. Now let us consider some of the fruits of a pure one. Are any in sorrow, they are ready with sympathy. In distress, with help. In a strange land, they are as a brother or a sister. When cast down, they are ever ready with their prayers. Is there trouble among brethren, they go but to make peace. Patient in trials, firm of faith, strong in hope, long-suffering in adversity, abounding in charity, and with the whole christian armor on, are ever ready to do the will of the Lord, whether they gain the applause or condemnation of man. Trusting in God, he does his will here, and when he comes down to the stream of death, and the dark waters begin to embrace him, he can quietly yield himself, saying, as did Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of life."

When we see the eager manner with which the world is striving after earthly gain, gold, silver, honor, a great name, also the most trifling things, many whose greatest trouble is to know how to take a new step in some dance, the latest fashion, or the result of the coming election, we cannot forget that their honors will turn to shame, that earthly pleasure, when the cup is drained, leaves naught but bitterness, and that he that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver, nor he that loveth increase with increase, and that this is also vanity. We sometimes ask ourselves, where is the meek christian who wears the world only as a loose garment, to be thrown off at the first call of the Master, whose first question in the morning is, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do, and whose evening praise goes up like a sweet smelling savor?

In this dark night of sin, when mammon is worshiped by a wicked world, who quiet their conscience by the cry of peace, and are solacing themselves with the belief that to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant, the meek follower of Christ, with staff in hand, is wending his way towards his Father's home. The chilling winds of oppression blow fiercely against him. Torrents of persecution almost bear him to the earth. Thick clouds of darkness envelope him, almost hiding from him that bright "Star" by which he directs his course. He is buffeted, derided, scoffed at, and it seems as if the powers of Satan were combined against him; and, worst of all, the lovely face of his Savior seems hidden from his view. In agony he cries, Lord, hide not thou thyself from me. Lord, save, or I perish! He remembers the promise, that though all the world forsake thee, yet will not I forsake thee. Faith takes firm hold of the promise, and soon the clouds begin to move away. The glimmering of Bethlehem's Star is seen. Soon it comes out and shines with a clear and steady brilliancy. The bow of promise is again given in the heavens, to show him God still is, and is faithful.

With a shout of praise he goes on his way, full of hope in God; for even if around him are storms, lightning and thundering, and all is wrapt in despair, far, far above it all shines that lone star to guide him to his home, a land where he shall receive the blessings from the Lord, in the kingdom of Christ, bask in the smiles of Jesus, sing with the holy throng, feast with angels, shout victory, victory, over all trials, dwell in love with faithful Father Abraham and his children of faith, and wake the golden harp in one loud song of praise, while cherubim and seraphim shall echo the refrain, and that sweet singer of Israel will again sing forth his psalms, and all the mighty host unite in a song to God, and to him that sitteth upon the throne, and so shall they ever be with the Lord. A SERMON.

This text seems to express the final result of that great day of judgment, to which we are all hastening; therefore, it is of the greatest importance that we fully understand what is to take place when that awful day arrives. We will consider,

1st. The proof of a day of final judgment. I presume, at this present period of the world's existence, I shall find but very few who will deny the truth of the Bible, which speaks so plainly of that solemn event; which, must take place at the closing up of all things in this world's history, and just before a new order of things begins. Now, dear reader, we will refer you to a few passages of Holy Writ, which portray in glowing colors the majestic scenes of that awful day.

We will first refer the reader to the book of Daniel, 7: 10, where it is said,—"Thousand thousands ministered unto them, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Here the prophet saw, as he relates in the next verse, the overthrow of the cruel horn power, which had done so much mischief in this world. The prophet also had a view of the setting up, and establishing for ever, of that glorious kingdom of the Son of God, when "He who is our life shall appear," and reign over his saints for ever. We also read in Psalms 9: 8, "He shall judge the world in righteousness"; also, Psalms 96: 13, "For he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth"; and in Psalms 98: 9, "with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity." We also read in Acts 17: 31, "Because he hath appointed a day in the which, he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained." St. Paul also tells us, in Rom. 2: 16, of a day when "God shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel." The same apostle tells us, in Rom. 14: 10, "that we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ"; and in Heb. 9: 27, "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment." The apostle Jude also brings to view the dreadful scenes of the judgment, in verse 15th; and also the dreadful doom of the wicked at that time. St. Paul to Timothy (2 Tim. 4: 1), refers to the same time, where he charges him before the Lord Jesus Christ, "who shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing and his kingdom." Our dear Savior refers to the great judgment scene (Matt. 16: 27), where he speaks of his coming "in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."

We also have the scenes of the judgment day portrayed in awful grandeur, in Rev. 20: 12, where the Revelator informs us that he "saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened," and judgment was rendered according to what was there recorded; so that every one should receive his or her reward according to their works here on this earth.

We think the proof that is brought to view, in the above quotations, is sufficient for any person, who is willing to submit to the testimony of the word of God; and plainly shows us that there will be a day of judgment, when all the human family will stand before Jehovah's awful bar; and saint and sinner will hear their final sentence, the sinner to be finally destroyed, and the righteous to receive the reward of eternal life.

Here I would make a few remarks in relation to the trial of saint and sinner before the judgment seat of Christ. We read in the sacred book that our Savior declares, "My word shall judge you in the last day." But will there be a regular trial for each man and woman before the tribunal bar? or, in other words, a judicial court, to try every person separately? We think there will be no such trial; but we think that every man's sins will be made known, in such a manner that thousands, and perhaps tens of thousands, or millions, will know their final doom in a few moments; and, in fact, I do not believe there could be a judicial, or trial judgment; for in that case it would take more than ten thousand years to try the human family. But according to inspiration, we are very sure there will be an executive judgment; for the sacred word tells us, that the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, "to execute judgment upon all; and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches, which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Jude 15.

As to the punishment of the wicked, at the day of judgment, we think it will be dreadful indeed; but, from all we can learn from the sacred volume of divine truth, we are firmly convinced that the punishment of the wicked, at, or after the day of judgment, will not be endless torture; or, as some say, endless misery: but it will be "second death," just as inspiration informs us. Or, as St. Paul informs us, that "the wages of sin is death"; and the great reason why I believe it is death, which is an extinction of life, is because the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation, informs us that the instrument of punishment is "fire and brimstone;" and that, in all languages, is held forth as an element of destruction; and also by searching the sacred volume, we shall find the following words, which refer directly to the dreadful punishment of the wicked; viz: "destruction," "second death," "consume away," "be destroyed," "lose life," "perish," "burned up root and branch," "come to an end," "be as though they had not been," etc. But, in relation to a few crimes, which are brought to view by our Savior, who represents the sinner as making pleading excuses at the judgment seat of Christ, I would here remark, that there are many persons who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Savior, who are so hard-hearted and stingy that they will let their fellow beings suffer hunger, and suffer with the cold, and suffer them, even their brethren, to go naked, rather than to give a little money, or other things, to relieve their sufferings; but the dear Savior says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." I tell you, dear reader, you never can be a true christian unless you are free-hearted and kind-hearted to your brethren and sisters.

We will show in our next that all rewards and punishments are after the day of judgment. B. FRIEMAN.

PULPIT INGENUITY.

A preacher in the neighborhood of Blackfriars, London, not undeservedly popular, had just finished an exhortation, strongly recommending the liberal support of a certain very meritorious institution. The congregation was numerous, and the chapel crowded to excess. The discourse being finished, the plate was about to be handed round to the respective pews, when the preacher made this short address to the congregation:—

"From the sympathy I have witnessed in your countenances, and the strict attention you have honored me with, there is only one thing I am afraid of; that some of you may feel inclined to give too much; now it is my duty to inform you, that justice, though not so pleasant, should always be a prior virtue to generosity; therefore, as you will all be immediately waited upon in your respective pews, I wish to have it thoroughly understood, that no person will think of putting anything into the plate, who cannot pay his debts." I need not add that this advice, produced a most overflowing collection.

☞ Thomas Jefferson said that "nothing gave him so much trouble in his administration as incompetent drinking;" and required strict temperance habits as an essential prerequisite for appointments to office. Let total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks be your motto.

Both valued at $5.50.

2nd Prize.—For the next largest number,—a very beautiful copy of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress from this world to that which is to come; bound in morroco, gilt, and containing some dozen or more fine engravings. A precious gift, and one which always has a peculiar charm to young and old. Valued at $2.50.

Instead of the above, any other books of equal value will be given, if desired.

Also, a set of beautiful and elegantly colored Picture Cards will be given to those who obtain the fourth and fifth largest numbers over twenty, and the sixth, seventh, and so on; so that all will have a chance for a prize.

Come, young friends and old, take hold of the work now, and in earnest, and see how many subscribers you can get, and who will get the most, before the 1st of April.

Address Young Pilgrim, Boston, Mass.

Take Notice.

In forming clubs, and sending names and monies for the paper, the coming year, please state distinctly, in all cases, how many and which are "new" subscribers, and how many and which are "renewals" from those who now take it. In working for the prizes, "renewals" are not to be counted,—only the "new" subscribers.

CLUBS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

The new year is drawing on, and many subscriptions expire with the December numbers.

It is a good time now to renew subscriptions, and form new clubs for the coming year. Sunday Schools and neighborhoods, by taking the paper in clubs, all addressed to one name, will save, in clubs of 50 or more, 36 cents a year on each copy; in clubs of 10 or more, 31 cents on each copy; and, in smaller clubs (of less than ten), from 13 to 21 cents on each copy.

DIRECTIONS TO CLUB-MAKERS.

For Clubs of 50 or more.—Collect from each subscriber 38 cents; send us 35, and with the balance pay the postage.

For Clubs of 10 or more.—Collect from each subscriber 43 cents; send us 40, and take the balance to pay the postage.

For smaller Clubs.—If a club of eight or nine, collect from each 53 cents; six or seven, 54 cents; four or five, 56 cents; three, 58 cents; two, 62 cents. Send us 50 cents for each subscriber, and with the balance pay the postage.

In all cases, be careful to give plainly and distinctly, the name, post-office, county and state of the person to whom the package is to be addressed. Where the town is called by one name and the post-office by another, be sure and give the name of the post-office.

For the World's Crisis.

NEWS FROM CANADA WEST.

Bro. Grant:—I send for the Crisis a brief account of a visit to Canada West, believing brethren will like to hear that truth is spreading there.

In Howick, Huron County, about one hundred and fifty miles from Buffalo, four brethren, one a deacon, were expelled from a Baptist church for believing in the destruction of the wicked. Deacon Andrew Sims, of another Baptist church, and holding our views, moved there, and having before began to preach some, he commenced preaching among these brethren. The Lord blessed his labors, and several were converted and wished to be baptized. There being no Advent preacher in Canada West, whom they knew, that they wished to have baptize them, they held a meeting, and voted to write for me to come and baptize, and form a church. I knew and had visited Bro. Sims five years ago. So the first of October I went and spent three Sabbaths with them; I baptized six, two men and their wives, and two young men. The same day we formed a church of ten members, chosing Bro. Fajrly Milne deacon, and J. S. Milne clerk. The church then voted to have Bro. Sims ordained as pastor, and wished me to perform the ceremony. There being no preacher who would fellowship with Bro. Sims, or the church, within a hundred miles, and having known Bro. Sims' views for years, and the church also being satisfied with his doctrine, character and abilities, I felt it my duty, under the circumstances, to take the responsibility, with the church, of setting him apart to the work of the ministry, by prayer and laying on of hands, by myself and the deacon.

The Lord has set his seal of approbation upon the preaching of Bro. Sims, by opening the hearts of a number to attend to the word spoken by him, as he did the heart of Lydia, when Paul preached the same word. Some are yet seriously impressed, and may the Lord give him many more souls as seals of his ministry.

Some of other denominations are seeking for truth, although, as everywhere, opposition is manifested. A large number turned out to hear each Sabbath I was there, and a good number of books and tracts were sold and given. Brethren were liberal, not only in paying the expense of traveling three hundred miles, but also in providing for my wants when at home. Four signed for the Crisis, and as they are well-to-live farmers, they purpose building a house of worship.

Thus God is overruling to his glory, the blindness of some for expelling members for growing in knowledge, while sinners are converted, his people are comforted, especially those who preferred believing the Bible instead of creeds. It was a joyful visit to me, although the labor was hard; and a happier people I have not seen for many years. Those I baptized truly went on their way rejoicing; giving good evidence that the love of God had been shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Spirit, and that they were not alone moved to act by a cold, speculative belief of the head, but by the "one faith,—a faith in Christ's death, resurrection and atoning blood; a faith of the gospel, which works by love and purifies the heart."—Gal. 5: 6. Thanks be to our God that his work of mercy in saving lost sinners is not yet ended; and that here and there he is giving us evidence that he can and will bless where destruction is preached as the final penalty of the law.

I am purpose to be at home during the winter, and I shall be happy to hear from brethren who may want books, or wish to pay up accounts. J. Blair.

The year 1866, when looked at prospectively, promises some very important events, which will give light to the students of prophecy. We find there is quite a general expectation that it will not pass without some important changes in the affairs of this world. Some able and devoted Bible students, who have carefully watched the signs of the times, and from an examination of the prophetic periods of Daniel and John, are quite strong in the belief that the saints will be taken from the world next year; others fix on 1867, others 1868, some 1869, 1870, 1874, 1875; but nearly all Bible students and chronologers tell us we are very near the end of the present dispensation. We think there has never been a more general expectation among all churches that the Lord is soon coming, than at the present time; unless it was in 1843–44. It is very evident that the interest is increasing, and entering deeper into the hearts of those who have paid any attention to this all-important subject. The great question for every one to settle is, am I ready? The warnings have been abundant, so that none will have any excuse, if found at last without a wedding garment on when the Bridegroom appears.

It will be recollected that sometime since we published an old prophecy written by Hezekiah Wylly's, of Hartford, Ct., in July 14th, 1766, stating that "in 1866, America's fate is fixed."

Next year the Methodists intend to "have a grand Jubilee" in Oct., to celebrate the "Centenary of Methodism." It will be one hundred years next Oct. since "the first permanent Methodist Society was formed by Philip Embury, in the city of New York."

Next year Napoleon is to take his troops away from Rome, which must cause some important changes, we think, in the history of the "little horn" power, seated on the "seven hills."

There is another very significant event to transpire next year, which is the great gathgathering of Catholics at Rome, to celebrate the eighteen hundredth anniversary of the martyrdom of St. Peter," which is said to have taken place at Rome in A. D. 66. We learn that "the Catholic bishops of the whole world will be invited" to meet there next year; and besides all the priests and lay members are invited. It is expected to be the largest gathering of the Catholics at Rome ever known. It will be recollected that Belshazzar, the last king of ancient Babylon, had a great gathering and a feast in his palace the night that the hand was seen writing on the wall, MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN, which Daniel interpreted as follows:—"MENE, God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it. TEKEL, thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting. Peres, thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians. . . . In that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom."—Dan. 5: 25–31.

The Pope confesses that his end is near. It may be nearer than his expectations indicate. We say that it is a significant fact that there is to be such a great gathering at Rome next year. We shall wait for these coming events with great interest. The coming gathering and feast at the seat of mystic Babylon, next year, may result no better than the one in the days of Belshazzar. Indeed, it looks like the corresponding event.

All signs indicate that the glorious morning of the resurrection is very near at hand. Let us all be ready when the glad hour arrives, that we may welcome Jesus and all the loved ones now sleeping in death, who will then be raised to die no more.

We are too near home to look back with longing eyes after the things of this world. "Remember Lot's wife."

ORNAMENTS.

There has been no time during the existence of this generation, when so many and so costly ornaments were worn as at the present time. In this respect, one might think the people were returning back to the habits of the heathen nations; and that the tastes of children were gratified, instead of the noble manhood and womanhood that should characterize civilized and christian nations. The disposition to make a show in the world seems to have become almost universal; as well among the majority of church members, as those who make no profession of religion. This is a sure sign that the church is becoming conformed to the world, and floating away from the true standard of christianity. But few have courage to come out from the world, and be separate. They do more than Lot's wife,—look back; they go back to the world, and then claim the world has advanced to a higher position. The returning current is so strong, that but few young people who profess religion, have courage to stand against such an overwhelming influence, and dare to be singular, if they lose every earthly friend. We find here and there a few who see and feel the importance of doing all to the glory of the Lord who live, as though they believed their actions were known to their Creator, and that Christianity required more from those who profess it than most believe. [illegible] are some who think, when the Scripture says "that women" should "adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array," that this requirement should be observed as carefully as any other, if they would please the Lord, and hear him say at last, "well done." Would that more felt the force of this Scripture, and other kindred passages. We have come to an age when men and women trample under their feet the laws of God and man which they do not like, provided it is only fashionable to do so. Fashion rules the conduct of a large portion of society, not only of the world, but the church! Instead of being "separate," as commanded, she follows after the fashions, with Satan for a leader, in the person of some of the lewd women of Paris.

'Tis true there are some noble exceptions, in all evangelical denominations, who shine like diamonds among the dirt. We have recently met several young ladies in different places, who have sacrificed their jewelry, and adorned themselves in "modest apparel," and with "a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." If others only knew how much better they would feel in their minds, we think they would be willing to make the sacrifice. They would not only feel better, but certain'y look better. Beauty needs no ornaments; and deformity only attracts more attention when ornamented, because there is no similarity, or fitness between the two. Pure gold needs no galvanizing to make it valuable, or to cause it to shine; so pure religion needs no ornaments to make it lovely and beautiful. Ornaments on a christian are as unbecoming as rum blossoms on the nose, or as grease spots on fine linen. We hope those who profess to believe in the coming of Christ will lay them aside for ever. Make the sacrifice at once, and give the results to the poor, and you will feel richer.

HIGH PRICES.

It was thought that when the war closed, the high prices of provision, clothing, and other things, would most certainly be taken off; but instead of the prices being lower, they are higher than ever, with few exceptions; and there appears no prospect of any improvement in favor of the consumer.

The following comparative scale of prices for the month of October, in the last four years, including the present, as taken from one of our inland cites, will show how the case stands:—

Beef per lb.	$ .14	13½	9	6½
Butter "	45	45	22	18
Chickens per lb.	.30	20	14	12
Eggs per doz.	.32	30	18	14
Potatoes per bush.	.85	65	50	35
Pork per barrel	46.00	44.00	17.00	14.50
Lard per lb.	.30	23	13	11½
Flour per bbl.	17.00	13.00	10.00	8.50

It is difficult to tell the reasons why the high prices continue, when gold has fallen nearly one half from where it was when the prices of provision were not as high as they are now. It is very evident that traders are not as willing to fall in their prices, when the case demands it, as they are to rise. The fall in the price of goods is seldom accomplished only by competition; and it appears quite evident that the combinations and associations of the various classes of traders and producers are united to keep up the price of goods so long as the people will consent to purchase and pay such exorbitant amounts for them.

Among the poor there must be of necessity much suffering during the coming winter, unless there is a change in their favor from some source. With coal at $16 and $17 a ton, and flour at the same price, the prospective cannot look very flattering to the poor. Such are the fruits of covetousness.

THE CONDITION THE POPE.

The condition of the Pope of Rome is becoming very critical, and all the world can see it. His own people feel it; but vainly hope there may be some timely aid brought for his relief. As he has truly said, "mene mene tekel upharsin is already written" for him; and we think the decision cannot be changed. A train of events are at work, that must soon end for ever the temporal power the "little horn" of Daniel's prophecy. His "dominion" was to be taken away just before the end of the present dispensation.

The following from a late Philadelphia Inquirer, gives us some idea of the sad "condition of the Pope." We apprehend it will be no better before the coming of Christ:—

"According to the tenor of European advices it is manifest that the tenure of Pius IX in Rome is becoming doubtful. The French Government notified the Holy Father months ago that it was determined to withdraw the troops and evacuate the Eternal City. Time was given to the Pontiff either to make his peace with Victor Emanuel, or perfect arrangements for shelter elsewhere. The King of Italy would be glad if the Pope would remain as a dispenser of religious but not of temporal power. Rome could, under such auspices, still be the capital of the Catholic Church, and whilst the Pope might lose a few temporalties incident to his jurisdiction as a Prince, he would be nearly recompensed by the cessation of those troubles which are concurrent with the exercise of worldly power. As a Patriarch in Rome, the head of a great sect, the Pope would receive the veneration of all who entertain the belief of his church, and his influence would be greater, as it would be divested of all connection with temporal interests. But it is extremely difficult for Pius to accommodate himself to circumstances. 'The logic of events,' which in this country is held to be unanswerable, has no influence upon his determinations. He wishes to stay in Rome despite the inclinations of Victor Emanuel, he can remain there by entering into a proper convention. This he will not do. France tells him that it is time that the problem which has been unsettled since the Revolution of 1848 shall be solved. He must really come to some conclusion in reference to his movements. The French troops, he is told, are soon to be withdrawn, and unless he has a new place of [illegible] "Pontifical Government." Doubtless, if possible; but as yet it has been impossible to make any arrangement with the Papal authorities. The Pope and Cardinals act as if they believed that Louis Napoleon dare not withdraw his soldiers from Rome. To his requests that arrangements should be made to facilitate that movement they pay no attention. There must certainly be an end to this, and the time may not be distant when the difficulty will be suddenly, perhaps very unsatisfactorily, solved."

Truly these are times of thrilling interest to the Bride of the Lamb. Now is the time for her to prepare for the marriage, and see that she is "ready" to be presented without "spot and wrinkle, or any such thing." Let every one go through with a most thorough heart examination, and see if all is right in the sight of the Lord. Let us be sure in this matter. Our all is at stake.

SWELLING WORDS.

Paul said, "In the last days" men would be "boasters," and "fierce." This prophecy is having a most literal accomplishment, we think, at the present time, and this state of things will, doubtless, increase rapidly till the end of the present dispensation.

The Fenians have recently held a large meeting at Music Hall, Boston, which was addressed by George Francis Train. During his remarks, as reported in the Boston Journal, he said:—

"Three years ago I was knocked down in Faneuil Hall; but I am not afraid of being knocked down to-night, for I now have my own boys with me. Boston knocked me down three years ago and I have now come back to pay her off." The greater part of the remainder of the evening until half-past nine o'clock was spent by Mr. Train in the bitterest and most intemperate attacks on the character of the citizens of Boston and its institutions. Several resolutions were offered by him which were adopted by the meeting with hardly a dissenting voice. The following are specimens of the whole: 'Resolved—That we will never again wear a single article of English manufacture;' 'Resolved—That we are in favor of the Southern States coming into the Union;' 'Resolved—That we indorse Andrew Johnson's policy, and if it is interfered with, then the Irish of this country—four millions of Catholics—will go to the polls next fall and elect Irishmen to Congress;' 'Resolved—That the shutting out of the South from Congress will meet the disapprobation of the Irish-American voters.' These and many other resolutions of a similar description were offered and received by the audience with cheers."

FENIAN CONGRESS.

The Fenians have established a Congress of their own in this country, which shows most clearly that they are not acting in harmony with the government of the United States. This is a very singular movement, and we almost wonder that the American government is so indifferent about the matter. Catholicism is the same in its spirit now as it has ever been. It keeps quiet yet, out of policy; but give it the power, and Protestants would be put down at once, without mercy. The Catholics have no sympathy with any thing that does not advance their interests as a religious body.

It is claimed that the object of the Fenian movement is to liberate Ireland from English control. This, no doubt, is one object; but is that all? What need of a Congress in the United States, if Ireland only is the object under consideration. Why so secret in their operations? Time will develop what is now hidden.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE UNCONVERTED.

Dear friends, who see, and perhaps read, the World's Crisis, let me address you. You have some idea, from what you have read and heard from your friends who are looking for the coming of the Savior, that the end of this age is near. Let me tell you it is really so, yes, much nearer than you are aware of. The signs of the times, the moral and religious condition of the world, prove that is really so. Let me entreat you not to be deceived on this all-absorbing subject. You no doubt hear many professing christians saying, "The world is getting better," "The world will soon be converted." I beg of you, listen not for a moment to such unscriptural expressions, for if you do you will be inclined to believe them and deceive yourselves. Oh! be not deceived on this subject, I beseech you. Remember, God has given his word to instruct you. Read that, I pray you. Obey him who died for you. He says, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life."—John 5: 39. "The holy Scriptures are able to make you wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—2. Tim. 3: 15. The sayings and teachings of ministers, and others, are true, just as they agree with the Bible, and no further. "If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8: 20. And again, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?"—Isa. 2: 22. Let me entreat you to bring every thing you hear on this solemn subject to the test of the Scriptures. I must not be tedious. I must close this exhortation. But I beg of you hear me. The friends of Jesus, among whom you live and with whom you associate, will soon be with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God. Luke 13: 28. And you, if you continue to reject the Savior, will be thrust out." "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." Will you be among those? Are you willing to be considered mere chaff? Will you not rather strive to be among your friends in the kingdom? Some of you have parents sleeping in Jesus; others have children, brothers and sisters, husbands and wives. You may remember their dying words, you may have promised to meet them in "that day." God help you to wake up. Commence to-day to seek the Lord.

Who will Help?

A Sister writes from New Hampshire:—

"I want to say a word about the paper which is sent to Sister H. Nearly three years ago she moved from this city to U——, where she was miles from all of 'like precious faith.' She needed the Crisis, but could not pay for it; so I have paid for it myself up to this volume. Now my own means have failed, but I have been hoping a way would be opened for me to earn the money before the volume was out. As yet, I see no way to do it, and I want to ask if you can send her this volume free. If I can get the means, I will send pay for it after that. Expecting we shall soon be where the Crisis will not be needed, I am yours in hope, Harriet."

A Bro. writes from Connecticut:—

"I take my pen to say what duty demanded long ago, that I must give up the Crisis or become a free subscriber. I do not like to do either, but sickness has brought me to it. I have been sick for the last two years."

From a Brother in Ohio.

Messrs. Grant, Adams, and Herron:—Dear Brethren,—I send inclosed a draft for $105.00, which I wish used in the following manner: $10.00 to the Tract Fund; $10.00 to the Poor Fund; $10.00 for Sr. Anna E. Smith, New York, to be used by her according to discretion in her department of labor; $70.00 to the Freedmen's Mission Fund; and the balance for Crisis and books.

Dear brethren, I am a stranger to you all, only as I have read of you. I am here in this place a lone witness to the truths that you are particularly engaged in promulgating. I have no one to associate with that believes with me, and is expecting with me that the kingdom of heaven is at hand, or rather, that the King is at hand.

I have for some time been wishing for a complete consecration to God, and for that I know I must try and obey the commands of Christ. I want to be of the little flock that is to receive the kingdom. Christ's directions are to "sell that ye have, and give alms." I am poor; but I had an article of property to sell which ought to have sold for about $125; but, not finding a purchaser, I left it with another to sell, and told him not to refuse $100 for it. He sold the property for a note of $115, bearing interest payable in one year, and told me that I might take the note, or, if I chose, he would keep it and give me $100. Well, I was disposed to put the whole into the treasury of the Lord. If I waited a year, there would be much more of it than now; but it would be trusting the Lord's money in the hands of man, where it would be, at least, possible that I might not get it at all; and the thought that it was now greatly needed, and, if now properly used, would be safe,—a treasure in heaven, where no thief approacheth, or moth corrupteth,—I took the money. Take it, brethren, and use it for the glory of God. [illegible] I design for my brother, who has been a missionary to the Sandwich Islands the past thirty-two years, under the American Board. He will be at —— at Thanksgiving, with our mother and brother, and I wish, if possible, that the book may be there before that time. The five dollars worth of tracts for free circulation I would like very much, and as soon as possible.

Brethren, may God bless you all, especially Brn. Himes and Flagg in their mission south.

For the World's Crisis.

OUR EUROPEAN MISSION.

This mission is being prosecuted by Elder M. B. Czechowski. No missionary society has as yet taken him under its sheltering wing. Assisted at the first by individual aid, he is still thus sustained. A good many hundred dollars have gone over the ocean from America to help him in his work. And still he needs and asks for more funds. Shall he have them? Many have given freely who do not know him—given "as unto the Lord." All may know him better who will take the pains to buy and read his "Thrilling Narrative," or history of his life. Personally, I have known him for over nine years. I am not insensible to his faults, nor blind to his virtues. At first, he allied himself to the Seventh-Day Adventists, and proclaimed their views. Then they threw him off from being one of their accredited ministers, not from any fault in his christian character, but because he, preferring an enlarged sphere of action, and greater catholicity of spirit, failed to fully abide by their views and rules. Then he chose the major body of Adventists for his associates. Educated a Romish priest, hence totally unused to labor or to the earning of a penny in any other manner save by his profession, his greatest fault—if it be a fault—consisted, while in the States, in a lack of the genius of obtaining a livelihood, and in the want of the economics of human existence. He whose pursuits were entirely literary, and who in his earlier habits had ever lived on others, found himself at loss in turning a penny among us skin-flint Yankees. Are there not some at home in like plight, who do not know how to live, and whose abundance of brains never run in the channel of acquisitiveness? Very likely.

Well, coming to this country a convert from the awful heresy of Romanism, barely escaping destruction in a burning steamer, on the St. Lawrence, embracing the blessed hope of Christ's near coming and personal reign, his thorough education, his wonderful mastership of the languages, his romantic career, his gentle, loving spirit, his majesty and urbanity of demeanor, won our admiration and our hearts; and we sent him back to Europe with our money and prayers, a missionary at large for all the Adventists,—the Herald, Crisis, and Voice, saying with one voice, "Go, and God be with thee." His letters—always interesting—are before us; and his heart and real work are known to himself and his All-seeing Maker. Somehow, I am impressed with a sense of his sincerity, honesty, ability, and worthiness of support, wherever he may for the time traverse the plains and valleys of old Europe, "proclaiming the kingdom of God." It is worth while to inquire, "Having pushed out his boat on the wild waters of European society, shall we now leave him there to buffet the winds and waves alone? Only one missionary in all Europe! Can't our whole body sustain one? Can we do any better than to sustain this man? Will that minister step forth from our ranks, who, like Elder C., possesses the knowledge of eight different tongues wherewith to proclaim to the varied nations Jesus' coming? Let him show himself, and we will send him likewise. For this heaven-born message must be spoken to "many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings."—Rev. 10: 11.

Brethren of all our churches, whom shall we send on this great errand, and who will go for us? One man, whose address and abilities guarantee him access where we should be powerless, has received this commission into his heart and cries, "Here am I, send me." Shall we send him? Is n't it best to venture a few thousands on his behalf? And if sustained at all, had he not better, for his credit and our honor, be sustained well? Shall he in shame and semi-pauperism eke out a miserable and cramped existence among strangers, and beg in vain for help from American Adventists, who shout across the water, "The Lord is coming," and still hoard up their wealth behind the back of the only man we have out in the eastern hemisphere who echoes our words? In the name of God, and the benighted nations, let us do something, wisely and well. And do it NOW.

I may err, but pressed with a sense of duty for a long month, I have at last written what I have written. If my counsel is good, God will speed it on to success; but if bad, he will, I humbly pray, bring it to naught.

For the World's Crisis.

THE POOR AND THE POORER.

It has been remarked that "there are none so poor but that they know of one or more that they deem poorer than themselves. I heard an amusing story, the truthfulness of which I am unable to assert, which, with one other that I know to be true, I will relate to illustrate the point.

A very poor woman, living in a single room, with a family of three children, had no bed, and scarcely any furniture. When night came, it was her practise to lay her children on the bare floor, and then take down a door and put over them. One night, when the mother had put the welcome door over them, as usual, one of the children looked up to her and said, "Mother, what do poor folks' children do who don't have any doors to put over them?"

This may seem to be an improbable story, but it may be true! Now I will relate story number two, which will bear a favorable comparison with the foregoing, and which I know to be true.

On one forenoon last spring, Sr. Helginson and myself went out into the "Five Points" of Philadelphia, "hunting up" the sick, the sinful, and the poor. In the course of the forenoon we discovered a narrow alley, about sixty feet long and two feet wide. On one side of this alley was a row of low, white-washed, brick buildings, cut up into small tenements. Each tenement consisted of two rooms—one on a floor. The buildings were but two stories in height, and were entered by very narrow and low doors. Each room was lighted by a small window containing but four or six panes of glass. There were no [illegible] plastered ceilings. The rafters were in full view, with the floors above which were nailed to them. The ascent to the second stories was by means of coarsely built ladders. Each room was not more than ten feet square, and about seven feet in height. We visited all that we could get into, and among the rest a room that was rented by a colored woman.

It may be of interest to read a description of the "fixings" of the room, and of its occupant, which I will furnish briefly. The room was dark and dirty. In one corner was a broken lounge frame, some pieces of matting, and a few rags. At one side stood a lamentable looking table, which was furnished with a few pieces of crockery which evidently was in its worst days. There were no chairs to sit in, therefore we, with the occupant of the room, had either to stand, or sit on the broken lounge frame. We decided to remain upon our feet. On another side of the room was a small fireplace, in a small chimney, in which was burning a limited quantity of coke.

The occupant of the room was a negress of about forty years of age. She was very black, and dressed in clothes that were as black as herself. Her dress kept far away from her feet, and was tattered and torn. Her feet were half covered with what was once a pair of men's boots. On her head was a large hood, that broke down at the top, half covering her forehead, which gave her a comical look.

Under other circumstances we should have been much amused at her appearance, but her case was sad indeed, and we had to do what we could to make her more comfortable. The following is a portion of the conversation that passed between us.

"Do you love Jesus Christ?"

"Yes, I do love him, but I think I don't love de bressid Savior like as I used to did." She then wept much.

"But do you not know that Jesus loves you still, and that he will forgive all your sins?"

"Yes, I know dat; but I'se been kind o'cold lately, and I does n't feel Jesus quite so near like as I used to did."

"Come to Christ to-day, and you will be welcomed by him."

"O yes, bress de good Lord. I mean to go to [illegible] to-day."

"How much do you pay for your room?"

"Eight cents a day, an' I has to pay de rent ebery night, or I'll be turned out."

"What do you do for a living?"

"Well, I cleans bones in de bone shops, and whitewashes, and washes and irons, and anything dat I can do dat will get me an honest livin'."

"Some of the people take in lodgers. Could not you take in one or two, and thus get help in paying your rent?"

"Well, no, I had rudder be alone; but if I should see anybody dat was destitute, I would gib 'em a lodgin'."

"Do you have good health?"

"Where is your bed?"

"Well, I has n't got none. I sleep ove dare in dat yer corner on de floor. Dat is de mos' comf'ble place in de room, for you see de room is bery damp."

After doing as our Lord bade us, we departed to visit other scenes of wretchedness. That poor woman saw others that she called poor, and she would "gib 'em a night's lodgin'." How many there are who are a thousand times better off than that poor black woman, who reverse matters, and forever grumble about their poverty, and rob God of much that belongs to him. Learn of these poor saints of Jesus; then you will always be thankful that you are better off than many others. Yours in Christ,

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

Dear Sisters:—The last you heard from me was in reference to Hackensack. There have been many changes since. I have been very sick since I wrote that letter, with a prostration of the whole nervous system. I was confined to the house and bed one week. I saw in the Crisis a notice of the discussion between Eld. Grant and Mr. Fish, on Spiritualism, in Philadelphia; and, as I was a Philadelphian, I thought this was a good time to go. So I asked Father to please to give me strength and let me go; so he did. O bless his name, how good he is to hear our prayers and grant our requests. O how I do thank him for the privilege I have had of hearing this discussion on the strong delusion of the last days. I have been battling against it for the last eleven years with all my might; but I seemed to stand alone. This has strengthened me much, and I feel like taking hold afresh. I was glad to see so many of our people out to hear for themselves. I was glad to see so many old faces that I used to see in 1842, '3, and '4.

The discussion was well conducted. Mr. Fish is well read in history, and well posted in all points that infidels and Spiritualists use in their arguments; but Bro. Grant—"the little General," some called him—showed himself to be posted in all these points, and was master of the subject under consideration. When he got through, all Bible students were convinced that Spiritualism was that damnable doctrine, a doctrine of devils, or demons, that should come in the last days. O that the Lord would open the minds of the people, that they may see and understand how the enemy is working through this Satanic power, to deceive, if it was possible, the very elect. The audience was made up of members of all churches, and the most talented and educated of the city were there to pass their opinions of the discussion; and all but Spiritualists or infidels were satisfied that Spiritualism is the work of demons. Eld. Grant has, no doubt, through this discussion, made himself many warm friends.

On Monday, I visited with Sister Helginson in her mission field, and it may be interesting to the readers of the Crisis to know something about the history of this mission. As I have been in it from the beginning, probably I can in a few words show you how the Lord has taken care of his little ones. In 1842, there were forty of us young folks, who were looking for Jesus in 1843. We had little meetings all around among the poor and old and

For the World's Crisis.

NEWS FROM CANADA WEST.

Bro. Grant:—I send for the Crisis a brief account of a visit to Canada West, believing brethren will like to hear that truth is spreading there.

In Howick, Huron County, about one hundred and fifty miles from Buffalo, four brethren, one a deacon, were expelled from a Baptist church for believing in the destruction of the wicked. Deacon Andrew Sims, of another Baptist church, and holding our views, moved there, and having before began to preach some, he commenced preaching among these brethren. The Lord blessed his labors, and several were converted and wished to be baptized. There being no Advent preacher in Canada West, whom they knew, that they wished to have baptize them, they held a meeting, and voted to write for me to come and baptize, and form a church. I knew and had visited Bro. Sims five years ago. So the first of October I went and spent three Sabbaths with them; I baptized six, two men and their wives, and two young men. The same day we formed a church of ten members, chosing Bro. Fajrly Milne deacon, and J. S. Milne clerk. The church then voted to have Bro. Sims ordained as pastor, and wished me to perform the ceremony. There being no preacher who would fellowship with Bro. Sims, or the church, within a hundred miles, and having known Bro. Sims' views for years, and the church also being satisfied with his doctrine, character and abilities, I felt it my duty, under the circumstances, to take the responsibility, with the church, of setting him apart to the work of the ministry, by prayer and laying on of hands, by myself and the deacon.

The Lord has set his seal of approbation upon the preaching of Bro. Sims, by opening the hearts of a number to attend to the word spoken by him, as he did the heart of Lydia, when Paul preached the same word. Some are yet seriously impressed, and may the Lord give him many more souls as seals of his ministry.

Some of other denominations are seeking for truth, although, as everywhere, opposition is manifested. A large number turned out to hear each Sabbath I was there, and a good number of books and tracts were sold and given. Brethren were liberal, not only in paying the expense of traveling three hundred miles, but also in providing for my wants when at home. Four signed for the Crisis, and as they are well-to-live farmers, they purpose building a house of worship.

Thus God is overruling to his glory, the blindness of some for expelling members for growing in knowledge, while sinners are converted, his people are comforted, especially those who preferred believing the Bible instead of creeds. It was a joyful visit to me, although the labor was hard; and a happier people I have not seen for many years. Those I baptized truly went on their way rejoicing; giving good evidence that the love of God had been shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Spirit, and that they were not alone moved to act by a cold, speculative belief of the head, but by the "one faith,—a faith in Christ's death, resurrection and atoning blood; a faith of the gospel, which works by love and purifies the heart."—Gal. 5: 6. Thanks be to our God that his work of mercy in saving lost sinners is not yet ended; and that here and there he is giving us evidence that he can and will bless where destruction is preached as the final penalty of his law.

It is my purpose to be at home during the winter, and I shall be happy to hear from brethren who may want books, or wish to pay up accounts. J. Blain.

Correction.—In the article entitled "Man's Future Destiny," on the first page of this No., second column, I am made to say, "inasmuch as the Bible no where intimates that either Adam, or any of his antecedents," etc. It should read "descendants." J. P. Bell.

The year 1866, when looked at prospectively, promises some very important events, which will give light to the students of prophecy. We find there is quite a general expectation that it will not pass without some important changes in the affairs of this world. Some able and devoted Bible students, who have carefully watched the signs of the times, and from an examination of the prophetic periods of Daniel and John, are quite strong in the belief that the saints will be taken from the world next year; others fix on 1867, others 1868, some 1869, 1870, 1874, 1875; but nearly all Bible students and chronologers tell us we are very near the end of the present dispensation. We think there has never been a more general expectation among all churches that the Lord is soon coming, than at the present time; unless it was in 1843–44. It is very evident that the interest is increasing, and entering deeper into the hearts of those who have paid any attention to this all-important subject. The great question for every one to settle is, am I ready? The warnings have been abundant, so that none will have any excuse, if found at last without a wedding garment on when the Bridegroom appears.

It will be recollected that sometime since we published an old prophecy written by Hezekiah Wylly's, of Hartford, Ct., in July 14th, 1766, stating that "in 1866, America's fate is fixed."

Next year the Methodists intend to "have a grand Jubilee" in Oct., to celebrate the "Centenary of Methodism." It will be one hundred years next Oct. since "the first permanent Methodist Society was formed by Philip Embury, in the city of New York."

Next year Napoleon is to take his troops away from Rome, which must cause some important changes, we think, in the history of the "little horn" power, seated on the "seven hills."

There is another very significant event to transpire next year, which is the great gathgathering of Catholics at Rome, to celebrate the eighteen hundredth anniversary of the martyrdom of St. Peter," which is said to have taken place at Rome in A. D. 66. We learn that "the Catholic bishops of the whole world will be invited" to meet there next year; and besides all the priests and lay members are invited. It is expected to be the largest gathering of the Catholics at Rome ever known. It will be recollected that Belshazzar, the last king of ancient Babylon, had a great gathering and a feast in his palace the night that the hand was seen writing on the wall, MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN, which Daniel interpreted as follows:—"MENE, God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it. TEKEL, thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting. Peres, thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians. . . . In that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom."—Dan. 5: 25–31.

The Pope confesses that his end is near. It may be nearer than his expectations indicate. We say that it is a significant fact that there is to be such a great gathering at Rome next year. We shall wait for these coming events with great interest. The coming gathering and feast at the seat of mystic Babylon, next year, may result no better than the one in the days of Belshazzar. Indeed, it looks like the corresponding event.

All signs indicate that the glorious morning of the resurrection is very near at hand. Let us all be ready when the glad hour arrives, that we may welcome Jesus and all the loved ones now sleeping in death, who will then be raised to die no more.

We are too near home to look back with longing eyes after the things of this world. "Remember Lot's wife."

ORNAMENTS.

There has been no time during the existence of this generation, when so many and so costly ornaments were worn as at the present time. In this respect, one might think the people were returning back to the habits of the heathen nations; and that the tastes of children were gratified, instead of the noble manhood and womanhood that should characterize civilized and christian nations. The disposition to make a show in the world seems to have become almost universal; as well among the majority of church members, as those who make no profession of religion. This is a sure sign that the church is becoming conformed to the world, and floating away from the true standard of christianity. But few have courage to come out from the world, and be separate. They do more than Lot's wife,—look back; they go back to the world, and then claim the world has advanced to a higher position. The returning current is so strong, that but few young people who profess religion, have courage to stand against such an overwhelming influence, and dare to be singular, if they lose every earthly friend.

We find here and there, a few who see and feel the importance of doing all to the glory of the Lord; who live, as though they believed their actions were known to their Creator, and that Christianity requires more from those who profess it than most believe. There are some who think, when the Scripture says "that women" should "adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array," that this requirement should be observed as carefully as any other, if they would please the Lord, and hear him say at last, "well done." Would that more felt the force of this Scripture, and other kindred passages. We have come to an age when men and women trample under their feet the laws of God and man which they do not like, provided it is only fashionable to do so. Fashion rules the conduct of a large portion of society, not only of the world, but the church. Instead of being "separate," as commanded, she follows after the fashions, with Satan for a leader, in the person of some of the lewd women of Paris.

'Tis true there are some noble exceptions, in all evangelical denominations, who shine like diamonds among the dirt. We have recently met several young ladies in different places, who have sacrificed their jewelry, and adorned themselves in "modest apparel," and with "a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." If others only knew how much better they would feel in their minds, we think they would be willing to make the sacrifice. They would not only feel better, but certainly look better. Beauty needs no ornaments; and deformity only attracts more attention when ornamented, because there is no similarity, or fitness between the two. Pure gold needs no galvanizing to make it valuable, or to cause it to shine; so pure religion needs no ornaments to make it lovely and beautiful. Ornaments on a christian are as unbecoming as rum blossoms on the nose, or as grease spots on fine linen. We hope those who profess to believe in the coming of Christ will lay them aside for ever. Make the sacrifice at once, and give the results to the poor, and you will feel richer.

HIGH PRICES.

It was thought that when the war closed, the high prices of provision, clothing, and other things, would most certainly be taken off; but instead of the prices being lower, they are higher than ever, with few exceptions; and there appears no prospect of any improvement in favor of the consumer.

The following comparative scale of prices for the month of October, in the last four years, including the present, as taken from one of our inland cites, will show how the case stands:—

Beef per lb.	$ .14	13½	9	6¼
Butter "	.45	45	22	18
Chickens per lb.	.30	20	14	12
Eggs per doz.	.32	30	18	14
Potatoes per bush.	.85	65	50	35
Pork per barrel	46.00	44.00	17.00	14.50
Lard per lb.	.30	23	13	11¼
Flour per bbl.	17.00	13.00	10.00	8.50

It is difficult to tell the reasons why the high prices continue, when gold has fallen nearly one half from where it was when the prices of provision were not as high as they are now. It is very evident that traders are not as willing to fall in their prices, when the case demands it, as they are to rise. The fall in the price of goods is seldom accomplished only by competition; and it appears quite evident that the combinations and associations of the various classes of traders and producers are united to keep up the price of goods so long as the people will consent to purchase and pay such exorbitant amounts for them.

Among the poor there must be of necessity much suffering during the coming winter, unless there is a change in their favor from some source. With coal at $16 and $17 a ton, and flour at the same price, the prospective cannot look very flattering to the poor. Such are the fruits of covetousness.

THE CONDITION THE POPE.

The condition of the Pope of Rome is becoming very critical, and all the world can see it. His own people feel it; but vainly hope there may be some timely aid brought for his relief. As he has truly said, "mene mene tekel upharsin is already written" for him; and we think the decision cannot be changed. A train of events are at work, that must soon end for ever the temporal power the "little horn" of Daniel's prophecy. His "dominion" was to be taken away just before the end of the present dispensation.

The following from a late Philadelphia Inquirer, gives us some idea of the sad "condition of the Pope." We apprehend it will be no better before the coming of Christ:—

"According to the tenor of European advices it is manifest that the tenure of Pius IX in Rome is becoming doubtful. The French Government notified the Holy Father months ago that it was determined to withdraw the troops and evacuate the Eternal City. Time was given to the Pontiff either to make his peace with Victor Emanuel, or perfect arrangements for shelter elsewhere. The King of Italy would be glad if the Pope would remain as a dispenser of religious but not of temporal power. Rome could, under such auspices, still be the capital of the Catholic Church, and whilst the Pope might lose a few temporalties incident to his jurisdiction as a Prince, he would be nearly recompensed by the cessation of those troubles which are concurrent with the exercise of worldly power. As a Patriarch in Rome, the head of a great sect, the Pope would receive the veneration of all who entertain the belief of his church, and his influence would be greater, as it would be divested of all connection with temporal interests. But it is extremely difficult for Pius to accommodate himself to circumstances. "The logic of events," which in this country is held to be unanswerable, has no influence upon his determinations. He wishes to stay in Rome despite the inclinations of Victor Emanuel. He can remain there by entering into a proper convention.

This he will not do. France tells him that it is time that the problem which has been unsettled since the Revolution of 1848 shall be solved. He must really come to some conclusion in reference to his movements. The French troops, he is told, are soon to be withdrawn, and unless he has a new place of refuge secured, or makes some arrangement with the Italian monarch, trouble will ensue. It is suggested that this movement of French troops is to be made "in concert with the Pontifical Government." Doubtless, if possible; but as yet it has been impossible to make any arrangement with the Papal authorities. The Pope and Cardinals act as if they believed that Louis Napoleon dare not withdraw his soldiers from Rome. To his requests that arrangements should be made to facilitate that movement they pay no attention. There must certainly be an end to this, and the time may not be distant when the difficulty will be suddenly, perhaps very unsatisfactorily, solved."

Truly these are times of thrilling interest to the Bride of the Lamb. Now is the time for her to prepare for the marriage, and see that she is "ready" to be presented without "spot and wrinkle, or any such thing." Let every one go through with a most thorough heart examination, and see if all is right in the sight of the Lord. Let us be sure in this matter. Our all is at stake.

SWELLING WORDS.

Paul said, "In the last days" men would be "boasters," and "fierce." This prophecy is having a most literal accomplishment, we think, at the present time, and this state of things will, doubtless, increase rapidly till the end of the present dispensation.

The Fenians have recently held a large meeting at Music Hall, Boston, which was addressed by George Francis Train. During his remarks, as reported in the Boston Journal, he said:—

"Three years ago I was knocked down in Faneuil Hall; but I am not afraid of being knocked down to-night, for I now have my own boys with me. Boston knocked me down three years ago and I have now come back to pay her off." The greater part of the remainder of the evening until half-past nine o'clock was spent by Mr. Train in the bitterest and most intemperate attacks on the character of the citizens of Boston and its institutions. Several resolutions were offered by him which were adopted by the meeting with hardly a dissenting voice. The following are specimens of the whole: 'Resolved—That we will never again wear a single article of English manufacture;' 'Resolved—That we are in favor of the Southern States coming into the Union;' 'Resolved—That we indorse Andrew Johnson's policy, and if it is interfered with, then the Irish of this country—four millions of Catholics—will go to the polls next fall and elect Irishmen to Congress;' 'Resolved—That the shutting out of the South from Congress will meet the disapprobation of the Irish-American voters.' These and many other resolutions of a similar description were offered and received by the audience with cheers."

FENIAN CONGRESS.

The Fenians have established a Congress of their own in this country, which shows most clearly that they are not acting in harmony with the government of the United States. This is a very singular movement, and we almost wonder that the American government is so indifferent about the matter. Catholicism is the same in its spirit now as it has ever been. It keeps quiet yet, out of policy; but give it the power, and Protestants would be put down at once, without mercy. The Catholics have no sympathy with any thing that does not advance their interests as a religious body.

It is claimed that the object of the Fenian movement is to liberate Ireland from English control. This, no doubt, is one object; but is that all? What need of a Congress in the United States, if Ireland only is the object under consideration. Why so secret in their operations? Time will develop what is now hidden.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE UNCONVERTED.

Dear friends, who see, and perhaps read, the World's Crisis, let me address you. You have some idea, from what you have read and heard from your friends who are looking for the coming of the Savior, that the end of this age is near. Let me tell you it is really so, yes, much nearer than you are aware of. The signs of the times, the moral and religious condition of the world, prove that is really so. Let me entreat you not to be deceived on this all-absorbing subject. You no doubt hear many professing christians saying, "The world is getting better," "The world will soon be converted." I beg of you, listen not for a moment to such unscriptural expressions, for if you do you will be inclined to believe them and deceive yourselves. Oh! be not deceived on this subject, I beseech you. Remember, God has given his word to instruct you. Read that, I pray you. Obey him who died for you. He says, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life."—John 5: 39. "The holy Scriptures are able to make you wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—2. Tim. 3: 15. The sayings and teachings of ministers, and others, are true, just as they agree with the Bible, and no further. "If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8: 20. And again, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?"—Isa. 2: 22. Let me entreat you to bring every thing you hear on this solemn subject to the test of the Scriptures.

I must not be tedious. I must close this exhortation. But I beg of you hear me. The friends of Jesus, among whom you live and with whom you associate, will soon be with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God. Luke 13: 28. And you, if you continue to reject the Savior, will be thrust out." "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." Will you be among those? Are you willing to be considered mere chaff? Will you not rather strive to be among your friends in the kingdom? Some of you have parents sleeping in Jesus; others have children, brothers and sisters, husbands and wives. You may remember their dying words, you may have promised to meet them in "that day." God help you to wake up. Commence to-day to seek the Lord.

Who will Help?

A Sister writes from New Hampshire:—"I want to say a word about the paper which is sent to Sister H. Nearly three years ago she moved from this city to U——, where she was miles from all of 'like precious faith.' She needed the Crisis, but could not pay for it; so I have paid for it myself up to this volume. Now my own means have failed, but I have been hoping a way would be opened for me to earn the money before the volume was out. As yet, I see no way to do it, and I want to ask if you can send her this volume free. If I can get the means, I will send pay for it after that. Expecting we shall soon be where the Crisis will not be needed, I am yours in hope, Harriet."

A Bro. writes from Connecticut:—

"I take my pen to say what duty demanded long ago, that I must give up the Crisis or become a free subscriber. I do not like to do either, but sickness has brought me to it. I have been sick for the last two years."

From a Brother in Ohio.

Messrs. Grant, Adams, and Herron:—Dear Brethren,—I send inclosed a draft for $105.00, which I wish used in the following manner: $10.00 to the Tract Fund; $10.00 to the Poor Fund; $10.00 for Sr. Anna E. Smith, New York, to be used by her according to discretion in her department of labor; $70.00 to the Freedmen's Mission Fund; and the balance for Crisis and books.

Dear brethren, I am a stranger to you all, only as I have read of you. I am here in this place a lone witness to the truths that you are particularly engaged in promulgating. I have no one to associate with that believes with me, and is expecting with me that the kingdom of heaven is at hand, or rather, that the King is at hand.

I have for some time been wishing for a complete consecration to God, and for that I know I must try and obey the commands of Christ. I want to be of the little flock that is to receive the kingdom. Christ's directions are to "sell that ye have, and give alms." I am poor; but I had an article of property to sell which ought to have sold for about $125; but, not finding a purchaser, I left it with another to sell, and told him not to refuse $100 for it. He sold the property for a note of $115, bearing interest payable in one year, and told me that I might take the note, or, if I chose, he would keep it and give me $100. Well, I was disposed to put the whole into the treasury of the Lord. If I waited a year, there would be much more of it than now; but it would be trusting the Lord's money in the hands of man, where it would be, at least, possible that I might not get it at all; and the thought that it was now greatly needed, and, if now properly used, would be safe,—a treasure in heaven, where no thief approacheth or moth corrupteth,—I took the money. Take it, brethren, and use it for the glory of God. [illegible]

He will be at —— at Thanksgiving, with our mother and brother, and I wish, if possible, that the book may be there before that time. Brethren, may God bless you all, especially Brn. Himes and Flagg in their mission south.

OUR EUROPEAN MISSION.

This mission is being prosecuted by Elder M. B. Czechowski. No missionary society has as yet taken him under its sheltering wing. Assisted at the first by individual aid, he is still thus sustained. A good many hundred dollars have gone over the ocean from America to help him in his work. And still he needs and asks for more funds. Shall he have them? Many have given freely who do not know him—given "as unto the Lord." All may know him better who will take the pains to buy and read his "Thrilling Narrative," or history of his life. Personally, I have known him for over nine years. I am not insensible to his faults, nor blind to his virtues. At first, he allied himself to the Seventh-Day Adventists, and proclaimed their views. Then they threw him off from being one of their accredited ministers, not from any fault in his christian character, but because he, preferring an enlarged sphere of action, and greater catholicity of spirit, failed to fully abide by their views and rules. Then he chose the major body of Adventists for his associates. Educated a Romish priest, hence totally unused to labor or to the earning of a penny in any other manner save by his profession, his greatest fault—if it be a fault—consisted, while in the States, in a lack of the genius of obtaining a livelihood, and in the want of the economics of human existence. He whose pursuits were entirely literary, and who in his earlier habits had ever lived on others, found himself at loss in turning a penny among us skin-flint Yankees. Are there not some at home in like plight, who do not know how to live, and whose abundance of brains never run in the channel of acquisitiveness? Very likely.

Well, coming to this country a convert from the awful heresy of Romanism, barely escaping destruction in a burning steamer, on the St. Lawrence, embracing the blessed hope of Christ's near coming and personal reign, his thorough education, his wonderful mastership of the languages, his romantic career, his gentle, loving spirit, his majesty and urbanity of demeanor, won our admiration and our hearts; and we sent him back to Europe with our money and prayers, a missionary at large for all the Adventists,—the Herald, Crisis, and Voice, saying with one voice, "Go, and God be with thee." His letters—always interesting—are before us; and his heart and real work are known to himself and his All-seeing Maker. Somehow, I am impressed with a sense of his sincerity, honesty, ability, and worthiness of support, wherever he may for the time traverse the plains and valleys of old Europe, "proclaiming the kingdom of God." It is worth while to inquire, "Having pushed out his boat on the wild waters of European society, shall we now leave him there to buffet the winds and waves alone? Only one missionary in all Europe! Can't our whole body sustain one? Can we do any better than to sustain this man? Will that minister step forth from our ranks, who, like Elder C., possesses the knowledge of eight different tongues wherewith to proclaim to the varied nations Jesus' coming? Let him show himself, and we will send him likewise. For this heaven-born message must be spoken to "many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings."—Rev. 10: 11.

Brethren of all our churches, whom shall we send on this great errand, and who will go for us? One man, whose address and abilities guarantee him access where we should be powerless, has received this commission into his heart and cries, "Here am I, send me." Shall we send him? Is n't it best to venture a few thousands on his behalf? And if sustained at all, had he not better, for his credit and our honor, be sustained well? Shall he in shame and semi-pauperism eke out a miserable and cramped existence among strangers, and beg in vain for help from American Adventists, who shout across the water, "The Lord is coming," and still hoard up their wealth behind the back of the only man we have out in the eastern hemisphere who echoes our words? In the name of God, and the benighted nations, let us do something, wisely and well. And do it NOW.

I may err, but pressed with a sense of duty for a long month, I have at last written what I have written. If my counsel is good, God will speed it on to success; but if bad, he will, I humbly pray, bring it to naught.

THE POOR AND THE POORER.

It has been remarked that "there are none so poor but that they know of one or more that they deem poorer than themselves. I heard an amusing story, the truthfulness of which I am unable to assert, which, with one other that I know to be true, I will relate to illustrate the point.

A very poor woman, living in a single room, with a family of three children, had no bed, and scarcely any furniture. When night came, it was her practise to lay her children on the bare floor, and then take down a door and put over them. One night, when the mother had put the welcome door over them, as usual, one of the children looked up to her and said, "Mother, what do poor folks' children do who don't have any doors to put over them?"

This may seem to be an improbable story, but it may be true. Now I will relate story number two, which will bear a favorable comparison with the foregoing, and which I know to be true.

On one forenoon last spring, Sr. Helginson and myself went out into the "Five Points" of Philadelphia, "hunting up" the sick, the sinful, and the poor. In the course of the forenoon we discovered a narrow alley, about sixty feet long and two feet wide. On one side of this alley was a row of low, white-washed, brick buildings, cut up into small tenements. Each tenement consisted of two rooms—one on a floor. The buildings were but two stories in height, and were entered by very narrow and low doors. Each room was lighted by a small window containing but four or six panes of glass. [illegible] plastered ceilings, [illegible] view, with the floors above which were nailed to them. The ascent to the second stories was by means of coarsely built ladders. Each room was not more than ten feet square, and about seven feet in height. We visited all that we could get into, and among the rest a room that was rented by a colored woman.

It may be of interest to read a description of the "fixings" of the room, and of its occupant, which I will furnish briefly. The room was dark and dirty. In one corner was a broken lounge frame, some pieces of matting, and a few rags. At one side stood a lamentable looking table, which was furnished with a few pieces of crockery which evidently was in its worst days. There were no chairs to sit in, therefore we, with the occupant of the room, had either to stand, or sit on the broken lounge frame. We decided to remain upon our feet. On another side of the room was a small fireplace, in a small chimney, in which was burning a limited quantity of coke.

The occupant of the room was a negress of about forty years of age. She was very black, and dressed in clothes that were as black as herself. Her dress kept far away from her feet, and was tattered and torn. Her feet were half covered with what was once a pair of men's boots. On her head was a large hood, that broke down at the top, half covering her forehead, which gave her a comical look.

Under other circumstances we should have been much amused at her appearance, but her case was sad indeed, and we had to do what we could to make her more comfortable. The following is a portion of the conversation that passed between us.

"Do you love Jesus Christ?"

"Yes, I do love him, but I think I don't love de bressid Savior like as I used to did." She then wept much.

"But do you not know that Jesus loves you still, and that he will forgive all your sins?"

"Yes, I know dat; but I'se been kind o'cold lately, and I does n't feel Jesus quite so near like as I used to did."

"Come to Christ to-day, and you will be welcomed by him."

"O yes, bress de good Lord. I mean to go to [illegible] to-day."

"How much do you pay for your room?"

"Eight cents a day, an' I has to pay de rent ebery night, or I'll be turned out."

"What do you do for a living?"

"Well, I cleans bones in de bone shops, and whitewashes, and washes and irons, and anything dat I can do dat will get me an honest livin'."

"Some of the people take in lodgers. Could not you take in one or two, and thus get help in paying your rent?"

"Well, no, I had rudder be alone; but if I should see anybody dat was destitute, I would gib 'em a lodgin'."

"Do you have good health?"

"Where is your bed?"

"Well, I has n't got none. I sleep ove dare in dat yer corner on de floor. Dat is de mos' comf'ble place in de room, for you see de room is bery damp."

After doing as our Lord bade us, we departed to visit other scenes of wretchedness. That poor woman saw others that she called poor, and she would "gib 'em a night's lodgin'." How many there are who are a thousand times better off than that poor black woman, who reverse matters, and forever grumble about their poverty, and rob God of much that belongs to him. Learn of these poor saints of Jesus; then you will always be thankful that you are better off than many others. Yours in Christ,

Philadelphia, Pa. F. H. Burbank.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

Dear Sisters:—The last you heard from me was in reference to Hackensack. There have been many changes since. I have been very sick since I wrote that letter, with a prostration of the whole nervous system. I was confined to the house and bed one week. I saw in the Crisis a notice of the discussion between Eld. Grant and Mr. Fish, on Spiritualism, in Philadelphia; and, as I was a Philadelphian, I thought this was a good time to go. So I asked Father to please to give me strength and let me go; so he did. O bless his name, how good he is to hear our prayers and grant our requests. O how I do thank him for the privilege I have had of hearing this discussion on the strong delusion of the last days. I have been battling against it for the last eleven years with all my might; but I seemed to stand alone. This has strengthened me much, and I feel like taking hold afresh. I was glad to see so many of our people out to hear for themselves. I was glad to see so many old faces that I used to see in 1842, '3, and '4.

The discussion was well conducted. Mr. Fish is well read in history, and well posted in all points that infidels and Spiritualists use in their arguments; but Bro. Grant—"the little General," some called him—showed himself to be posted in all these points, and was master of the subject under consideration. When he got through, all Bible students were convinced that Spiritualism was that damnable doctrine, a doctrine of devils, or demons, that should come in the last days. O that the Lord would open the minds of the people, that they may see and understand how the enemy is working through this Satanic power, to deceive, if it was possible, the very elect. The audience was made up of members of all churches, and the most talented and educated of the city were there to pass their opinions of the discussion; and all but Spiritualists or infidels were satisfied that Spiritualism is the work of demons. Eld. Grant has, no doubt, through this discussion, made himself many warm friends.

On Monday, I visited with Sister Helginson in her mission field, and it may be interesting to the readers of the Crisis to know something about the history of this mission. As I have been in it from the beginning, probably I can in a few words show you how the Lord has taken care of his little ones. In 1842, [illegible] infirm, who could not get out to meeting; and where the mission meets now, is one of the places where we met. After the time past in 1844, in less than two years we were all scattered, and the meetings stopped; but Sr. Doughty, who now sleeps in Jesus, and myself, kept on visiting these old creatures for some time, till I became engrossed in business, and could not attend to it. Those old people ranged from sixty to one hundred and twelve years of age. The one we called Aunt Betsey, where the meetings are now held, was a hundred and sixteen years of age when she died. She remembered all about the dark day of 1780, and could tell you all about it, just as though it happened yesterday. About fifteen years ago, I became acquainted with Sr. Helginson, who was then a member of the Protestant Methodist church, and a despiser of the people called Adventists; and like Paul would hold the clothes while they were stoned. But after a great deal of persuasion, she came to the Advent meetings; but she told us she believed we were all antichristian. But we made her a subject of prayer, that the Lord would show her the truth. He heard our prayers. She saw the light, believed it, and has been faithful ever since. We then started this mission again, and it has been going on ever since. The first year there were twenty-nine souls converted. I spoke every Tuesday and Friday evening, and gave several courses of lectures on the charts. We had a house full always, and wanted to get a larger place for the meeting; but the old lady said, "No, honeys, I isn't going to live long, and you mus'nt move the meetin' till the old woman dies." So we still staid there till I came to New York.

After I was away awhile, I received many letters to come back. The young converts kept writing all the time for me to return to that city. I loved those dear ones, and it grieved me that I could not be with them. Then I interceded, and had two Bible readers put on there, employed and paid by this mission in N. Y. They were only on a few months, till their employer became dissatisfied, learning from his son, who is a minister in that city, that they did not do their duty as Bible readers. They were discharged, and Sr. Helginson was put on, who has given every satisfaction. But she needs help in visiting such low, degraded localities as she must visit. She ought not to go alone. It is not prudent; neither is it safe. And again she needs assistance in her meetings and her school. Sr. Reeves is helping her nights and Sundays; but she needs her all the time. She cannot labor unless she is supported. Are there not Adventists enough in Philadelphia to put on another Bible reader? You know it is needed. You can see how every thing is done. It is right under your own eyes, and you can see and be satisfied. And again you know Sr. Reeves personally. She has been an Adventist since 1843, and is competent to teach the truth in its purity to these poor creatures. I feel interested in this work, and as this mission employs one for your city, I know you can employ another, if you try, so that they can work together. What say you, brethren and sisters, shall it be done?

I visited some terrible localities with Sr. H., enough to make the vilest of the vile blush for shame, and every christian woman, over the degradation of that city. We found in one room, fourteen feet by sixteen, twenty-seven persons, all drunk, lying like pigs, piled up on the floor; men and women, black and white, all mixed together. I might mention many such places that we visited, but it would take more room than I am entitled to in these columns. There is much work to be done in both cities before the Master comes, and we must hasten, for he is coming very soon. O let us have our portion of work done and well done. I would just say here, that Sister M. Helginson's post office address is No. 214 Marion street, above 2d, Philadelphia, Pa.

I have had a very pleasant time in Trenton, N. J., visiting God's little ones. O there is nothing like the love of Christ; and to know that he is soon coming is glorious. Praise his name. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Your Sr. in Christ,

ANNA E. SMITH.

BRO. GRANT:—How welcome are the weekly visits of the Crisis, as it comes laden with its precious stores of knowledge, words of consolation and comfort, the experiences of saints, from the East, the West, the North, and the South; and how highly appreciated by the many pilgrims scattered here and there, whom we so often hear through the Crisis, saying, We have no preaching here; and I hear something like an inquiry from such, "Watchman, what of the night?" What do its signs portend? And anon the watchman hears a voice from heaven, saying, "Feed my sheep." And then the weekly messenger comes, bearing the watchman's response, "The night is dark, but the star of hope is growing brighter, and the day will soon dawn.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God." Ye weary pilgrim ones, ye are almost home. Ye scarred and care-browned veterans of the cross, your warfare is almost accomplished; but keep your armor on, and your weapons bright; there may be a few more conflicts, and then the crisis, and then the shout of victory—Hallelujah! Jesus comes! Hallelujah! the day dawns.

And some of these lone ones are mourning because of persecutions, afflictions, or, it may be, bereavements. "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted." So said my dear Savior, and then went away a little while, that he might send the Comforter, and also prepare a place for the mourners. And our dear Bro. Paul, he has said, "Comfort one another with these words." What are the words, Paul? "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (or go before) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

O, the exceeding great and precious [illegible]

to cause tears, sighing, and sadness; the opposition of the ungodly, the tauntings of the wicked, the mockings of the scoffer, the pains of affliction, the cravings of poverty, and the pangs of bereavement. There, it is written, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." Take the comforting, christian pilgrim. "He which testifieth these things, saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

From Sr. L. P. Hastings.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord has favored us here of late with preaching from Bro. Fox, of Ohio, and Bro. E. A. Babcock of Jonesville, which has revived and cheered us, and we trust some good seed has been sown which will spring up and bear fruit unto eternal life. We are hoping to see Bro. Babcock here again before long to dispense the word of life and truth. O, how good it seems, after being deprived of those precious privileges for so long time, once more to listen to the gospel in its simplicity, purity, and beauty. May the Lord move mightily in this place.

The past season we have attended two conferences, held by Bro. A. N. Seymour, near Delta, Ohio, which have resulted in much good. Quite a number there have seen the truth, and are striving to walk in it. May the Lord bless them abundantly, and remember them in that day when he makes up his jewels. And that day we believe is not far distant. That last great deception is going on, and how wily is the deceiver. "Ye shall not surely die, but be as gods, knowing good and evil," was believed in Eden instead of the word of the Lord; and how many are taken in the snare at the present day. O that men might see that we have life only through Christ!

Yours in hope of life when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, L. P. HASTINGS.

Morenci, Mich.

From Bro. W. Stuart.

BRO. GRANT:—Allow me, through the Crisis, to address a few lines to my friends in Massachusetts and Connecticut, where I have been preaching.

My dearly beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord, after an absence of nearly ten weeks, through the mercy of our God, I arrived safely at home, and received a hearty welcome from my family and brethren. On last Lord's day, I had the pleasure of preaching to them, on which occasion I urged on them, as I would on you at this time, the necessity of a continual preparation for the coming and kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

The darkest hour of night is just before the dawn, and this is truly and emphatically a dark hour to the world, and to the merely nominal professor of religion. For, although it can be demonstrated that all the prophetic periods will soon terminate, and also that the six thousand years, or world's week, will end about the same time, as is clearly shown by God's great time-piece, which he has placed in the heavens; notwithstanding all this, they sleep on. But, blessed be God, although these things are darkness to the world, they are the light of divine truth to the waiting few. O my brethren, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness! As we are looking for these things, ought we not to be purifying ourselves, because the Lord is pure, consecrating ourselves entirely to his service; and while it is the duty of all to provide things honest in the sight of all men, and hence to be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord, let us be careful, lest we be overcharged with the cares of this life, and so that day overtake us unawares. We need much of the Holy Spirit in these days of peril, that we may heed the Savior's injunction, What I say unto you, I say unto all, watch; because the enemy of all righteousness is ever vigilant, whom we must resist steadfastly in the faith; for if he cannot drive us from the foundation of our hope, he will endeavor to alienate us from each other, by some mere abstraction, in and of itself of no real value to any one. Therefore, my beloved brethren, let us hold fast the beginning of our confidence steadfastly unto the end; endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace. Let our conversation be of heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus, who shall change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his own most glorious body. Let the anticipation of our glorious and eternal home keep our hearts and minds stayed on God, and our hope will be as an anchor to the soul, cast within the vail, taking hold of Christ, our life-giver. With our hearts and minds thus fixed, and looking unto him, the author, until he shall have become the finisher of our faith, we shall soon attain the full fruition of that rest and glory which remain for the people of God.

And now, in conclusion, my dearly beloved brethren and sisters in Christ, permit me to say that your brotherly kindness and affectionate regard for me, while among you, will ever be a source of pleasing reflection to me, and my heart's desire and prayer to God is, that we may all soon meet in the kingdom of heaven.

Yours in the hope of eternal life in Christ,

WILLIAM STUART.

BRO. GRANT:—I have great reason for gratitude and love to the Advent people; and I do thank and praise the Lord that I have had the privilege of becoming identified with them.

The Crisis has been a great blessing to me, and words cannot express the gratitude I owe to the dear friends who first sent it to me, and kindly and generously paid for it also. And the same friends paid my expenses to Wilbraham, and kindly cared for me while there. May the Lord bless them, and reward them a thousand fold for all they have done for me.

What a blessing it was to me to be at the campmeeting at Wilbraham. I had not heard an Advent sermon for about four years, and the campmeeting was a blessed feast for me. I there had the privilege of being buried in baptism, as I had never been immersed, having been a member of the Congregational church, and afterwards associated with the Methodists.

BRO. GRANT:—I would say through the Crisis, that it is a long time since we have had any Advent preaching here. The most of the brethren go to sea, but all will be at home soon. Bro. Leverton talked of coming here, but another door opened to him where he thought there was an opportunity for him to do more good. If there is a preacher in the field who is willing to come and make us a visit, I would say that the most of us are poor, and there are but few of us, but we will meet his expenses, and make up a fair compensation for his labor. Bro. Munger was here a year or two ago. There are many who will never forget him. If any one thinks of coming, please direct to

Obituaries.

FENTON. Died in New Britain, Ct., Oct. 10th, 1865, Sister Mary, wife of Mr. Seth K. Fenton, aged thirty-four years.

For many years she has been a devoted christian and loved the "blessed hope" most deeply and fervently. She attached herself to our glorious Life-giver, with a true and loving heart, and until within a few months has lived as happily as could be desired in mortality. In March, 1864, a lovely and only child, her beautiful "Carrie," aged about seven years, was suddenly stricken down and torn from her embrace. Sister Mary was so violently shocked by the blow, that her wounded heart refused to heal. Gradually her nervous system gave way under the pressure of her grief, and although she never doubted the goodness and love of God, yet she lost, in a measure, that sweet sense of the abiding presence of the Spirit, which had been her joy and her song, and for some five or six months past it has been painfully evident to her friends that her reason was yielding to the terrible pressure. She often complained of a dreadful feeling in her head that almost made her frantic, and in one of those periods of mental prenzy, in an unguarded moment, while her friends (who had scarcely left her for an hour for months) were all away, she took her own life.

It is a most painful trial to her friends, who had just began to hope that with returning health of body she would recover her shattered reason. But she sleeps sweetly, and none can doubt, who knew her lovely and amiable christian character, that "she will arise in the morning."

The writer was permitted to spend an hour with her about three weeks previous to her decease, and never remembers to have enjoyed a more precious season in prayer and conversation with a prostrate but earnest, struggling soul, who was seeking deliverance, than on that occasion,—and the Lord heard and answered prayer; none who were present can ever doubt it, and from that evening she began steadily to improve in body and in mind. But for wise reasons the Lord saw fit to permit her to fall asleep.

Her funeral was attended, and words of comfort and hope were spoken to a large audience by the writer. RANDOLPH E. LADD.

Sister Rawson embraced the glorious truth of a speedy coming salvation, among the first in that region of country; and her untiring zeal for more than twenty years, in helping onward the cause of God, she so much loved, together with a consistent, godly life, evinced to all that she was not only an Adventist, but a christian. When, therefore, death came, it found her calmly resting in faith; and she closed her eyes in an unconscious sleep, firmly believing that, in a short time at the longest, she will be counted worthy to obtain the resurrection of the dead.

Many of our old preachers will remember Bro. Rawson's as a pilgrim's home; and with what earnest care Sister Rawson ministered to their temporal wants; and with it they will remember with the greatest pleasure the refreshing seasons around the family altar, when Sister Rawson's voice was always heard mingling with others in prayer and praise. But she sleeps to awake at the last day, to die no more. May God bless the bereaved family, and lead them all to be careful above all things else, to secure with her a part in the resurrection at the last day.

Words of comfort and exhortation were spoken by the writer to a large and very attentive audience, from Prov. 14: 32. S. W. BISHOP.

She has lain down to rest till the morning,
Where the storm-blasts of time never sweep,
'Mid life's conflicts and toils she grew weary,
So he gave his beloved one sleep.

She has lain down to rest 'mid earth's shadows,
But, oh! when the morning shall break,
And the Life-giver comes for his chosen,
With joy, yea, with singing, she'll wake.

REYNOLDS. Departed this life at Coventry Centre, R. I., Oct. 19th, 1865, of diphtheria, Emily G., aged sixteen years, seven months, and five days.

Oct. 20th, 1865, Isabella B., aged thirteen years, three months and twenty-three days, daughters of Eld. Bowen and Isabella D. Reynolds.

These daughters were gifted with very amiable dispositions. They were only to be known to be loved. Emily gave directions how her funeral services should be conducted. Called her father to her bedside, put her arms round his neck, saying, "Weep not for me, father," and gave the parting farewell. Isabella found peace in her Savior. Her father came home from a prayer meeting, told her he requested the children of God to pray for her that night. She was blessed of the Lord. When her sister was carried out to the grave, she said she wished she was going too. She expired a few minutes after they returned from the grave. By request of Emily, Eld. Northup attended the funeral, and spoke comforting words from 1 Thess. 4: 13.

E. BELLOWS.

MOWDER. Died in Mason County, Ill., Sept. 27th, 1865, Hiram Mowder, youngest son of Joseph and Jane Mowder, in the fifteenth year of his age.

He was accidentally shot. This youth was beloved by all his acquaintances. His upright walk and christian deportment was admired by all who knew him. When death stared him in the face he remained undaunted. We trust he sleeps in Jesus, and will come forth in the just resurrection. May the Lord sustain his aged parents in their affliction, and bring them to the land of promise.

EMERSON. Died in Northwood, N. H., Oct. 17th, 1865, Flora Esther, infant babe of Richard J. and Esther S. Emerson, aged two months and twenty-four days.

FENIAN EXCITEMENT IN CANADA.—A Montreal dispatch says the banking institutions have resolved to arm their employees, and the money brokers propose establishing a night patrol. A company of Chasseurs Canadiens is under orders for the frontier. Hundreds are waiting to go. A new militia organization is under consideration.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Nov. 8th, Queenstown 9th.

The French commenced evacuating Rome on the 5th. Other news unimportant.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 14. There have been no additional cases of cholera on board the Atlanta. The passengers on board complain much of the detention. Strict quarantine is being enforced by the Commissioners.

A Washington dispatch has a sensation rumor that the strongest possible grounds will be taken in the matter of our relations with Great Britain, and that the indemnity question will be backed up, if necessary, by our whole naval and military force; also that an army of observation of not less than 50,000 will be placed on the Canadian frontier before the 1st of December.

A special Washington dispatch says a gentleman from Tobasco for New York reports meeting an agent of Maximilian. This agent represents Maximilian's affairs as being in extremes; that the reported victories of the Imperialists brought no satisfactory results, and that the war against the Liberals was a decided expense on account of this inability to draw supplies from that country; and that he had been dispatched by Maximilian to ask of the French Emperor one hundred million dollars and forty thousand troops, and that if Napoleon failed to furnish these the evacuation of Mexico would follow. Maximilian was ostensibly visiting Yucatan, but had removed his personal effects there as a safe point of embarkation in case the city of Mexico had to be suddenly abandoned. The action of this government is thought will hasten Maximilian's movements.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 16. Highway robberies and burglaries have become so frequent and daring here lately as to create a general alarm, and the citizens are seriously contemplating the formation of a Vigilance Committee.

GOVERNMENT FINANCES.—The income of the government from internal revenue this week has averaged one million one hundred and forty thousand dollars a day, or equal to a weekly aggregate of nearly seven million dollars a week. The total receipts of the National Treasury from this source, thus far in the current fiscal year, commencing with July 1st, have amounted to the enormous sum of one hundred and thirty-eight million dollars, or equal to a weekly average of about seven million two hundred and sixty-three thousand dollars, which average, carried through the whole of the current fiscal year, would yield an income of nearly three hundred and seventy-eight million dollars.

FRENCH TROOPS IN MEXICO.—The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger says the proposed removal of the French troops from Mexico is based on the condition that our government will guarantee that Maximilian shall not be disturbed in his present position, but that he will be left to carry out his plans for the establishment of the empire on a durable basis.

METEORS.—Professor Newton of Yale College, writing to the New Haven Register, says that he, with three other gentlemen, saw from one of the towers of Alumni Hall, on Monday morning, in one hour and fifty minutes, commencing at five minutes before four o'clock, four hundred and thirty shooting stars. He says three hundred and sixty of them moved in paths diverging from the constellation Leo, and are therefore presumed to belong to the November group. The remaining seventy were moving in other paths, and are such as we see every night.

A large proportion of the meteors left phosphorescent trains. Three or four of these trains lasted over a minute. One star, which appeared to explode with a splendid green flame, left a track, which slowly shortened itself and floated away to the north, curling itself up into a crescent. The motion was not rapid to the eye, but as the train was probably as much as seventy miles high, the wind which carried it must have been blowing fifty or one hundred miles an hour. He expected to see as many more next morning if the clouds did not prevent.

PRUNE GRAPE VINES NOW.—The books generally advise winter pruning, or during the month of February. The objections to that season are, the work is liable to run into March, which does not allow time for the cut to become dry enough to check the flow of sap a little later, the weather is apt to be cold, rendering it uncomfortable; besides, the wood is frozen much of the time, in which state it ought not to be disturbed. There is sufficient leisure now, the vines are pliable and can be handled at will, while the mild weather will dry and harden the cuts so that there will be no bleeding in spring. A pair of pruning shears will be found very convenient in making the cuts—in fact, they are almost indispensable to the horticulturist in trimming his shrubbery roses, honeysuckles, blackberries, etc., in addition to the grape vines.—Ex.

IMPORTANT FACT.—A letter from Paris to a New York contemporary, in speaking of the cholera in France, and particularly in the capital of that country, states the fact as an important one, and one which carries immense weight, that, with the cholera deaths at near a hundred a day in Paris, the total bill of mortality is not increased, the reason being that people take proper care of themselves, and the other ordinary maladies which prey upon human life are not developed. Thus, if people were to eat correctly, clothe themselves correctly, avoid currents of air and sudden transitions from hot to cold, the mortality of a city of two millions of inhabitants might be reduced something approaching to a hundred per cent., or three-fourths its ordinary mortality.

ITEMS.

☞ It appears that those who have suffered most from cholera in Paris are the ragmen and the street-sweepers. On the former class it has fallen so heavily that there is some intention of suppressing the trade altogether. It is said that one hundred and fifteen thousand persons fled from Paris within ten days to avoid the epidemic.

☞ In a Fenian book found in Tyrone, Ireland, besides a list of names, was the following toast: "Here's to ——. Long may he live; may he live till he sees chapels built ten miles long, and seven broad—built with Protestant bones, thatched with ministers' skins, whitewashed with their blood, and their backbones for scrapers at the doors."

☞ The leaves of the elder, if strewn among corn or other grain when it is put into the bin, will effectually preserve it from the ravages of the weevil. The juice will also kill bed bugs and magots. Insects never touch elder bushes. The leaves of the elder scattered over cabbages, cucumbers, squashes and other plants subject to the ravages of insects, effectually shield them.

☞ The cholera was brought to New York in 1848 by the steamer New York, which arrived at that port on Nov. 9th, with 400 passengers from Havre. By a singular coincidence, it is again introduced there in the same month, and by a similar steamer, coming from the same port.

☞ The Russian papers announce that the cholera, which appeared two months since in the southern provinces of the empire, is advancing north; and, notwithstanding the cold weather, it has arrived at Berdytchen, in Russian Poland, a town of forty thousand souls, mostly Jews.

☞ Some of the principal New York hotels talk of raising the price of board to $6 per day. There are families in the Fifth avenue who give $500 or $600 a week for their mere lodging and boarding privilege, while their "extras" will reach $300 or $400 more.

☞ A middle aged man was drugged while on the cars between New York and Bridgeport, and robbed of $1200 in gold. He had recently arrived from England, and was en route to Boston to meet his wife. The money he had with him was all he possessed.

☞ Another great artesian well, flowing 200,000 gallons daily, was struck at Chicago last week. Its diameter is five inches, though the intention is to enlarge it to twenty inches, at which size it will have a discharge capacity of 18,000,000 gallons daily.

☞ The citizens of Matamoras are already in a starving condition, and the imperial troops are but little better off. Many of the late Southern officers are fighting with the liberals.

☞ During the three months ending Oct. 31, the police made twenty-two thousand two hundred and eighty-four arrests in New York and Brooklyn.

☞ The whole of Manhattan Island, on which stands the city of New York, was once purchased by one Peter Minuit for twenty-four dollars.

To Anti-Tobacco Men—Prize Tracts.

The Managers of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church wish to procure three superior original tracts on tobacco: one on the physical and moral effects of its use, for general circulation; another, addressed to ministers; and still another for boys. To secure this end, it is desirable to offer liberal premiums to qualified writers for the three best tracts that may be offered in competition for prizes.

For various reasons the Board did not think it best to draw on its regular income for these proposed premiums. It was of the opinion that the friends of the tobacco-reform would cheerfully contribute a special fund for that purpose. Two hundred and fifty dollars, will be needed. As soon as that sum is placed in the hands of its treasurer, the Board will offer a prize of $100 for the best tract, not exceeding thirty-two 12mo. pages, on the first point named above; and $75 each for the best tracts, not exceeding twenty-four pages each, on the other two points. The prizes to be awarded by a competent committee to be hereafter appointed.

If, therefore, the friends of tobacco reform wish such premiums offered and such tracts produced and published, they can accomplish their wishes by sending in their contributions. Messrs. E. H. Brown, W. H. Dikeman, and C. C. North have already contributed $25 each. We need $175 more. Will the anti-tobacco men give it? If so, let them send such sums as they please to donate for this purpose to Rev. James Porter, 200 Mulberry Street, New York, immediately. Should more than the amount named be sent in, the surplus will be expended in the gratuitous circulation of the tracts, especially of the one appealing to the ministry. Anti-tobacco man, send in your money directly!

Help, Brethren!

The church in Biddeford, Me., believing in the speedy advent of our Savior, and having struggled hard to sustain a meeting, so that the people shall hear the doctrine of Jesus' second advent, have decided to build them a house for that purpose, as they cannot sustain their meetings and pay the amount of rent which they will have to pay the coming year, all of them being poor, and would thankfully receive any assistance which any one would feel a privilege to render. Now, dear brethren, you who can, help this church, for they are worthy of your assistance.

infirm, who could not get out to meeting; and where the mission meets now, is one of the places where we met. After the time past in 1844, in less than two years we were all scattered, and the meetings stopped; but Sr. Doughty, who now sleeps in Jesus, and myself, kept on visiting these old creatures for some time, till I became engrossed in business, and could not attend to it. Those old people ranged from sixty to one hundred and twelve years of age. The one we called Aunt Betsey, where the meetings are now held, was a hundred and sixteen years of age when she died. She remembered all about the dark day of 1780, and could tell you all about it, just as though it happened yesterday. About fifteen years ago, I became acquainted with Sr. Helginson, who was then a member of the Protestant Methodist church, and a despiser of the people called Adventists; and like Paul would hold the clothes while they were stoned. But after a great deal of persuasion, she came to the Advent meetings; but she told us she believed we were all antichristian. But we made her a subject of prayer, that the Lord would show her the truth. He heard our prayers. She saw the light, believed it, and has been faithful ever since. We then started this mission again, and it has been going on ever since. The first year there were twenty-nine souls converted. I spoke every Tuesday and Friday evening, and gave several courses of lectures on the charts. We had a house full always, and wanted to get a larger place for the meeting; but the old lady said, "No, honeys, I isn't going to live long, and you mus'nt move the meetin' till the old woman dies." So we still staid there till I came to New York.

After I was away awhile, I received many letters to come back. The young converts kept writing all the time for me to return to that city. I loved those dear ones, and it grieved me that I could not be with them. Then I interceded, and had two Bible readers put on there, employed and paid by this mission in N. Y. They were only on a few months, till their employer became dissatisfied, learning from his son, who is a minister in that city, that they did not do their duty as Bible readers. They were discharged, and Sr. Helginson was put on, who has given every satisfaction. But she needs help in visiting such low, degraded localities as she must visit. She ought not to go alone. It is not prudent; neither is it safe. And again she needs assistance in her meetings and her school. Sr. Reeves is helping her nights and Sundays; but she needs her all the time. She cannot labor unless she is supported. Are there not Adventists enough in Philadelphia to put on another Bible reader? You know it is needed. You can see how everything is done. It is right under your own eyes, and you can see and be satisfied. And again you know Sr. Reeves personally. She has been an Adventist since 1843, and is competent to teach the truth in its purity to these poor creatures. I feel interested in this work; and as this mission employs one for your city, I know you can employ another, if you try, so that they can work together. What say you, brethren and sisters, shall it be done?

I visited some terrible localities with Sr. H., enough to make the vilest of the vile blush for shame, and every christian woman, over the degradation of that city. We found in one room, fourteen feet by sixteen, twenty-seven persons, all drunk, lying like pigs, piled up on the floor; men and women, black and white, all mixed together. I might mention many such places that we visited, but it would take more room than I am entitled to in these columns. There is much work to be done in both cities before the Master comes, and we must hasten, for he is coming very soon. O let us have our portion of work done and well done. I would just say here, that Sister M. Helginson's post office address is No. 214 Marion street, above 2d, Philadelphia, Pa.

I have had a very pleasant time in Trenton, N. J., visiting God's little ones. O there is nothing like the love of Christ; and to know that he is soon coming is glorious. Praise his name. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Your Sr. in Christ,

ANNA E. SMITH.

No. 128 East 27th Street, New York City.

From Bro. G. Thompson.

BRO. GRANT:—How welcome are the weekly visits of the Crisis, as it comes laden with its precious stores of knowledge, words of consolation and comfort, the experiences of saints, from the East, the West, the North, and the South; and how highly appreciated by the many pilgrims scattered here and there, whom we so often hear through the Crisis, saying, We have no preaching here, and I hear something like an inquiry from such, "Watchman, what of the night?" What do its signs portend? And anon the watchman hears a voice from heaven, saying, "Feed my sheep." And then the weekly messenger comes, bearing the watchman's response, "The night is dark, but the star of hope is growing brighter, and the day will soon dawn.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God." Ye weary pilgrim ones, ye are almost home. Ye scarred and care-browned veterans of the cross, your warfare is almost accomplished; but keep your armor on, and your weapons bright; there may be a few more conflicts, and then the crisis, and then the shout of victory—Hallelujah! Jesus comes! Hallelujah! the day dawns.

And some of these lone ones are mourning because of persecutions, afflictions, or, it may be, bereavements. "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted." So said my dear Savior, and then went away a little while, that he might send the Comforter, and also prepare a place for the mourners. And our dear Bro. Paul, he has said, "Comfort one another with these words." What are the words, Paul? "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (or go before) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

O, the exceeding great and precious promises of God's word! Cheer up, pilgrims; we shall soon be there. Here are many things to cause tears, sighing, and sadness; the opposition of the ungodly, the tauntings of the wicked, the mockings of the scoffer, the pains of affliction, the cravings of poverty, and the pangs of bereavement. There, it is written, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." Take the comforting, christian pilgrim. "He which testifieth these things, saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Monroe, Wis. G. THOMSON.

From Sr. L. P. Hastings.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord has favored us here of late with preaching from Bro. Fox, of Ohio, and Bro. E. A. Babcock of Jonesville, which has revived and cheered us, and we trust some good seed has been sown which will spring up and bear fruit unto eternal life. We are hoping to see Bro. Babcock here again before long to dispense the word of life and truth. O, how good it seems, after being deprived of those precious privileges for so long time, once more to listen to the gospel in its simplicity, purity, and beauty. May the Lord move mightily in this place.

The past season we have attended two conferences, held by Bro. A. N. Seymour, near Delta, Ohio, which have resulted in much good. Quite a number there have seen the truth, and are striving to walk in it. May the Lord bless them abundantly, and remember them in that day when he makes up his jewels. And that day we believe is not far distant. That last great deception is going on, and how wily is the deceiver. "Ye shall not surely die, but be as gods, knowing good and evil," was believed in Eden instead of the word of the Lord; and how many are taken in the snare at the present day. O that men might see that we have life only through Christ!

Yours in hope of life when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, L. P. HASTINGS.

Morenci, Mich.

From Bro. W. Stuart.

BRO. GRANT:—Allow me, through the Crisis, to address a few lines to my friends in Massachusetts and Connecticut, where I have been preaching.

My dearly beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord, after an absence of nearly ten weeks, through the mercy of our God, I arrived safely at home, and received a hearty welcome from my family and brethren. On last Lord's day, I had the pleasure of preaching to them, on which occasion I urged on them, as I would on you at this time, the necessity of a continual preparation for the coming and kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

The darkest hour of night is just before the dawn, and this is truly and emphatically a dark hour to the world, and to the merely nominal professor of religion. For, although it can be demonstrated that all the prophetic periods will soon terminate, and also that the six thousand years, or world's week, will end about the same time, as is clearly shown by God's great time-piece, which he has placed in the heavens; notwithstanding all this, they sleep on. But, blessed be God, although these things are darkness to the world, they are the light of divine truth to the waiting few. O my brethren, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness! As we are looking for these things, ought we not to be purifying ourselves, because the Lord is pure, consecrating ourselves entirely to his service; and while it is the duty of all to provide things honest in the sight of all men, and hence to be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord, let us be careful, lest we be overcharged with the cares of this life, and so that day overtake us unawares. We need much of the Holy Spirit in these days of peril, that we may heed the Savior's injunction, What I say unto you, I say unto all, watch; because the enemy of all righteousness is ever vigilant, whom we must resist steadfastly in the faith, for if he cannot drive us from the foundation of our hope, he will endeavor to alienate us from each other, by some mere abstraction, in and of itself of no real value to any one. Therefore, my beloved brethren, let us hold fast the beginning of our confidence steadfastly unto the end; endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace. Let our conversation be of heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus, who shall change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his own most glorious body. Let the anticipation of our glorious and eternal home keep our hearts and minds stayed on God, and our hope will be as an anchor to the soul, cast within the vail, taking hold of Christ, our life-giver. With our hearts and minds thus fixed, and looking unto him, the author, until he shall have become the finisher of our faith, we shall soon attain the full fruition of that rest and glory which remain for the people of God.

And now, in conclusion, my dearly beloved brethren and sisters in Christ, permit me to say that your brotherly kindness and affectionate regard for me, while among you, will ever be a source of pleasing reflection to me, and my heart's desire and prayer to God is, that we may all soon meet in the kingdom of heaven.

Yours in the hope of eternal life in Christ,

WILLIAM STUART.

From Bro. F. H. Chamberlain.

BRO. GRANT:—I have great reason for gratitude and love to the Advent people; and I do thank and praise the Lord that I have had the privilege of becoming identified with them.

The Crisis has been a great blessing to me, and words cannot express the gratitude I owe to the dear friends who first sent it to me, and kindly and generously paid for it also. And the same friends paid my expenses to Wilbraham, and kindly cared for me while there. May the Lord bless them, and reward them a thousand fold for all they have done for me.

What a blessing it was to me to be at the campmeeting at Wilbraham. I had not heard an Advent sermon for about four years, and the campmeeting was a blessed feast for me. I there had the privilege of being buried in baptism, as I had never been immersed, having been a member of the Congregational church, and afterwards associated with the Methodists.

The articles in the Crisis on baptism led me to decide to go forward and follow Jesus, going down into the water in the likeness of his resurrection. Dear friends, pray for me.

Sutton, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

From Bro. A. J. Dow.

BRO. GRANT:—I would say through the Crisis, that it is a long time since we have had any Advent preaching here. The most of the brethren go to sea, but all will be at home soon. Bro. Leverton talked of coming here, but another door opened to him where he thought there was an opportunity for him to do more good. If there is a preacher in the field who is willing to come and make us a visit, I would say that the most of us are poor, and there are but few of us, but we will meet his expenses, and make up a fair compensation for his labor. Bro. Munger was here a year or two ago. There are many who will never forget him. If any one thinks of coming, please direct to

Obituaries.

FENTON. Died in New Britain, Ct., Oct. 10th, 1865, Sister Mary, wife of Mr. Seth K. Fenton, aged thirty-four years.

For many years she has been a devoted christian and loved the "blessed hope" most deeply and fervently. She attached herself to our glorious Life-giver, with a true and loving heart, and until within a few months has lived as happily as could be desired in mortality. In March, 1864, a lovely and only child, her beautiful "Carrie," aged about seven years, was suddenly stricken down and torn from her embrace. Sister Mary was so violently shocked by the blow, that her wounded heart refused to heal. Gradually her nervous system gave way under the pressure of her grief, and although she never doubted the goodness and love of God, yet she lost, in a measure, that sweet sense of the abiding presence of the Spirit, which had been her joy and her song, and for some five or six months past it has been painfully evident to her friends that her reason was yielding to the terrible pressure. She often complained of a dreadful feeling in her head that almost made her frantic, and in one of those periods of mental frenzy, in an unguarded moment, while her friends (who had scarcely left her for an hour for months) were all away, she took her own life.

It is a most painful trial to her friends, who had just began to hope that with returning health of body she would recover her shattered reason. But she sleeps sweetly, and none can doubt, who knew her lovely and amiable christian character, that "she will arise in the morning."

The writer was permitted to spend an hour with her about three weeks previous to her decease, and never remembers to have enjoyed a more precious season in prayer and conversation with a prostrate but earnest, struggling soul, who was seeking deliverance, than on that occasion,—and the Lord heard and answered prayer; none who were present can ever doubt it, and from that evening she began steadily to improve in body and in mind. But for wise reasons the Lord saw fit to permit her to fall asleep.

Her funeral was attended, and words of comfort and hope were spoken to a large audience by the writer. RANDOLPH E. LADD.

Sister Rawson embraced the glorious truth of a speedy coming salvation, among the first in that region of country, and her untiring zeal for more than twenty years, in helping onward the cause of God, she so much loved, together with a consistent, godly life, evinced to all that she was not only an Adventist, but a christian. When, therefore, death came, it found her calmly resting in faith; and she closed her eyes in an unconscious sleep, firmly believing that, in a short time at the longest, she will be counted worthy to obtain the resurrection of the dead.

Many of our old preachers will remember Bro. Rawson's as a pilgrim's home; and with what earnest care Sister Rawson ministered to their temporal wants; and with it they will remember with the greatest pleasure the refreshing seasons around the family altar, when Sister Rawson's voice was always heard mingling with others in prayer and praise. But she sleeps to awake at the last day, to die no more. May God bless the bereaved family, and lead them all to be careful above all things else, to secure with her a part in the resurrection at the last day.

Words of comfort and exhortation were spoken by the writer to a large and very attentive audience, from Prov. 14: 32. S. W. BISHOP.

She has lain down to rest till the morning,
Where the storm-blasts of time never sweep,
'Mid life's conflicts and toils she grew weary,
So he gave his beloved one sleep.

She has lain down to rest 'mid earth's shadows,
But, oh! when the morning shall break,
And the Life-giver comes for his chosen,
With joy, yea, with singing, she'll wake.

REYNOLDS. Departed this life at Coventry Centre, R. I., Oct. 19th, 1865, of diphtheria, Emily G., aged sixteen years, seven months, and five days.

Oct. 20th, 1865, Isabella B., aged thirteen years, three months and twenty-three days, daughters of Eld. Bowen and Isabella D. Reynolds.

These daughters were gifted with very amiable dispositions. They were only to be known to be loved. Emily gave directions how her funeral services should be conducted. Called her father to her bedside, put her arms round his neck, saying, "Weep not for me, father," and gave the parting farewell. Isabella found peace in her Savior. Her father came home from a prayer meeting, told her he requested the children of God to pray for her that night. She was blessed of the Lord. When her sister was carried out to the grave, she said she wished she was going too. She expired a few minutes after they returned from the grave. By request of Emily, Eld. Northup attended the funeral, and spoke comforting words from 1 Thess. 4: 13.

E. BELLOWS.

MOWDER. Died in Mason County, Ill., Sept. 27th, 1865, Hiram Mowder, youngest son of Joseph and Jane Mowder, in the fifteenth year of his age.

He was accidentally shot. This youth was beloved by all his acquaintances. His upright walk and christian deportment was admired by all who knew him. When death stared him in the face he remained undaunted. We trust he sleeps in Jesus, and will come forth in the just resurrection. May the Lord sustain his aged parents in their affliction, and bring them to the land of promise.

C. BUNNELL.

EMERSON. Died in Northwood, N. H., Oct. 17th, 1865, Flora Esther, infant babe of Richard J. and Esther S. Emerson, aged two months and twenty-four days.

The little flower, so soon blasted, will soon appear again with immortal bloom.

BLANCHARD. Died in Bennington, Vt., Nov. 3d, A. F. Blanchard, only son of Oliver Blanchard, aged four years and seven months.

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer.

FENIAN EXCITEMENT IN CANADA.—A Montreal dispatch says the banking institutions have resolved to arm their employees, and the money brokers propose establishing a night patrol. A company of Chasseurs Canadiens is under orders for the frontier. Hundreds are waiting to go. A new militia organization is under consideration.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Nov. 8th, Queenstown 9th.

The French commenced evacuating Rome on the 5th. Other news unimportant.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 14. There have been no additional cases of cholera on board the Atlanta. The passengers on board complain much of the detention. Strict quarantine is being enforced by the Commissioners.

A Washington dispatch has a sensation rumor that the strongest possible grounds will be taken in the matter of our relations with Great Britain, and that the indemnity question will be backed up, if necessary, by our whole naval and military force; also that an army of observation of not less than 50,000 will be placed on the Canadian frontier before the 1st of December.

A special Washington dispatch says a gentleman from Tobasco for New York reports meeting an agent of Maximilian. This agent represents Maximilian's affairs as being in extremes; that the reported victories of the Imperialists brought no satisfactory results, and that the war against the Liberals was a decided expense on account of this inability to draw supplies from that country; and that he had been dispatched by Maximilian to ask of the French Emperor one hundred million dollars and forty thousand troops, and that if Napoleon failed to furnish these the evacuation of Mexico would follow. Maximilian was ostensibly visiting Yucatan, but had removed his personal effects there as a safe point of embarkation in case the city of Mexico had to be suddenly abandoned. The action of this government it is thought will hasten Maximilian's movements.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 18. Highway robberies and burglaries have become so frequent and daring here lately as to create a general alarm, and the citizens are seriously contemplating the formation of a Vigilance Committee.

GOVERNMENT FINANCES.—The income of the government from internal revenue this week has averaged one million one hundred and forty thousand dollars a day, or equal to a weekly aggregate of nearly seven million dollars a week. The total receipts of the National Treasury from this source, thus far in the current fiscal year, commencing with July 1st, have amounted to the enormous sum of one hundred and thirty-eight million dollars, or equal to a weekly average of about seven million two hundred and sixty-three thousand dollars, which average, carried through the whole of the current fiscal year, would yield an income of nearly three hundred and seventy-eight million dollars.

FRENCH TROOPS IN MEXICO.—The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger says the proposed removal of the French troops from Mexico is based on the condition that our government will guarantee that Maximilian shall not be disturbed in his present position, but that he will be left to carry out his plans for the establishment of the empire on a durable basis.

METEORS.—Professor Newton of Yale College, writing to the New Haven Register, says that he, with three other gentlemen, saw from one of the towers of Alumni Hall, on Monday morning, in one hour and fifty minutes, commencing at five minutes before four o'clock, four hundred and thirty shooting stars. He says three hundred and sixty of them moved in paths diverging from the constellation Leo, and are therefore presumed to belong to the November group. The remaining seventy were moving in other paths, and are such as we see every night.

A large proportion of the meteors left phosphorescent trains. Three or four of these trains lasted over a minute. One star, which appeared to explode with a splendid green flame, left a track, which slowly shortened itself and floated away to the north, curling itself up into a crescent. The motion was not rapid to the eye, but as the train was probably as much as seventy miles high, the wind which carried it must have been blowing fifty or one hundred miles an hour. He expected to see as many more next morning if the clouds did not prevent.

PRUNE GRAPE VINES NOW.—The books generally advise winter pruning, or during the month of February. The objections to that season are, the work is liable to run into March, which does not allow time for the cut to become dry enough to check the flow of sap a little later, the weather is apt to be cold, rendering it uncomfortable, besides, the wood is frozen much of the time, in which state it ought not to be disturbed. There is sufficient leisure now, the vines are pliable and can be handled at will, while the mild weather will dry and harden the cuts so that there will be no bleeding in spring. A pair of pruning shears will be found very convenient in making the cuts—in fact, they are almost indispensable to the horticulturist in trimming his shrubbery roses, honeysuckles, blackberries, etc., in addition to the grape vines.—Ex.

IMPORTANT FACT.—A letter from Paris to a New York contemporary, in speaking of the cholera in France, and particularly in the capital of that country, states the fact as an important one, and one which carries immense weight, that, with the cholera deaths at near a hundred a day in Paris, the total bill of mortality is not increased, the reason being that people take proper care of themselves, and the other ordinary maladies which prey upon human life are not developed. Thus, if people were to eat correctly, clothe themselves correctly, avoid currents of air and sudden transitions from hot to cold, the mortality of a city of two millions of inhabitants might be reduced something approaching to a hundred per cent., or three-fourths its ordinary mortality.

ITEMS.

☞ It appears that those who have suffered most from cholera in Paris are the ragmen and the street-sweepers. On the former class it has fallen so heavily that there is some intention of suppressing the trade altogether. It is said that one hundred and fifteen thousand persons fled from Paris within ten days to avoid the epidemic.

☞ In a Fenian book found in Tyrone, Ireland, besides a list of names, was the following toast: "Here's to ——. Long may he live; may he live till he sees chapels built ten miles long, and seven broad—built with Protestant bones, thatched with ministers' skins, whitewashed with their blood, and their backbones for scrapers at the doors."

☞ The leaves of the elder, if strewn among corn or other grain when it is put into the bin, will effectually preserve it from the ravages of the weevil. The juice will also kill bed bugs and magots. Insects never touch elder bushes. The leaves of the elder scattered over cabbages, cucumbers, squashes and other plants subject to the ravages of insects, effectually shield them.

☞ The cholera was brought to New York in 1848 by the steamer New York, which arrived at that port on Nov. 9th, with 400 passengers from Havre. By a singular coincidence, it is again introduced there in the same month, and by a similar steamer, coming from the same port.

☞ The Russian papers announce that the cholera, which appeared two months since in the southern provinces of the empire, is advancing north; and, notwithstanding the cold weather, it has arrived at Berdytchen, in Russian Poland, a town of forty thousand souls, mostly Jews.

☞ Some of the principal New York hotels talk of raising the price of board to $6 per day. There are families in the Fifth avenue who give $500 or $600 a week for their mere lodging and boarding privilege, while their "extras" will reach $300 or $400 more.

☞ A middle aged man was drugged while on the cars between New York and Bridgeport, and robbed of $1200 in gold. He had recently arrived from England, and was en route to Boston to meet his wife. The money he had with him was all he possessed.

☞ Another great artesian well, flowing 200,000 gallons daily, was struck at Chicago last week. Its diameter is five inches, though the intention is to enlarge it to twenty inches, at which size it will have a discharge capacity of 18,000,000 gallons daily.

☞ The citizens of Matamoras are already in a starving condition, and the imperial troops are but little better off. Many of the late Southern officers are fighting with the liberals.

☞ During the three months ending Oct. 31, the police made twenty-two thousand two hundred and eighty-four arrests in New York and Brooklyn.

☞ The whole of Manhattan Island, on which stands the city of New York, was once purchased by one Peter Minuit for twenty-four dollars.

To Anti-Tobacco Men—Prize Tracts.

The Managers of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church wish to procure three superior original tracts on tobacco; one on the physical and moral effects of its use, for general circulation; another, addressed to ministers; and still another for boys. To secure this end, it is desirable to offer liberal premiums to qualified writers for the three best tracts that may be offered in competition for prizes.

For various reasons the Board did not think it best to draw on its regular income for these proposed premiums. It was of the opinion that the friends of the tobacco-reform would cheerfully contribute a special fund for that purpose. Two hundred and fifty dollars, will be needed. As soon as that sum is placed in the hands of its treasurer, the Board will offer a prize of $100 for the best tract, not exceeding thirty-two 12mo. pages, on the first point named above; and $75 each for the best tracts, not exceeding twenty-four pages each, on the other two points. The prizes to be awarded by a competent committee to be hereafter appointed.

If, therefore, the friends of tobacco reform wish such premiums offered and such tracts produced and published, they can accomplish their wishes by sending in their contributions. Messrs. E. H. Brown, W. H. Dikeman, and C. C. North have already contributed $25 each. We need $175 more. Will the anti-tobacco men give it? If so, let them send such sums as they please to donate for this purpose to Rev. James Porter, 200 Mulberry Street, New York, immediately. Should more than the amount named be sent in, the surplus will be expended in the gratuitous circulation of the tracts, especially of the one appealing to the ministry. Anti-tobacco man, send in your money directly!

Help, Brethren!

The church in Biddeford, Me., believing in the speedy advent of our Savior, and having struggled hard to sustain a meeting, so that the people shall hear the doctrine of Jesus' second advent, have decided to build them a house for that purpose, as they cannot sustain their meetings and pay the amount of rent which they will have to pay the coming year, all of them being poor, and would thankfully receive any assistance which any one would feel a privilege to render. Now, dear brethren, you who can, help this church, for they are worthy of your assistance.

For the World's Crisis.

The sorrows of earth are thickening around me,
And I sigh for the rest of that happy land,
So long ago promised the faithful and holy,
Prepared by the Savior's bounteous hand.

How frail is our hold of the treasures earth gives us,
Blighted, they wither and die in a day;
No pleasures terrestrial are pure and lasting,
On every thing earthly is written decay.

How many a widow and lone homeless orphan
Are mourning for joys that forever have fled,
And parents are weeping o'er hopes that lie buried
With the young and beautiful early dead.

My mind oft will wander to yonder lone graveyard,
Where the soft sun rays pitying abide,
And mournfully lingers, for there in death's slumber
My two darling children lie side by side.

And while I am mourning for loved ones departed,
I shrink from the sorrows that yet may impend,
And long for the dawn of that glorious morning
When saints immortal to Christ will ascend.

When I think of the precious promises given
By Him who hath suffered and died for me,
And the blessed support I received from Heaven
While passing affliction's turbulent sea;

Then I know that He who provides for the raven,
And numbers the hairs of each chosen one,
Will safely conduct me into the blest haven,
The warfare ended, the victory won.

THE OLD ERROR REPEATED.

THOUGHTS FOR CHRISTIANS TO CONSIDER.

"CHRIST IS ALL AND IN ALL." So wrote the inspired Paul. And another apostle says, "There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." It is, therefore, a matter of the utmost practical moment to have right views of Christ, and his relations to the children of men.

The two great central facts in the Biblical account of Christ are his two advents. With these two important facts are connected all the curses and blessings of God's ancient people and of the world. The one conducts to Bethlehem's manger and Calvary's cross; and the other to the clouds of heaven and the New Jerusalem. Connected with the first advent we have the rejection of God's ancient people, the Jews, and their dispersion, under God's scathing judgments, among all nations; the preaching of the gospel as a witness to all people; the calling of the Gentiles; and the gathering out of the world a people for the Lord, to be his kings and his priests in "the world to come." Connected with Christ's second advent we have the glorious gathering and restoration of "the outcasts of Israel and the dispersed of Judah," the pouring out of the vials of wrath upon the unbelieving and idolatrous christian nations, and the setting up of Christ's kingdom on the earth. Correct views of the manner and object of these two advents of Christ are necessary to a right appreciation and enjoyment of Christ as the Savior.

A striking lesson on this subject may be found in the case of the Jews, in regard to the first advent. They believed that the promised Messiah would come. It was universally admitted that he would come. Many devout people believed that the time for his appearing had arrived. The Scriptures had plainly announced the state and condition of things amid which he would appear. Many believed these announcements, and were anxiously waiting for his appearing. But many looked only for a triumphing Messiah, who was to deliver them from their oppression, and overlooked the manner and object of the first advent. They looked for the immediate realization of the Psalmist's declaration: "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." They looked for him as a Prince and Ruler who would give great honor to the nation, and at once smite their enemies, "assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather the dispersed of Judah." They looked for an immediate universal reign, in which he should take "the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." They thought their own sacred hills would at once be made the scene and centre of his universal triumphs, because it had been written, "He shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously"; and "the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High."

Such seems to have been the almost universal opinion and belief among the Jews, at that time, in regard to the manner and object of Messiah's coming. They expected a Messiah of noble and princely estate, and surrounded by external pomp and power, such as they thought became the Son of David. And they were not wrong in their conceptions of the coming Messiah. All this, and much more, had been predicted of him. But their great error was that they looked only at results, and not at the means. They were so absorbed with the idea of what they should realize in the glories of the mount upon which Messiah is to reign "before his ancients gloriously," that they entirely lost sight of the deep, dark valley that lay between them and that mount. They failed to perceive that the same prophecies which predicted Messiah's triumph and reign also predicted his sufferings and death. They would not believe that the way to the mount of glory, and that even for Messiah, was to be through the valley of humiliation. They forgot that, whilst it was appointed unto him to reign, it also behooved him to suffer and to die. They were so anxious to be delivered from the Roman yoke, and have the palmy days of David and Solomon restored, that they were offended at the manger and the cross. Their great eagerness for the expected deliverance blinded their eyes to the prophet's words that Messiah was to be "as a root out of dry ground," "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." They were so filled with the glory which God had promised to the house of Israel through him, that they failed to see in their sacrifices and ceremonies the types of a better sacrifice, and that the blood which flowed from their altars pointed to the precious blood of Jesus, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." They failed to comprehend that, long before the predicted glory, Messiah should first spend a life of toil, and poverty, and wretchedness, and submit to the cruelties of his enemies, be nailed to the tree of crucifixion, and "cut off" for the sins of the world. And by failing to comprehend and believe ALL that the prophets had written concerning the promised Deliverer, they failed of a deliverer entirely, and rejected the only Messiah. Though "he came to his own, his own received him not"; and for this their house was "left unto them desolate," and for eighteen hundred years they have been suffering the judgments of God, scattered among all nations, their very name a by-word and reproach.

But shall we reproach the Jews for this, their error, in regard to the manner and object of the Savior's first advent? "Let him that is without sin, cast the first stone." Many professing christians are guilty of the same error, in another direction. How many spiritualize and allegorize away some of the most solemn and positive declarations, which are as plain and straightforward as those by which the coming of the Messiah, as a sufferer, was announced to the Jews! There are those who preach the doctrines of Redemption, Repentance, and Faith, very earnestly, who yet hate and condemn the great doctrine of Christ's Second Personal Advent and Reign, and warn their hearers against it as a pernicious heresy. And yet there is no truth more clearly and fully announced in the Scriptures than this. And are not such doing the very thing for which they condemn the Jews? Notwithstanding their zeal and sincerity for other truths, they preach only half a gospel, and hold up to the worship and faith of their people only half a Christ.

The minds of the Jews were so occupied with the glories of Messiah's reign and triumphs, that they overlooked his sufferings and death, and hence would not receive him as the promised Messiah; and so many christians confined themselves so entirely to what the Jews stumbled at, as to look only at the humiliation and the cross, whilst they set aside the crown and the throne, and are as much offended at them as the Jews at the humility and the cross.

And whence is this? Not from any uncertainty or indefiniteness in the manner in which the triumph is announced; for the Scriptures are just as clear, full and distinct on this as on any doctrine they contain. It comes from a false system of spiritualizing and allegorizing the word of God, as the Jewish mistake came from a like perversion of God's plain records. It is high time, however, that we cease to tamper with the word of God, by forcing upon it meanings which it was never intended to teach, and to be assured that the Bible means just what it says, and says just what it means. Our only safety is in interpreting unfulfilled Scripture in the light of Scripture already fulfilled. As to those numerous curses which the God of Jacob pronounced upon the rebellious Jews, were they not all brought upon them literally? Who, then, has the right to say that the blessings which the same God has promised to bestow upon these same people will not also be fulfilled in the same literal way? Or does God literally fulfill his curses, and his blessings only spiritually? When God threatened to scatter the children of Israel among all nations, and make them a by-word and a reproach among all people, did he not execute his threat literally? And if the scattering and reproach was literal, why will not also the gathering and blessing be? If the pulling down of their beloved Zion was a literal pulling down, will not the promised building up also be literal? If the threatened rejection of Israel was a literal rejection, will not the promised restoration also be a literal restoration?

And what is true of those solemn declarations in regard to the Jews, is also true of those passages which refer to the manner and object of Christ's two advents. The predictions concerning the one must be fulfilled the same as those concerning the other. Christ's first advent was literal, visible, and personal, fulfilling the very letter of prophecy. How dare we then suppose that the second advent will be spiritual only, especially when it is affirmed that it will be as literal, visible, personal as the first? (Acts 1: 9–11.) At Christ's first advent, every prediction, even to the dividing of his garments, and casting lots for his seamless coat, was literally fulfilled; and how can it be possible that the predictions relating to his second coming will not also be fulfilled in the same literal manner? The shame was all literal and visible, and so also must be the exaltation and glory. What right have we to say that Judah, Israel, Zion, and Jerusalem mean any thing else than Judah, Israel, Zion, etc.? And yet, alas! how is such language turned and misapplied! The error of the Jews was in thinking too exclusively of Messiah's reign and glory; ours is in thinking too exclusively of Christ's sufferings and humiliation. And if it was a fatal error in the Jews to dwell too exclusively upon the predicted triumphs, ignoring the intervening sufferings, may it not be an error equally fatal to us to dwell upon the accomplished humiliation and ignominy, to the rejection of the true doctrine concerning the kingdom? The Jews ignored the cross; but do not the great mass of professing christians equally ignore the crown? Is it not the practise of many to interpret the Scriptures referring to the first advent of Christ literally, and those referring to the second advent spiritually? If this is understanding "all that the prophets have spoken" about the first advent, it is certainly very far from understanding "all that the prophets have spoken" about the second. If we are right in understanding those scriptures literally which speak of the humiliation, sufferings, and ascension of Christ, we certainly cannot be right in interpreting those respecting his second coming and reign in any other way.—Prophetic Times

For the World's Crisis.

CONSCIENTIOUS THOUGHTS.

Dear reader, I will give you here a few brief thoughts concerning the spirit and power of God, for your meditation. In the true sense of God's word, mankind are slow to think, or more especially to meditate upon the source from whence they came or from whom they sprang. In other words, who made them, or what spirit brought them into existence. We are informed by the Scriptures of truth, that God, by his Spirit and power created all things, both animate and inanimate. That he created man in his own image, or likeness. That is to say, in my opinion, God created man superior in knowledge and intellect, more like himself than any living thing he had yet created upon the face of the earth.

Now it would be well for us to notice here, that man has fallen from his first estate by transgressing the law of God—by partaking of the forbidden fruit. Yet God leaves us not in this fallen and distressing condition without a remedy. God, through his infinite goodness and mercy, has given us a revelation whereby we can be restored. But men in general have fallen so low by reason of sin and transgression, that they give but little heed to what has been revealed for their best good. They give not the Spirit of Wisdom that preferment it deserves, and thus they fall short of that happiness the willing and obedient enjoy. Now in respect to the Spirit of God, we will notice what Christ said to his beholders when he arose from the tomb: I am not a spirit, as ye suppose me to be, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have. Therefore I conclude that God, who was in existence from all eternity, hath neither flesh nor bones like unto man, who was made from the dust of the earth; yet the Spirit of Wisdom, the Spirit of God, hath power to create and power to destroy.

I fully believe that God gives to man ofttimes, presentiments and revelation of things present and things yet to come. For the spirit that gives us our thoughts reveals to us many things that are essential for us to know. This I can affirm by experience. However, I have no belief in what is called Spiritualism at the present day. I have no belief that disembodied spirits, who have left their bodies and organs of speech in the grave, can come back and deliver messages of any kind whatever to the living here on earth, as the Spiritualists pretend to believe.

We find many passages in Scripture which must destroy the system of Spiritualism. We must confess that there are in the class of Spiritualists those who write high swelling words, so "if it were possible," they would "deceive the very elect." They mix truth and error so artfully, and in such an absurd way, it would puzzle a logician to separate them. Therefore we should be very cautious how we receive them.

There is one thing more among the Spiritualists which demands our caution. There are jugglers among them, who are sponging money from their dupes without the least benefit to them whatever. Those we ought to avoid as we would a venomous usurper. They are like snakes in the grass; whenever they can charm a victim they bite him like an adder, and sting him like a serpent. May we be able to discern the spirit of God and the spirit of demons, that we may choose the good and denounce and shun the evil.

Fisherville, N. H. J. ELKINS.

TO A YOUNG CHRISTIAN.

Do not imagine that, having obtained a hope of salvation, and having made a profession of that hope before men, you have little to do. Your parents and your pastor will be apt to have the feeling that their work for you is well nigh done, and will perhaps leave you to the sunshine and showers of heaven. Should this be so, there will be then the more need that you look well to yourself. There are several points which demand your earnest attention.

In the first place, you want to be a Bible Christian. Now do not look to members of the church in order to find out what that is; go straight to the Bible. There you read, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, cannot be my disciple."—Luke 14: 33. "If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." "This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Matt. 22: 38, 39. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5: 48. "Reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 17.

The 12th chapter of Romans, the 13th chapter of the first of Corinthians, and the sermon on the Mount, give a full length portraiture of the Bible christian. No doubt, you have read them many times; but let me ask you to read them again, as an answer to the inquiry,—"What is it to be a Bible christian?" You see what you have undertaken to do,—nothing less than to live up to these requirements. Those vows which you lately uttered, in the house of God, in the presence of men and angels, implied all this. Perhaps, after reading these Scriptures carefully, you are ready to shrink back, and to say, "How can I undertake to come up to so high a standard? If I take these passages literally, and really go about obeying them to the letter, I shall certainly be attempting more than the church expects of me."

You certainly will, for the standard of piety in the church now is very low, as you may see by comparing it with the church as it was in the days of the apostles. She lost almost every thing during the dark ages, and as yet has recovered herself but in part. Therefore it will never do to ask the church what you ought to be.

You see these passages, and the whole spirit of the Bible, demand an entire consecration to the Lord, of all you have, and all you are, for time and eternity. This can imply nothing less than the distinct recognition, at all times, of the fact that every power of the soul and body, every moment of your time, every talent and gift, all your property, all your influence, all your knowledge, and all the objects of your affection, belong to God, and are to be held only as his, and for his service, with a perfect willingness on your part to relinquish any or all of them, whenever they shall be called for. It implies that you are ready to suffer all the will of God, and equally ready to be every moment doing all his will, and that you no longer allow any degree of self-will, or any form of self-seeking, and that you are actuated, everywhere and at all times, by the one great idea of pleasing God.

Perhaps you admit that this is your reasonable service, but fear to venture upon an act so solemn, lest you should not be able to live up to it. Many halt here a long time, but it is not a good place to stop. It was by an unconditional surrender that you found pardon and peace at first, and if you have not backslidden, no difficulty will be felt except that which arises from your now having a fuller perception of what is implied in consecration, with, perhaps, a greater sense of your own weakness, and a stronger appreciation of the power of your spiritual enemies. It is true that you are weak, very weak, and your enemies are strong. At the period of your conversion, you, perhaps, did not perceive, that if you spent time, or money, or talents, simply to please yourself and others, it was robbing God; that if you felt any thing different from cheerful acquiescence under painful dispensations of Providence, or indulged yourself in a little sin, or in the neglect of any duty; if you failed to listen to the suggestions of the Spirit, or, hearing, failed to obey promptly and joyfully in all things; if you indulged selfishness in any form—the form of the appetite, propensities, affections, or self-will; if you allowed yourself to feel that any possession, any earthly good—health, friends, home, or any thing else—was essential to your happiness; if you were not willing to live in any way, and die at any time God should appoint, the consecration was not entire.

But now you see this plainly, and shrink from a distinct renewal of your consecration. But a moment's reflection will convince you that it will not do to stop here; for how can you consistently retain the hope that you are a christian, unless you live up to the light you have? . . . . Therefore, necessity is laid upon you to go forward at once in this act of renewed consecration. But you say, "How can I undertake so much?" Venture forward, and God will meet you. "Give all and take all." Lay all on the altar, and he will enable you to keep it there. Be not afraid,—only believe. Yield up your whole being to the control of your Savior, and he will accept and bless it, and do every thing in, for, and by you, exceeding abundantly above all you can now ask or think. As soon as you take this important step, you will find yourself no longer a servant, but a child. The promises will be yours, and the Holy Ghost will come and abide with you.—Friend of Virtue.

"BECAME GREAT."—Dan. 8: 4.

It is said the ram began pushing before he became great, and continued to push until that end was accomplished; and that no other means is revealed by which he became great but by pushing. It is true that the time when the ram "became great" was after the "pushing"; for the time when Abraham became "great" in acts of kindness towards "the Jews," was after the decree for the slaughter of all of Daniel's people. Esther 10: 3. And it is a little remarkable that of all the kings of Persia, this Ahasuerus, or Artaxerxes, is the only one that is called "great." In the Chronicle of the seventy seigniors, he is called "Artaxerxes Ahasuerus the Great" (Times of Daniel p. 236); also in the apocryphal book of Esther he is called "Artaxerxes the Great," and distinguished as "the great king Artaxerxes."—Chap. 11: 1, and 13: 1.

But so far from its being revealed in the prophecy that the pushing was the "means" of his becoming great, this would appear impossible; for before the greatness alluded to in the prophecy, we find him pushing with such resistless power that "no living might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand"; hence could not have been less than great in power; and if already great, he could not in this sense, that is, in power, become great. He may have become greater, but impossible to become what he already was; and that which Daniel saw, was not that he became greater, but "great"; and this greatness was not by the means of his "pushing"; for the horns being already high, waxed no higher. To convey the idea that some would have this text teach, it should read thus:—I saw the ram pushing, and when he "became great," "no beast might stand before him." As it now stands, it would appear impossible to apply it to a pushing against kingdoms; that is, without contradicting the express word of God; for while in verse fourth we read, "no beast might stand before him," from verse seven we learn that "there was no power in the ram to stand before" the goat. Now why place a construction upon it that conflicts with the holy Scriptures? why not take it in its plain, literal, and obvious meaning?

For the World's Crisis.

A SHORT SERMON.

"Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."—MAL. 3: 13.

In this verse there are three points to be considered, viz:—

1. Who shall return and discern between the righteous and wicked?

2. When are they to return and discern the difference between them?

3. What will be the difference in the reward of the two classes?

1. The class represented by the pronoun "ye" is evidently the wicked. This may be clearly seen by carefully reading the chapter from the thirteenth verse. Here God says to a class of sinful men, "Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord of hosts. Yet ye say, what have we said so much against thee? Ye have said, It is vain to serve God; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts." Here the wicked say, "It is vain to serve God," and there is no use in religion, or to keep the ordinances of God.

In the fifteenth verse, the prophet speaks of things as they are among the wicked. "And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered." Then in the sixteenth verse, another class are spoken of by a pronoun in the third person, and verse seventeen as well. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." In these two verses God speaks of the righteous. Then in the eighteenth verse he speaks to the wicked, the same class to whom he speaks in verses thirteen and fourteen, representing them by the same pronoun "ye." The wicked have said it is vain and unprofitable to serve God, but the Lord informs them that the time will come when they shall see things in a different light; they shall "return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not." They will then see that there is an exceeding great reward for those who have feared God and thought upon his name and served him, but a strange punishment for the workers of iniquity.

2. To what point of time does the adverb "then" point in my text; or when shall the wicked return and discern their great mistake?

In verse seventeen the Lord says of the saints, "They shall be . . mine in that day when I make up my jewels," and in verse eighteen he says to the wicked, "Then shall ye return," etc. The jewels of the Lord will be made up or gathered when Christ shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet to gather his elect. This will be when Jesus comes with his reward with him, to render to every man as his works shall be. This is when the wicked are to return, to come again from the first death, to be raised to "shame and . . . contempt" to a resurrection of damnation. O! what shame and regret will be theirs, when they shall see how much they have lost by not serving God and keeping his ordinances, and when they shall behold the awful end to which they are condemned.

3. What will be the difference which will be discerned at that time between the righteous and the wicked—him that serveth God and him that serveth him not?

The difference referred to in the text is evidently one of profit and loss. The position of the wicked is, that there is nothing to be gained by serving God, or lost by failing to serve him. To correct this great mistake, the Lord sets before them the reward of the two classes, the final issue of the two courses. He says of those who serve him and keep his ordinances, "They shall be mine in that day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them," etc. The Lord will gather them as his jewels, and then they shall "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their father."

In Mal. 4: 2, he tells us that to those who fear his name the "Sun of righteousness shall arise," etc., and that they "shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall," or as Sawyer translates, "Ye shall go forth and bound as calves let loose from bonds." The Lord says, "I will spare them," etc. This language implies that there is some evil or punishment to come upon others, from which they shall be preserved. That from which they shall be spared is plainly brought to view in the fourth chapter; "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up . . . that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." This will be the end of the wicked, the end of those who say it is vain to serve God.

Are any who read these lines saying, by word or by practice, It is vain to serve God? Think then, I pray you, that if you do not change this opinion, and turn to Christ immediately, your eyes will be opened to see your sad mistake when it is too late to make amends. Remember godliness is great gain, "having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." F. A. BAKER.

For the World's Crisis.

DID PAUL SAY HE WANTED TO DEPART AND BE WITH CHRIST, Phil. 1: 23?—He did not. He said that he would rather Christ would return, which would be better than to live or die. He used the Greek word analusia, rendered in Luke 12: 36, return. Our translators made him say the contrary from what Paul said himself. Let us preach according to the word of God, and not after the traditions of men. J. W.

THE POPE AND THE PAPACY.

"Abandoned by all the European governments, the Court of Rome feels that it must continue its struggle alone, and it is preparing to do so with all the energy of despair. It is now organizing the Italian Catholic Association for the defense of the liberties of the Church. The statutes of the association are being drawn up at Rome. The object will be to organize the numerous clerical party in the peninsula so as to exercise a powerful and inevitable pressure at the coming election, and on the governmental machine as it now exists. Great exertions, too, are being made to obtain as many signatures as possible to the address from the Italians to the Pope, protesting against the rupture of the negotiations with Rome by the Italian government. The address is signed both in the kingdom of Italy and the Papal territory, and the priests in the neighborhood of Rome recommend the faithful from the pulpit to affix their names to it. In every small town commissioners have been appointed to receive signatures, together with subscriptions in money.

Finally, the Pope has formed a project which will cause the greatest excitement throughout the Catholic world. Pius IX was much struck by the fetes at Florence in honor of Dante, and he has resolved next year to celebrate the eighteenth secular anniversary of the martyrdom of St. Peter (crucified A. D. 66 at Rome). The Catholic bishops of the whole world are to be summoned to the canonization with which the celebration will commence, and Pius IX wishes the whole Catholic laity—that is to say, all the faithful of the five parts of the globe—to be invited. The invitations to the bishops will be sent out in November; and each bishop is, in his turn, to call upon so many of the faithful of his diocese as can do so to undertake a pilgrimage to the Eternal City. On this occasion it is certain important measures will be taken, and that an ecumenical council will be held. But where are to be lodged all the Catholics who will flock to Rome? Perhaps modern enterprise will come to the rescue, and English or French speculators will erect temporary accommodation for the faithful in the Roman Campagna."

THE NEW WIFE.

Mr. —— was a professor of religion, and was considered quite a good man. He had the misfortune to lose his wife, who was also pious. Having a large family of children he found it necessary to marry a second wife. He chose one who had moved in high life, but nearly all of whose relatives rejected the doctrines of evangelical religion.

Mr. —— did not mean to be irreligious, but he thought too much religion would not please his wife or her friends, and for this reason he neglected family worship and other christian duties.

One night a short time after their marriage, when he and his wife had retired to rest, she said to him:

"Mr. ——, I thought when I married you I was marrying a christian."

"Why, my dear wife, do you doubt my being a christian?"

"Yes sir, I do."

"What reason have I given you to think so?"

His reply was, "I thought that the reading of the Bible and prayer would be unpleasant and irksome to one who has been reared under such an influence and moved in such a circle as you have."

"Sir, you have nothing to do with all that. Your buisness is to do your duty as a christian. It is true, I have moved in such a circle as you have described; but I have been influenced by a different one. I do believe in religion, and I do love to see its professors faithful and consistent."

Her husband said to her, "As it is your wish, I will erect a family altar to-morrow morning."

"Will you wait until morning? We may both of us be in hell before that time."

"Why, my dear wife, are you willing to rise to read the Bible and pray?"

"Certainly I am."

Accordingly they arose and dressed, the husband read a portion of God's word, and knelt in prayer; and when he had prayed, his wife was ready to pray.

Their minister was afterwards inquiring of this brother how he got along with the family altar. His reply was, "By the grace of God, it has never gone down since my wife and I erected it that night."—American Messenger.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

SEA-SICKNESS.

The following excellent instruction on sea-sickness, is from Dr. A. L. Wood, written for the Herald of Health, after the Dr. had arrived in London, Eng. Those who expect to take a sea voyage will do well to save the article for their benefit.—Ed.

SEA-SICKNESS.

A large number of the passengers were sea-sick during the first part of the voyage, and some during the whole time. Judging from observation only, never having had the benefit of experience, I should say that if there is any thing that will render one perfectly wretched, it is sea-sickness. Well may it be feared more than shipwreck by those who know not how to prevent it, for while the latter seldom occurs, the former is almost universal. "Were you sea-sick?" is almost the first question asked when speaking of the voyage. "Not in the least," I always answer, "we decided before embarking that we would not be sea-sick, and having taken the necessary measures to prevent it, of course we were not." In nine cases out of ten all sickness on shipboard might be avoided, and instead of a sea voyage being regarded as something to be dreaded, and when past, to be looked upon as one of the most miserable periods of one's existence, it would be anticipated with pleasure, and remembered as one of the most pleasing episodes of the past.

"But what can you take to prevent it?" asks a would-be traveler on the "mighty deep." Take! That is the difficulty. People take too much. Take less. Is it any wonder our poor stomachs revolt when they have to take five meals a day, to say nothing about various little knicknacks between meals? When they have to take soups, fish, several kinds of meat and vegetables, puddings and pastry, crackers and cheese, fruits and nuts, spices and condiments, ales, wines, etc., at a single meal; and then take brandy, tobacco and drugs to ward off the enemy, and when in addition to all this taking, they have to take such a churning as they can get only on shipboard, I think it a case of "justifiable rebellion."

Since you desire it, I will tell you what to take. First of all take a full dose of common sense; this will enable you to live temperately before embarking, so that the stomach may be in good condition and the bowels free from obstruction. Instead of eating four or five regular meals a day, and more or less irregular ones, never take more than three, and still better if only two, and if you feel the least unpleasant sensation about the head or stomach, eat nothing at all until you recover. Live very simply and even abstemiously during the first few days, and plainly and simply during the entire voyage, avoiding all soups, gravies, fat meats, rich puddings, pastries, and the like, drinking nothing but water, and not even that during or immediately after meals. Eat but few kinds of food at a time, the fewer the better; be sure to masticate it thoroughly, and also use a large proportion of good ripe fruit.

Take especial care to avoid the impure air of the cabin or berth as much as possible, and instead spend your time on deck in the open air, and the genial rays of the sun, where the pure breezes of heaven and the bright, glorious sunshine will impart new life and vigor to your frame, paint your cheeks a rosier, healthier hue, expand and strengthen your lungs, purify your blood, and make it dance for very joy through every artery of your system. Take all the exercise you can without undue fatigue, and always, if possible, on deck. Do not be afraid of breathing. There is an abundance of good fresh air, and see to it that the lungs perform their duty.

One of the best kinds of exercise you can take is walking. Walking on land is a very good exercise, but it is much more thorough and effectual when performed on the deck of a vessel at sea, with the wind blowing briskly and when you have to keep your thoughts about you to retain your balance as the ship rolls from side to side. Always walk with your head erect and shoulders thrown well back, so that the chest shall be free and unconstrained and the lungs can act easily. If a gentlemen, you can amuse yourself by climbing the ropes and rigging, swinging by the iron rings of the main yard, etc. Whether a gentleman or lady, you can take along a copy of Prof Rathe's little "Manual of the New Gymnastics," and practise the admirable exercises therein described and illustrated.

Ladies, in consequence of their more sedentary habits, need active exercise more than gentlemen, but still they take less. To them, especially, the New Gymnastics will prove a great blessing, if they will but practise them faithfully. Always, when the weather will allow, perform the exercises on deck, but when that is impossible, you can practise them in the saloon or in your room. If you can get a few others to join with you, which you can easily do, it can be made a very interesting and amusing pastime.

Always secure the best ventilation possible during the night; rise early in the morning, bathe yourself all over, and take a long walk on deck before breakfast. Keep the mind or body occupied with reading, writing, conversation, exercise, amusement, or something of the kind.

Readers, if you will follow these directions, you will have but a small chance of being sea-sick, will enjoy the voyage exceedingly, and step on terra firma feeling stronger and healthier than when you started.

CHOLERA.

The "Asiatic cholera," as first known in this country in 1832 and 1833, is chiefly a disease prevailing in warm weather, or, rather in a warm atmosphere, for it can be created at any season, and in the coldest latitude, by combining the proper degrees of the three essential requisites, namely, moisture, vegetable decay and a regular heat exceeding eighty degrees. The great and distinguishing feature of cholera is copious, frequent, and painless discharge from the bowels of a substance almost as thin as water, with a whitish tinge, as if rice had been boiled in it, or as if a little milk had been dropped in it. When this occurs the patient soon begins to perspire profusely, the skin assumes a leaden hue, and shrivels up—the nails become blue, insufferable cramps come on, and the victim's death occurs in a few hours, with the most perfect calmness, in the fullest possession of all the faculties, and absolute freedom from every pain.

Three things ought to be known in reference to cholera by every human being.

First. The writer has never known a case in which it was not preceded, for one, two, or more days, by the bowels acting twice, or oftener, in every twenty-four hours, universally styled the "premonitory symptoms."

Second. A cure is impossible, under any conceivable circumstances, without absolute quietude of body, on a bed, for days together; the time of confinement being shortened in proportion to the promptitude with which the quietude is secured after the first action of the bowels has taken place, which gives a feeling of tiredness, and, on sitting down, a sensation of rest and satisfaction.

Third. When the patient ceases to urinate he begins to die, and its resumption is a certain index of recovering health, always and infallible.

One of the usual attendants of an attack of cholera is an unconquerable tendency to vomit. The very instant anything reaches the stomach, even if it is but cold water, it is ejected; the mildest food meets the same fate, in such cases; much less will medicine find a lodgment, except one, and that it is impossible to vomit up if it once reaches its destination. That medicine has no taste; it is small in bulk; will retain its virtues for a quarter of a century, as the writer knows by personal experience and repeated observation. Unless it is in the very last stages, it is believed capable of arresting the disease in nine cases out of ten—a pill made up of ten grains of calomel with a little gum water. If the symptoms do not abate in two hours, double the dose, and let it work itself off. Do nothing else, but let the patient be quiet, and eat all the ice he can possibly want.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE BEST BED.

A feather bed is ruinous to health. A mattress is better, but in the course of a generation or two, either will become considerably loaded with the emanations from the bodies of those who sleep on them. When we consider the immense amount of animal refuse which is constantly escaping from the pores of the skin, the conviction is forced upon us, that what we sleep on breeds purification once in a while, just as the clothes we wear have need to be taken to the washtub. A straw bed is better than a mattrass, for we can throw the straw away and the expense is not heavy. But nice and clean as a straw bed is, it has a troublesome rattle, while it is new, which to some persons, is suggestive of ghosts or midnight robbers. A light, elastic plank is very pleasant, if supported at the ends, and covered with a blanket. Sleeping on the floor is pleasanter than it seems, and there is no danger of breaking one's bones by tumbling out of the bed. Many of our soldiers have found sleeping in snow-drifts or mud-puddles to agree with them; and it is certain that a mud-puddle in pure atmosphere is a more wholesome sleeping accommodation than the most luxurious bed in an unventilated chamber.

But of all beds ever invented, the best, most wholesome, and perhaps the cheapest, is the hammock. You need no bedstead, no cumbrous trappings of any kind. You can lie at perfect ease in it, all the "making of the bed" that is necessary, being to hang it up, and to put a blanket or sheet into it, as you prefer. It should be well hung on two stout wrought iron hooks, which are securely fastened into the wall on opposite sides of the room. If you want to rock yourself, as you rock your baby in the cradle, you can do it with no trouble all. There is none of that feeling of unventilated closeness, which there is about a feather bed, for the whole concern is as open as a shad net. There is no fear of vermin taking up their lodgings in it, for every shred of it is exposed to view, and there is no room for the creatures to hide. There is no difficulty about cleaning it, for you can dip it into a bucket of scalding water. Nor is there any trouble in moving it, for when it is rolled up and tied, the bundle is no larger than your hat.

Anybody who will try a hammock for a few nights will wonder that they ever could enjoy the ponderous old thing known as bed and bedstead. Try it.

THE NECESSITY OF EXERCISE.—The benefits of exercise to those whose occupation does not lead them to make any physical exertion, cannot be too highly estimated. The body must undergo a certain amount of fatigue to preserve its natural strength, and maintain all the muscles and organs in proper vigor. This activity equalizes the circulation, and distributes the blood more effectually through every part. Cold feet, or a chill anywhere, shows that the circulation is languid there. The muscles during exercise press on the veins and help forward the current by quickening every vessel into activity. The valves of the heart are in this way aided in the work of sending on this stream, and relieved of a certain amount of labor. When exercise is neglected, the blood gathers too much around the central region, and the oppression about the heart, difficulty of breathing, anxiety and heaviness, are evidence of this stagnation.

FARMERS HEALTHIER THAN PROFESSIONAL MEN.—1. They work more, and develop all the leading muscles of the body. 2. They take their exercise in the open air, and thus breathe a greater amount of oxygen. 3. Their food and drinks are commonly less adulterated, and far more simple. 4. They do not overwork their brain as much as industrious professional men do. 5. They take their sleep commonly during the hours of darkness, and do not try to turn day into night. 6. They are not commonly so ambitious, and do not wear themselves out so rapidly in the fierce contest of rivalry. 7. Their pleasures are more simple, and less exhausting.

SUBSTITUTE FOR COFFEE.—Take any quantity of Indian meal, moisten with molasses, (sugar is best), rub it well together, then brown in the oven, or otherwise, like coffee, brown it well; put in as much as you like in your coffee pot and boil. The above is much more wholesome than coffee, and has a rich look and taste. It is better than cold drink for the health. J. W.

For the World's Crisis.

The sorrows of earth are thickening around me,
And I sigh for the rest of that happy land,
So long ago promised the faithful and holy,
Prepared by the Savior's bounteous hand.

How frail is our hold of the treasures earth gives us,
Blighted, they wither and die in a day;
No pleasures terrestrial are pure and lasting,
On every thing earthly is written decay.

How many a widow and lone homeless orphan
Are mourning for joys that forever have fled,
And parents are weeping o'er hopes that lie buried
With the young and beautiful early dead.

My mind oft will wander to yonder lone graveyard,
Where the soft sun rays pitying abide,
And mournfully lingers, for there in death's slumber
My two darling children lie side by side.

And while I am mourning for loved ones departed,
I shrink from the sorrows that yet may impend,
And long for the dawn of that glorious morning
When saints immortal to Christ will ascend.

When I think of the precious promises given
By Him who hath suffered and died for me,
And the blessed support I received from Heaven
While passing affliction's turbulent sea;

Then I know that He who provides for the raven,
And numbers the hairs of each chosen one,
Will safely conduct me into the blest haven,
The warfare ended, the victory won.

THE OLD ERROR REPEATED.

THOUGHTS FOR CHRISTIANS TO CONSIDER.

"Christ is all and in all." So wrote the inspired Paul. And another apostle says, "There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." It is, therefore, a matter of the utmost practical moment to have right views of Christ, and his relations to the children of men.

The two great central facts in the Biblical account of Christ are his two advents. With these two important facts are connected all the curses and blessings of God's ancient people and of the world. The one conducts to Bethlehem's manger and Calvary's cross; and the other to the clouds of heaven and the New Jerusalem. Connected with the first advent we have the rejection of God's ancient people, the Jews, and their dispersion, under God's scathing judgments, among all nations; the preaching of the gospel as a witness to all people; the calling of the Gentiles; and the gathering out of the world a people for the Lord, to be his kings and his priests in "the world to come." Connected with Christ's second advent we have the glorious gathering and restoration of "the outcasts of Israel and the dispersed of Judah," the pouring out of the vials of wrath upon the unbelieving and idolatrous christian nations, and the setting up of Christ's kingdom on the earth. Correct views of the manner and object of these two advents of Christ are necessary to a right appreciation and enjoyment of Christ as the Savior.

A striking lesson on this subject may be found in the case of the Jews, in regard to the first advent. They believed that the promised Messiah would come. It was universally admitted that he would come. Many devout people believed that the time for his appearing had arrived. The Scriptures had plainly announced the state and condition of things amid which he would appear. Many believed these announcements, and were anxiously waiting for his appearing. But many looked only for a triumphing Messiah, who was to deliver them from their oppression, and overlooked the manner and object of the first advent. They looked for the immediate realization of the Psalmist's declaration: "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." They looked for him as a Prince and Ruler who would give great honor to the nation, and at once smite their enemies, "assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather the dispersed of Judah." They looked for an immediate universal reign, in which he should take "the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." They thought their own sacred hills would at once be made the scene and centre of his universal triumphs, because it had been written, "He shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously"; and "the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High."

Such seems to have been the almost universal opinion and belief among the Jews, at that time, in regard to the manner and object of Messiah's coming. They expected a Messiah of noble and princely estate, and surrounded by external pomp and power, such as they thought became the Son of David. And they were not wrong in their conceptions of the coming Messiah. All this, and much more, had been predicted of him. But their great error was that they looked only at results, and not at the means. They were so absorbed with the idea of what they should realize in the glories of the mount upon which Messiah is to reign "before his ancients gloriously," that they entirely lost sight of the deep, dark valley that lay between them and that mount. They failed to perceive that the same prophecies which predicted Messiah's triumph and reign also predicted his sufferings and death. They would not believe that the way to the mount of glory, and that even for Messiah, was to be through the valley of humiliation. They forgot that, whilst it was appointed unto him to reign, it also behooved him to suffer and to die. They were so anxious to be delivered from the Roman yoke, and have the palmy days of David and Solomon restored, that they were offended at the manger and the cross. Their great eagerness for the expected deliverance blinded their eyes to the prophet's words that Messiah was to be "as a root out of dry ground," "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." They were so filled with the glory which God had promised to the house of Israel through him, that they failed to see in their sacrifices and ceremonies the types of a better sacrifice, and that the blood which flowed from their altars pointed to the precious blood of Jesus, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." They failed to comprehend that, long before the predicted glory, Messiah should first spend a life of toil, and poverty, and wretchedness, and submit to the cruelties of his enemies, be nailed to the tree of crucifixion, and "cut off" for the sins of the world. And by failing to comprehend and believe ALL that the prophets had written concerning the promised Deliverer, they failed of a deliverer entirely, and rejected the only Messiah. Though "he came to his own, his own received him not"; and for this their house was "left unto them desolate," and for eighteen hundred years they have been suffering the judgments of God, scattered among all nations, their very name a by-word and reproach.

But shall we reproach the Jews for this, their error, in regard to the manner and object of the Savior's first advent? "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone." Many professing christians are guilty of the same error, in another direction. How many spiritualize and allegorize away some of the most solemn and positive declarations, which are as plain and straightforward as those by which the coming of the Messiah, as a sufferer, was announced to the Jews! There are those who preach the doctrines of Redemption, Repentance, and Faith, very earnestly, who yet hate and condemn the great doctrine of Christ's Second Personal Advent and Reign, and warn their hearers against it as a pernicious heresy. And yet there is no truth more clearly and fully announced in the Scriptures than this. And are not such doing the very thing for which they condemn the Jews? Notwithstanding their zeal and sincerity for other truths, they preach only half a gospel, and hold up to the worship and faith of their people only half a Christ.

The minds of the Jews were so occupied with the glories of Messiah's reign and triumphs, that they overlooked his sufferings and death, and hence would not receive him as the promised Messiah; and so many christians confined themselves so entirely to what the Jews stumbled at, as to look only at the humiliation and the cross, whilst they set aside the crown and the throne, and are as much offended at them as the Jews at the humility and the cross.

And whence is this? Not from any uncertainty or indefiniteness in the manner in which the triumph is announced; for the Scriptures are just as clear, full and distinct on this as on any doctrine they contain. It comes from a false system of spiritualizing and allegorizing the word of God, as the Jewish mistake came from a like perversion of God's plain records. It is high time, however, that we cease to tamper with the word of God, by forcing upon it meanings which it was never intended to teach, and to be assured that the Bible means just what it says, and says just what it means. Our only safety is in interpreting unfulfilled Scripture in the light of Scripture already fulfilled. As to those numerous curses which the God of Jacob pronounced upon the rebellious Jews, were they not all brought upon them literally? Who, then, has the right to say that the blessings which the same God has promised to bestow upon these same people will not also be fulfilled in the same literal way? Or does God literally fulfill his curses, and his blessings only spiritually? When God threatened to scatter the children of Israel among all nations, and make them a by-word and a reproach among all people, did he not execute his threat literally? And if the scattering and reproach was literal, why will not also the gathering and blessing be? If the pulling down of their beloved Zion was a literal pulling down, will not the promised building up also be literal? If the threatened rejection of Israel was a literal rejection, will not the promised restoration also be a literal restoration?

And what is true of those solemn declarations in regard to the Jews, is also true of those passages which refer to the manner and object of Christ's two advents. The predictions concerning the one must be fulfilled the same as those concerning the other. Christ's first advent was literal, visible, and personal, fulfilling the very letter of prophecy. How dare we then suppose that the second advent will be spiritual only, especially when it is affirmed that it will be as literal, visible, personal as the first? (Acts 1: 9–11.) At Christ's first advent, every prediction, even to the dividing of his garments, and casting lots for his seamless coat, was literally fulfilled; and how can it be possible that the predictions relating to his second coming will not also be fulfilled in the same literal manner? The shame was all literal and visible, and so also must be the exaltation and glory. What right have we to say that Judah, Israel, Zion, and Jerusalem mean any thing else than Judah, Israel, Zion, etc.? And yet, alas! how is such language turned and misapplied! The error of the Jews was in thinking too exclusively of Messiah's reign and glory; ours is in thinking too exclusively of Christ's sufferings and humiliation. And if it was a fatal error in the Jews to dwell too exclusively upon the predicted triumphs, ignoring the intervening sufferings, may it not be an error equally fatal to us to dwell upon the accomplished humiliation and ignominy, to the rejection of the true doctrine concerning the kingdom? The Jews ignored the cross; but do not the great mass of professing christians equally ignore the crown? Is it not the practise of many to interpret the Scriptures referring to the first advent of Christ literally, and those referring to the second advent spiritually? If this is understanding "all that the prophets have spoken" about the first advent, it is certainly very far from understanding "all that the prophets have spoken" about the second. If we are right in understanding those scriptures literally which speak of the humiliation, sufferings, and ascension of Christ, we certainly cannot be right in interpreting those respecting his second coming and reign in any other way.—Prophetic Times.

CONSCIENTIOUS THOUGHTS.

Dear reader, I will give you here a few brief thoughts concerning the spirit and power of God, for your meditation. In the true sense of God's word, mankind are slow to think, or more especially to meditate upon the source from whence they came or from whom they sprang. In other words, who made them, or what spirit brought them into existence. We are informed by the Scriptures of truth, that God, by his Spirit and power created all things, both animate and inanimate. That he created man in his own image, or likeness. That is to say, in my opinion, God created man superior in knowledge and intellect, more like himself than any living thing he had yet created upon the face of the earth.

Now it would be well for us to notice here, that man has fallen from his first estate by transgressing the law of God—by partaking of the forbidden fruit. Yet God leaves us not in this fallen and distressing condition without a remedy. God, through his infinite goodness and mercy, has given us a revelation whereby we can be restored. But men in general have fallen so low, by reason of sin and transgression, that they give but little heed to what has been revealed for their best good. They give not the Spirit of Wisdom that preferment it deserves, and thus they fall short of that happiness the willing and obedient enjoy. Now in respect to the Spirit of God, we will notice what Christ said to his beholders when he arose from the tomb: I am not a spirit, as ye suppose me to be, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have. Therefore I conclude that God, who was in existence from all eternity, hath neither flesh nor bones like unto man, who was made from the dust of the earth; yet the Spirit of Wisdom, the Spirit of God, hath power to create and power to destroy.

I fully believe that God gives to man oft-times, presentiments and revelation of things present and things yet to come. For the spirit that gives us our thoughts reveals to us many things that are essential for us to know. This I can affirm by experience. However, I have no belief in what is called Spiritualism at the present day. I have no belief that disembodied spirits, who have left their bodies and organs of speech in the grave, can come back and deliver messages of any kind whatever to the living here on earth, as the Spiritualists pretend to believe.

We find many passages in Scripture which must destroy the system of Spiritualism. We must confess that there are in the class of Spiritualists those who write high swelling words, so "if it were possible," they would "deceive the very elect." They mix truth and error so artfully, and in such an absurd way, it would puzzle a logician to separate them. Therefore we should be very cautious how we receive them.

There is one thing more among the Spiritualists which demands our caution. There are jugglers among them, who are sponging money from their dupes without the least benefit to them whatever. Those we ought to avoid as we would a venomous usurper. They are like snakes in the grass; whenever they can charm a victim they bite him like an adder, and sting him like a serpent. May we be able to discern the spirit of God and the spirit of demons, that we may choose the good and denounce and shun the evil.

TO A YOUNG CHRISTIAN.

Do not imagine that, having obtained a hope of salvation, and having made a profession of that hope before men, you have little to do. Your parents and your pastor will be apt to have the feeling that their work for you is well nigh done, and will perhaps leave you to the sunshine and showers of heaven. Should this be so, there will be then the more need that you look well to yourself. There are several points which demand your earnest attention.

In the first place, you want to be a Bible Christian. Now do not look to members of the church in order to find out what that is; go straight to the Bible. There you read, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, cannot be my disciple."—Luke 14: 33. "If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." "This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Matt. 22: 38, 39. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5: 48. "Reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 17.

The 12th chapter of Romans, the 13th chapter of the first of Corinthians, and the sermon on the Mount, give a full length portraiture of the Bible christian. No doubt, you have read them many times; but let me ask you to read them again, as an answer to the inquiry,—"What is it to be a Bible christian?" You see what you have undertaken to do,—nothing less than to live up to these requirements. Those vows which you lately uttered, in the house of God, in the presence of men and angels, implied all this. Perhaps, after reading these Scriptures carefully, you are ready to shrink back, and to say, "How can I undertake to come up to so high a standard? If I take these passages literally, and really go about obeying them to the letter, I shall certainly be attempting more than the church expects of me."

You certainly will, for the standard of piety in the church now is very low, as you may see by comparing it with the church as it was in the days of the apostles. She lost almost every thing during the dark ages, and as yet has recovered herself but in part. Therefore it will never do to ask the church what you ought to be.

You see these passages, and the whole spirit of the Bible, demand an entire consecration to the Lord, of all you have, and all you are, for time and eternity. This can imply nothing less than the distinct recognition, at all times, of the fact that every power of the soul and body, every moment of your time, every talent and gift, all your property, all your influence, all your knowledge, and all the objects of your affection, belong to God, and are to be held only as his, and for his service, with a perfect willingness on your part to relinquish any or all of them, whenever they shall be called for. It implies that you are ready to suffer all the will of God, and equally ready to be every moment doing all his will, and that you no longer allow any degree of self-will, or any form of self-seeking, and that you are actuated, everywhere and at all times, by the one great idea of pleasing God.

Perhaps you admit that this is your reasonable service, but fear to venture upon an act so solemn, lest you should not be able to live up to it. Many halt here a long time, but it is not a good place to stop. It was by an unconditional surrender that you found pardon and peace at first, and if you have not backslidden, no difficulty will be felt except that which arises from your now having a fuller perception of what is implied in consecration, with, perhaps, a greater sense of your own weakness, and a stronger appreciation of the power of your spiritual enemies. It is true that you are weak, very weak, and your enemies are strong. At the period of your conversion, you, perhaps, did not perceive, that if you spent time, or money, or talents, simply to please yourself and others, it was robbing God; that if you felt any thing different from cheerful acquiescence under painful dispensations of Providence, or indulged yourself in a little sin, or in the neglect of any duty; if you failed to listen to the suggestions of the Spirit, or, hearing, failed to obey promptly and joyfully in all things; if you indulged selfishness in any form—the form of the appetite, propensities, affections, or self-will; if you allowed yourself to feel that any possession, any earthly good—health, friends, home, or any thing else—was essential to your happiness; if you were not willing to live in any way, and die at any time God should appoint, the consecration was not entire.

But now you see this plainly, and shrink from a distinct renewal of your consecration. But a moment's reflection will convince you that it will not do to stop here; for how can you consistently retain the hope that you are a christian, unless you live up to the light you have? . . . . Therefore, necessity is laid upon you to go forward at once in this act of renewed consecration. But you say, "How can I undertake so much?" Venture forward, and God will meet you. "Give all and take all." Lay all on the altar, and he will enable you to keep it there. Be not afraid,—only believe. Yield up your whole being to the control of your Savior, and he will accept and bless it, and do every thing in, for, and by you, exceeding abundantly above all you can now ask or think. As soon as you take this important step, you will find yourself no longer a servant, but a child. The promises will be yours, and the Holy Ghost will come and abide with you.—Friend of Virtue.

It is said the ram began pushing before he became great, and continued to push until that end was accomplished; and that no other means is revealed by which he became great but by pushing. It is true that the time when the ram "became great" was after the "pushing"; for the time when Abraham became "great" in acts of kindness towards "the Jews," was after the decree for the slaughter of all of Daniel's people. Esther 10: 3. And it is a little remarkable that of all the kings of Persia, this Ahasuerus, or Artaxerxes, is the only one that is called "great." In the Chronicle of the seventy seigniors, he is called "Artaxerxes Ahasuerus the Great" (Times of Daniel p. 236); also in the apocryphal book of Esther he is called "Artaxerxes the Great," and distinguished as "the great king Artaxerxes."—Chap. 11: 1, and 13: 1.

But so far from its being revealed in the prophecy that the pushing was the "means" of his becoming great, this would appear impossible; for before the greatness alluded to in the prophecy, we find him pushing with such resistless power that "no living might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand"; hence could not have been less than great in power; and if already great, he could not in this sense, that is, in power, become great. He may have become greater, but impossible to become what he already was; and that which Daniel saw, was not that he became greater, but "great"; and this greatness was not by the means of his "pushing"; for the horns being already high, waxed no higher. To convey the idea that some would have this text teach, it should read thus:—I saw the ram pushing, and when he "became great," "no beast might stand before him." As it now stands, it would appear impossible to apply it to a pushing against kingdoms; that is, without contradicting the express word of God; for while in verse fourth we read, "no beast might stand before him," from verse seven we learn that "there was no power in the ram to stand before" the goat. Now why place a construction upon it that conflicts with the holy Scriptures? why not take it in its plain, literal, and obvious meaning?

A SHORT SERMON.

"Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."—Mal. 3: 13.

In this verse there are three points to be considered, viz:—

1. Who shall return and discern between the righteous and wicked?

2. When are they to return and discern the difference between them?

3. What will be the difference in the reward of the two classes?

1. The class represented by the pronoun "ye" is evidently the wicked. This may be clearly seen by carefully reading the chapter from the thirteenth verse. Here God says to a class of sinful men, "Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord of hosts. Yet ye say, what have we said so much against thee? Ye have said, It is vain to serve God; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts." Here the wicked say, "It is vain to serve God," and there is no use in religion, or to keep the ordinances of God.

In the fifteenth verse, the prophet speaks of things as they are among the wicked. "And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered." Then in the sixteenth verse, another class are spoken of by a pronoun in the third person, and verse seventeen as well. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." In these two verses God speaks of the righteous. Then in the eighteenth verse he speaks to the wicked, the same class to whom he speaks in verses thirteen and fourteen, representing them by the same pronoun "ye." The wicked have said it is vain and unprofitable to serve God, but the Lord informs them that the time will come when they shall see things in a different light; they shall "return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not." They will then see that there is an exceeding great reward for those who have feared God and thought upon his name and served him, but a strange punishment for the workers of iniquity.

2. To what point of time does the adverb "then" point in my text; or when shall the wicked return and discern their great mistake?

In verse seventeen the Lord says of the saints, "They shall be . . mine in that day when I make up my jewels," and in verse eighteen he says to the wicked, "Then shall ye return," etc. The jewels of the Lord will be made up or gathered when Christ shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet to gather his elect. This will be when Jesus comes with his reward with him, to render to every man as his works shall be. This is when the wicked are to return, to come again from the first death, to be raised to "shame and . . . contempt" to a resurrection of damnation. O! what shame and regret will be theirs, when they shall see how much they have lost by not serving God and keeping his ordinances, and when they shall behold the awful end to which they are condemned.

3. What will be the difference which will be discerned at that time between the righteous and the wicked—him that serveth God and him that serveth him not?

The difference referred to in the text is evidently one of profit and loss. The position of the wicked is, that there is nothing to be gained by serving God, or lost by failing to serve him. To correct this great mistake, the Lord sets before them the reward of the two classes, the final issue of the two courses. He says of those who serve him and keep his ordinances, "They shall be mine in that day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them," etc. The Lord will gather them as his jewels, and then they shall "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their father."

In Mal. 4: 2, he tells us that to those who fear his name the "Sun of righteousness shall arise," etc., and that they "shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall," or as Sawyer translates, "Ye shall go forth and bound as calves let loose from bonds." The Lord says, "I will spare them," etc. This language implies that there is some evil or punishment to come upon others, from which they shall be preserved. That from which they shall be spared is plainly brought to view in the fourth chapter; "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up . . . that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." This will be the end of the wicked, the end of those who say it is vain to serve God.

Are any who read these lines saying, by word or by practice, It is vain to serve God? Think then, I pray you, that if you do not change this opinion, and turn to Christ immediately, your eyes will be opened to see your sad mistake when it is too late to make amends. Remember godliness is great gain, "having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." F. A. Baker.

For the World's Crisis.

Did Paul say he wanted to depart and be with Christ, Phil. 1: 23?—He did not. He said that he would rather Christ would return, which would be better than to live or die. He used the Greek word analusia, rendered in Luke 12: 36, return. Our translators made him say the contrary from what Paul said himself. Let us preach according to the word of God, and not after the traditions of men. J. W.

THE POPE AND THE PAPACY.

"Abandoned by all the European governments, the Court of Rome feels that it must continue its struggle alone, and it is preparing to do so with all the energy of despair. It is now organizing the Italian Catholic Association for the defense of the liberties of the Church. The statutes of the association are being drawn up at Rome. The object will be to organize the numerous clerical party in the peninsula so as to exercise a powerful and inevitable pressure at the coming election, and on the governmental machine as it now exists. Great exertions, too, are being made to obtain as many signatures as possible to the address from the Italians to the Pope, protesting against the rupture of the negotiations with Rome by the Italian government. The address is signed both in the kingdom of Italy and the Papal territory, and the priests in the neighborhood of Rome recommend the faithful from the pulpit to affix their names to it. In every small town commissioners have been appointed to receive signatures, together with subscriptions in money.

Finally, the Pope has formed a project which will cause the greatest excitement throughout the Catholic world. Pius IX was much struck by the fetes at Florence in honor of Dante, and he has resolved next year to celebrate the eighteenth secular anniversary of the martyrdom of St. Peter (crucified A. D. 66 at Rome.) The Catholic bishops of the whole world are to be summoned to the canonization with which the celebration will commence, and Pius IX wishes the whole Catholic laity—that is to say, all the faithful of the five parts of the globe—to be invited. The invitations to the bishops will be sent out in November; and each bishop is, in his turn, to call upon so many of the faithful of his diocese as can do so to undertake a pilgrimage to the Eternal City. On this occasion it is certain important measures will be taken, and that an ecumenical council will be held. But where are to be lodged all the Catholics who will flock to Rome? Perhaps modern enterprise will come to the rescue, and English or French speculators will erect temporary accommodation for the faithful in the Roman Campagna."

THE NEW WIFE.

Mr. —— was a professor of religion, and was considered quite a good man. He had the misfortune to lose his wife, who was also pious. Having a large family of children he found it necessary to marry a second wife. He chose one who had moved in high life, but nearly all of whose relatives rejected the doctrines of evangelical religion.

Mr. —— did not mean to be irreligious, but he thought too much religion would not please his wife or her friends, and for this reason he neglected family worship and other christian duties.

One night a short time after their marriage, when he and his wife had retired to rest, she said to him:

"Mr. ——, I thought when I married you I was marrying a christian."

"Why my dear wife, do you doubt my being a christian?"

"Yes sir, I do."

"What reason have I given you to think so?"

His reply was, "I thought that the reading of the Bible and prayer would be unpleasant and irksome to one who has been reared under such an influence and moved in such a circle as you have."

"Sir, you have nothing to do with all that. Your business is to do your duty as a christian. It is true, I have moved in such a circle as you have described; but I have been influenced by a different one. I do believe in religion, and I do love to see its professors faithful and consistent."

Her husband said to her, "As it is your wish, I will erect a family altar to-morrow morning."

"Will you wait until morning? We may both of us be in hell before that time."

"Why, my dear wife, are you willing to rise to read the Bible and pray?"

"Certainly I am."

Accordingly they arose and dressed, the husband read a portion of God's word, and knelt in prayer; and when he had prayed, his wife was ready to pray.

Their minister was afterwards inquiring of this brother how he got along with the family altar. His reply was, "By the grace of God, it has never gone down since my wife and I erected it that night."—American Messenger.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

SEA-SICKNESS.

The following excellent instruction on sea-sickness, is from Dr. A. L. Wood, written for the Herald of Health, after the Dr. had arrived in London, Eng. Those who expect to take a sea voyage will do well to save the article for their benefit.—Ed.

SEA-SICKNESS.

A large number of the passengers were sea-sick during the first part of the voyage, and some during the whole time. Judging from observation only, never having had the benefit of experience, I should say that if there is any thing that will render one perfectly wretched, it is sea-sickness. Well may it be feared more than shipwreck by those who know not how to prevent it, for while the latter seldom occurs, the former is almost universal. "Were you sea-sick?" is almost the first question asked when speaking of the voyage. "Not in the least," I always answer, "we decided before embarking that we would not be sea-sick, and having taken the necessary measures to prevent it, of course we were not." In nine cases out of ten all sickness on shipboard might be avoided, and instead of a sea voyage being regarded as something to be dreaded, and when past, to be looked upon as one of the most miserable periods of one's existence, it would be anticipated with pleasure, and remembered as one of the most pleasing episodes of the past.

"But what can you take to prevent it?" asks a would-be traveler on the "mighty deep." Take! That is the difficulty. People take too much. Take less. Is it any wonder our poor stomachs revolt when they have to take five meals a day, to say nothing about various little knicknacks between meals? When they have to take soups, fish, several kinds of meat and vegetables, puddings and pastry, crackers and cheese, fruits and nuts, spices and condiments, ales, wines, etc., at a single meal; and then take brandy, tobacco and drugs to ward off the enemy, and when in addition to all this taking, they have to take such a churning as they can get only on shipboard, I think it a case of "justifiable rebellion."

Since you desire it, I will tell you what to take. First of all take a full dose of common sense; this will enable you to live temperately before embarking, so that the stomach may be in good condition and the bowels free from obstruction. Instead of eating four or five regular meals a day, and more or less irregular ones, never take more than three, and still better if only two, and if you feel the least unpleasant sensation about the head or stomach, eat nothing at all until you recover. Live very simply and even abstemiously during the first few days, and plainly and simply during the entire voyage, avoiding all soups, gravies, fat meats, rich puddings, pastries, and the like, drinking nothing but water, and not even that during or immediately after meals. Eat but few kinds of food at a time, the fewer the better; be sure to masticate it thoroughly, and also use a large proportion of good ripe fruit.

Take especial care to avoid the impure air of the cabin or berth as much as possible, and instead spend your time on deck in the open air, and the genial rays of the sun, where the pure breezes of heaven and the bright, glorious sunshine will impart new life and vigor to your frame, paint your cheeks a rosier, healthier hue, expand and strengthen your lungs, purify your blood, and make it dance for very joy through every artery of your system. Take all the exercise you can without undue fatigue, and always, if possible, on deck. Do not be afraid of breathing. There is an abundance of good fresh air, and see to it that the lungs perform their duty.

One of the best kinds of exercise you can take is walking. Walking on land is a very good exercise, but it is much more thorough and effectual when performed on the deck of a vessel at sea, with the wind blowing briskly and when you have to keep your thoughts about you to retain your balance as the ship rolls from side to side. Always walk with your head erect and shoulders thrown well back, so that the chest shall be free and unconstrained and the lungs can act easily. If a gentlemen, you can amuse yourself by climbing the ropes and rigging, swinging by the iron rings of the main yard, etc. Whether a gentleman or lady, you can take along a copy of Prof. Rathe's little "Manual of the New Gymnastics," and practise the admirable exercises therein described and illustrated.

Ladies, in consequence of their more sedentary habits, need active exercise more than gentlemen, but still they take less. To them, especially, the New Gymnastics will prove a great blessing, if they will but practise them faithfully. Always, when the weather will allow, perform the exercises on deck, but when that is impossible, you can practise them in the saloon or in your room. If you can get a few others to join with you, which you can easily do, it can be made a very interesting and amusing pastime.

Always secure the best ventilation possible during the night; rise early in the morning, bathe yourself all over, and take a long walk on deck before breakfast. Keep the mind or body occupied with reading, writing, conversation, exercise, amusement, or something of the kind.

Readers, if you will follow these directions, you will have but a small chance of being sea-sick, will enjoy the voyage exceedingly, and step on terra firma feeling stronger and healthier than when you started.

CHOLERA.

The "Asiatic cholera," as first known in this country in 1832 and 1833, is chiefly a disease prevailing in warm weather, or, rather in a warm atmosphere, for it can be created at any season, and in the coldest latitude, by combining the proper degrees of the three essential requisites, namely, moisture, vegetable decay and a regular heat exceeding eighty degrees. The great and distinguishing feature of cholera is copious, frequent, and painless discharge from the bowels of a substance almost as thin as water, with a whitish tinge, as if rice had been boiled in it, or as if a little milk had been dropped in it. When this occurs the patient soon begins to perspire profusely, the skin assumes a leaden hue, and shrivels up—the nails become blue, insufferable cramps come on, and the victim's death occurs in a few hours, with the most perfect calmness, in the fullest possession of all the faculties, and absolute freedom from every pain.

Three things ought to be known in reference to cholera by every human being.

First. The writer has never known a case in which it was not preceded, for one, two, or more days, by the bowels acting twice, or oftener, in every twenty-four hours, universally styled the "premonitory symptoms."

Second. A cure is impossible, under any conceivable circumstances, without absolute quietude of body, on a bed, for days together; the time of confinement being shortened in proportion to the promptitude with which the quietude is secured after the first action of the bowels has taken place, which gives a feeling of tiredness, and, on sitting down, a sensation of rest and satisfaction.

Third. When the patient ceases to urinate he begins to die, and its resumption is a certain index of recovering health, always and infallible.

One of the usual attendants of an attack of cholera is an unconquerable tendency to vomit. The very instant anything reaches the stomach, even if it is but cold water, it is ejected; the mildest food meets the same fate in such cases; much less will medicine find a lodgment, except one, and that is, it is impossible to vomit up if it once reaches its destination. That medicine has no taste; it is small in bulk; will retain its virtues for a quarter of a century, as the writer knows by personal experience and repeated observation. Unless it is in the very last stages, it is believed capable of arresting the disease in nine cases out of ten—a pill made up of ten grains of calomel with a little gum water. If the symptoms do not abate in two hours, double the dose, and let it work itself off. Do nothing else, but let the patient be quiet, and eat all the ice he can possibly want.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE BEST BED.

A feather bed is ruinous to health. A mattress is better, but in the course of a generation or two, either will become considerably loaded with the emanations from the bodies of those who sleep on them. When we consider the immense amount of animal refuse which is constantly escaping from the pores of the skin, the conviction is forced upon us, that what we sleep on breeds purification once in a while, just as the clothes we wear have need to be taken to the washtub. A straw bed is better than a mattress, for we can throw the straw away and the expense is not heavy. But nice and clean as a straw bed is, it has a troublesome rattle, while it is new, which to some persons, is suggestive of ghosts or midnight robbers. A light, elastic plank is very pleasant, if supported at the ends, and covered with a blanket. Sleeping on the floor is pleasanter than it seems, and there is no danger of breaking one's bones by tumbling out of the bed. Many of our soldiers have found sleeping in snow-drifts or mud-puddles to agree with them; and it is certain that a mud-puddle in pure atmosphere is a more wholesome sleeping accommodation than the most luxurious bed in an unventilated chamber.

But of all beds ever invented, the best, most wholesome, and perhaps the cheapest, is the hammock. You need no bedstead, no cumbrous trappings of any kind. You can lie at perfect ease in it, all the "making of the bed" that is necessary, being to hang it up, and to put a blanket or sheet into it if you prefer. It should be well hung on two stout wrought iron hooks, which are securely fastened into the wall on opposite sides of the room. If you want to rock yourself, as you rock your baby in the cradle, you can do it with no trouble all. There is none of that feeling of unventilated closeness, which there is about a feather bed, for the whole concern is as open as a shad net. There is no fear of vermin taking up their lodgings in it, for every shred of it is exposed to view, and there is no room for the creatures to hide. There is no difficulty about cleaning it, for you can dip it into a bucket of scalding water. Nor is there any trouble in moving it, for when it is rolled up and tied, the bundle is no larger than your hat.

Anybody who will try a hammock for a few nights will wonder that they ever could enjoy the ponderous old thing known as bed and bedstead. Try it.

The Necessity of Exercise.—The benefits of exercise to those whose occupation does not lead them to make any physical exertion, cannot be too highly estimated. The body must undergo a certain amount of fatigue to preserve its natural strength, and maintain all the muscles and organs in proper vigor. This activity equalizes the circulation, and distributes the blood more effectually through every part. Cold feet, or a chill anywhere, shows that the circulation is languid there. The muscles during exercise press on the veins and help forward the current by quickening every vessel into activity. The valves of the heart are in this way aided in the work of sending on this stream, and relieved of a certain amount of labor. When exercise is neglected, the blood gathers too much around the central region, and the oppression about the heart, difficulty of breathing, anxiety and heaviness, are evidence of this stagnation.

Farmers Healthier than Professional Men.—1. They work more, and develop all the leading muscles of the body. 2. They take their exercise in the open air, and thus breathe a greater amount of oxygen. 3. Their food and drinks are commonly less adulterated, and far more simple. 4. They do not overwork their brain as much as industrious professional men do. 5. They take their rest commonly during the hours of darkness, and do not try to turn day into night. 6. They are not commonly so ambitious, and do not wear themselves out so rapidly in the fierce contest of rivalry. 7. Their pleasures are more simple, and less exhausting.

Substitute for Coffee.—Take any quantity of Indian meal, moisten with molasses, (sugar is best), rub it well together, then brown in the oven, or otherwise, like coffee; brown it well; put in as much as you like in your coffee pot and boil. The above is much more wholesome than coffee, and has a rich look and taste. It is better than cold drink for the health. J. W.

BEAT ON, BRAVE HEART!

Beat on, brave heart, beat on,
Though deep and keen the smart,
And every throb the pain,
It shall not be in vain
Thou wearest the galling chain,—
Beat on, brave heart!

Long 'gainst a fearful odds
'T would seem, of care and woe,
Thou'st struggled on, and sure
Stronger should'st be to endure
Each latest stroke, and so Beat on, beat on!

With ever active zeal
Laboreth still each foe?
Doth the strong hand of power
In darkness rule the hour?
Envy and malice low
Whisperings pour?

Know thou, O stricken heart,
That brief is Error's reign,
That cause to Truth allied,
Sacred must e'er abide,
Its every foe be slain,
Abased their pride.

Then beat thou bravely on;
The hour draws nigh,
When, ruling in thy breast,
Fair Truth shall stand confest,
In robes of pureness drest,
Exalted high!

THE PENALTY OF SIN.

"The wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6: 23.

There never was an age of more abounding light and knowledge than the present; and I am bold to affirm that there never was an age when men and the world at large were more determined to remain in darknes and error than now.

"E'en adders hear,
But turn, and dart into the dark again."

And though we are amid the light of "the time of the end" (Dan. 12: 4), yet also we are in "the last days, when" men "will not endure sound doctrine," and they "turn away their ears from the truth," and are "turned unto fables." 2 Tim. 4,

The penalty of sin is declared to be "death." But Satan from the beginning has endeavored by every possible means to deny, pervert, obscure and mistify this penalty, and he has been most remarkably successful; deceiving by his subtlety, Eve, the mother of all living, and since, most of her children, who have come to years of knowledge. The better to do this, and perpetuate his first great lie, "ye shall not surely die," no marvel that he "himself is transformed into an angel of light"; and that "his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness." 2 Cor. 11: 14, 15. If he can employ good men to propagate his error, through ignorance, he is the more pleased, and often the more successful. If he can make bad men to assume the garb of "ministers of righteousness," and jesuitically teach his doctrine, he is ready to do this. In both instances they are equally the tools of Satan to do his work to ruin souls. Thus fulfilling the Scripture:—"With lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life" (or, that I should save his life, margin). Ezek. 13: 22.

Satan has many devices "whereby he lies in wait to deceive," and carry on his warfare against the truth, to the ruin of men. His tactics are, as an arch rebel, as soon as driven from one position to take another, and there fortify himself. Let us follow him in his many windings, and, for a time, successful positions in hostility to the penalty of God's law.

First and original position. After the threatened penalty—"In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2: 17), he boldly negates the penalty—"Thou shalt not surely die." Gen. 3: 4. This ground he maintains until death actually makes its appearance in the world, when he begins to retreat to a Second position. In this he assumes the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and defines death to be the separation of the soul and the body, in which the latter only dies, and the man proper escapes death.

"'Tis but the casket that lies here, is the epitaph for the dead. "The soul secure in its own existence smiles at dissolution and defies its power," is the doctrine he now maintains through enlightened heathen philosophy for ages; teaching that mankind are judged and rewarded at and in a state of the death of the body, in Tartarus—Hades—Heaven, or Hell! Socrates taught "that a suitable destiny hurls into Tartarus the souls of the wicked; and that the spirits of just men are freed from Hades and dwell in the upper parts of the earth." The Pharisees, a sect of the Jews, who obtained their doctrine of the immortality of the soul and rewards at death from the heathen philosophers, taught that the spirits of the just went to Hades, to "the right hand," a place called the "bosom of Abraham"; while those of the wicked "were guided to the left, near by the flames of hell, where they were tormented by the hot vapor, and saw the place (or choir) of the Fathers afar off, with a vast gulf between," impassable either to the wicked or just; and this "a subterranean region in the earth!" Christian men, who have received the same tradition, corrupting the word of God, maintain that Christ went down into hell, preached the gospel to the spirits of the just, and liberated them from Hades—the "bosom of Abraham," and has ascended with them to heaven; while the spirits of the wicked dead are left to remain in hell below, or a place undefined; and that now souls, or spirits, of the just ascend at death into heaven, and those of the wicked into hell.
The gem that fills it sparkles yet,"

What is most remarkable, this heathen philosophy of the soul's immortality and rewards at death, has indoctrinated both the Jewish and the Christian church in turn, while they both have failed to convince the enlightened heathen world of the Scriptural doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. And why? The immortality of the soul and the rewards at death being granted, a future judgment and resurrection from the dead is made null and void. As says Wm. Tyndal,—"In putting departed souls in heaven, hell and purgatory, you destroy the argument wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. . If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be."

Satan, however, by the increased light now shining from the word of God, is being compelled to abandon this ground he has held so long. It is now being seen and admitted that "the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and the name, are alike unknown to the entire Bible."* "The immortality of the soul is rather supposed, or taken for granted, than expressly revealed in the Bible."† Therefore, in retreating from this position reluctantly, he is compelled to take a

Third position. He now asserts that man possesses a life element within him that survives death; and death is defined to be, "the departure of the life, at the extinction of natural life"—"the withdrawel of the life at the extinction of natural life." Thus man is made to be dead and alive at one and the same time! Truly the devil is in earnest to perpetuate his doctrine still,—"Ye shall not surely die."

But how can there be an extinction of the life of man, and yet his life depart and escape alive, does not yet appear. In the case of the righteous there may be some ground for argument, for the Scripture saith,—"He that believeth hath everlasting life." John 3: 36. Now it must be admitted that this everlasting life cannot become extinct. But how this can help unbelievers, or prove them to be alive while dead, is not made clear. And we think that it does not prove the believer to exist while in death, as the following Scriptures show. The same apostle says,—"This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is IN HIS SON." 1 John 4: 11, 12. Mark! not in the believer. St. Paul affirms this life to be an object of hope. "In hope of eternal life." Titus 1: 2. This "hope" he says, "is laid up for you in heaven." Col. 1: 4. "And when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 4. So that the believer does not come into possession of it until the Son of God appears, when, according to Christ, "the righteous" enter "into life eternal." Matt. 25: 31–46.

Again, our Lord says, "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one who believeth on the Son, may have eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 40. "Everlasting life" is the reward of faith on the Son of God, and the time of its bestowment is at "the resurrection of the just," "at the last day." Hence the promise, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead yet he shall live." John 11: 25. Not as often quoted, "yet doth he live."

Is the following text, however, quoted in support of the doctrine that believers never die? "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." John 11: 26. I would say that this refers to those believers who will be alive on the earth when the Lord shall come to raise the dead, and who shall be exempted from death, being translated and changed from mortality to immortality, as were Enoch and Elijah, who did not taste death. 1 Cor. 15: 51. 2 Thess. 4: 17. But again, is our Lord's language,—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, if a man keep my saying he shall never see death,"—cited as favoring the doctrine that christians do not die "at the extinction of natural life"? I remark that the chronology of this promise fixes it at "the second death," and it synchronizes with the promise, "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death" (Rev. 2: 11), and is equivalent to the one given in Ezekiel 18: 21, "If the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is right, he shall surely live, he shall not die." This refers to the moral law, and has no reference to the Adamic law. No one can possibly suppose that there is promised a repentant sinner exemption from the first death, or Adamic penalty. It must refer to an exemption from the penalty of the moral law, which is "the second death."

Against the doctrine of a life element in man that survives death, I would quote the apostle's positive averment,—"We had the sentence of DEATH in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead." 1 Cor. 1: 9. Our hope of future life and existence is dependent—not upon an inherent life within us—not under "the sentence of death," but in God and the resurrection.

Fourth position. There is another position Satan assumes, together with the above, which is this: that "the penalty of sin is moral and spiritual death." The one we have just been considering is like to Petersburg, and this to Richmond, the rebel capital of the late Southern Confederacy. And thus Satan has entrenched himself in these as strongholds on the river of Death, for a final conflict. But in the name of Zion's King he shall be routed and defeated.

*Olshausen. †[illegible]

The following Scriptures are cited in proof that the penalty of sin is a moral or spiritual death: "Dead in trespasses and sin." Eph. 2; 1. "To be carnally minded is death." Rom. 8: 6. These Scriptures prove, it is affirmed, that "unpardoned sinners are dead"—"natural sinners are dead,"—"in a state or condition of death," and that "the gospel offers the reversion of this," namely, "passed from death unto life." "To be spiritually minded is life and peace." I here quote the language of two ministers of different denominations two hundred miles apart.

According to this view of the penalty of sin, the Scriptures must be thus interpreted: "The wages of sin" is sin; or a condition in sin. "The soul that sinneth it" shall sin, or become a sinner! And thus God's declared penalty is made to appear thus: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely" sin, or become a sinner. And Satan's negation is, "Ye shall not surely" sin, or become a sinner—dead in trespasses and sins. Marvellous discovery!

Now I boldly deny that "a moral or spiritual death" is the penalty of God's law. A death in "trespasses and sins" is a metaphor, founded on the fact that real death exists in our world. If there was no such thing as natural death, or extinction of life, in the world, there could be no such figure used as a death in sin, which is a condition of the absence of spiritual life. There are but two real deaths made known in the Bible, as there are but two comings or revelations of the Son of man. The first death is the penalty attached to the first transgression and the Adamic law. "The second death" is the penalty of the moral law, and of disobedience to the gospel. These deaths are literal and real, as are the the two advents of the Messiah; and no one has the least right or authority for spiritualizing them. If he does so, it is at his peril. Rev. 22: 18, 19.

My surprise is, that men of intelligence, of scriptural knowledge, with logical and comprehensive minds, and christian men who fear God, should so interpret the word of God as to make a figure a fact, a shadow the substance, and by this means convert the penalty of God's moral law into a state of spiritual death, a death in sin! We should not be surprised if St. Paul's language—"dead to sin" should yet be converted into the penalty of divine law, inasmush as it is "a state of death."

Here is the error which the adversary, in his subtlety, endesvors to make appear as truth; namely, the legitimate effects and results of sin; the state and condition into which sin immediately plunges the sinner to be the penalty of sin, while the real penalty is overlooked and left out altogether. Let me illustrate. A father commands his child not to disobey him, assuring him if he does he must punish him with the rod. The child, under temptation, and the allusion that his father will not do as he threatened, disobeys. Immediately he becomes a sinner, feeling guilt, shame, sorrow, and a dread and fear of punishment from a righteous father. Now is "the state" or "condition" of that child dead in sin by his disobedience, the punishment the father threatened? By no means. The penalty is not yet reached. Every one must see this. And yet this state and condition of sinners is declared to be the penalty of sin!

Our government says rebellion and treason must be punished as a crime. Men become rebels and guilty of treason. Now is their condition or state of rebellion, together with the suffering into which their disloyalty has plunged them, the punishment for their crime? Who will advocate the doctrine? The men of the South have been in this state or condition, and many of them are so now, where they are exposed to executive wrath; they may become the subjects of executive clemency upon conditions of taking the prescribed oath of allegiance, and their return to loyalty. Just this is the state of sinners and rebels against God. Exposed to wrath and punishment, but through grace are the subjects of mercy.

If "a state of sin" is the penalty of the Adamic law and of the first transgression, then there is the promise of universal salvation, and this the adversary would be glad to prove. Thus, "As in Adam all die (in trespasses and sins), even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (passed from death unto life).

But why is "a state" or "condition in sin" made to be the penalty of transgression? It is (1) to prove, if possible, that natural death is not the extinction of life wholly. "Are sinners annihilated when dead?" asks one, when referring to a death in sin. And these words "annihilation" and "annihilationists" are used and oft repeated by this clergyman, to cast odium and reproach upon our views, and upon us as a christian people; thinking that by associating us with the infidels of France, and of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, he may bring us into contempt. This betrays either his ignorance or dishonesty as a public instructor; and in any case he cannot plead ignorance; for he must know that the term "annihilationist," as given to those infidels of the past in history and controversy, was given to men who believed there was no future judgment, resurrection, or rewards after death! Whereas we believe in a coming judgment, the resurrection of all men, and future rewards and punishment. Thus our views being as wide apart as the poles, and as St. Paul has fixed and declared them. 1 Cor. 15: 18, 32.

"Are sinners annihilated when dead in sin?" Certainly not. But what is gained by the question? Does it prove that because one may be dead in sin, and yet in the possession of natural life, that he also is alive when dead and deprived of his life? That is begging the question, which is yet to be proved. Let me ask, Are sinners spiritually alive when dead in sin? When this is proved, then there may be some force and reason to the question above.

Again. A man may be dead, yet alive,—dead spiritually, alive physically, may he not?" asks another. Certainly he may. But let me inquire: "A person may be dead, yet alive—dead spiritually," alive spiritually, may he? Prove this, and you may gain your point; not before. Again, "A person may be dead, yet alive"—dead physically," may he? Demonstrate this, and you may gain your argument; not before. What logical force in the reasoning that because a man may be dead in sin, and yet in the possession of natural life and existence, therefore he must be alive when dead! Away with such nonsense! The reasoning will answer for that age when "distinctions were made between theological and philosophical truth, affirming that a proposition might be theologically true and philosophically false;" but not for this, when it is maintained by christian men, as it was by Thomas Aquinas in the darker age, "that the doctrine of revelation is in no respect at variance with an enlightened reason, and that faith does not destroy or annihilate philosophy." The subtlety of the serpent shall not (if grace be given us) make us believe to be theologically true, what both divine revelation and philosophy teach us to be false, namely, that the dead are alive! A step in advance of the dark ages. O. R. FASSETT.

(To be concluded.)

For the World's Crisis.

MAN'S FUTURE DESTINY.

BY J. P. BELT.

"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—GEN. 3: 19.

In the Bible sense, redemption was to be effected by the vicarious death of Christ, and "he tasted death for every man. And when Adam sinned, the way was opened for Christ to interpose under the covenant of mercy, and he made "propitiation for . . . the sins of the whole world," and the law was vindicated and made honorable. The ransom was paid for all, and the keys of hades were wrested from "him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." The atonement was unlimited, however limited the application of the atoning blood, in the actual salvation of souls from the power of sin, by the regenerating work of the Holy Ghost, may be. The paschal lamb, which was a type of the Lamb of God, was required to be slain, roasted and eaten. Hence Christ, the antitype, said, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." By this metaphorical language, he informed those to whom it was addressed that his death was the ransom paid for the life of every man unconditionally. But the condition of an endless life was to believe on his name, or submit to the requirements of his commandments. Hence the condition of eternal life does not preclude a resurrection to condemnation, as some have supposed. But as suffering corresponds with the curse of the law, and is necessary to the proper executiou of its penalty, Christ bore the sin of the world in his own body. And although he did not take upon him the nature of those who had sinned, and actually die upon the cross in their stead for some four thousand years after the fall of man, yet he was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." He not only died for the sin of Adam, but the covenant compact embraced the whole human family.

The atonement, of itself, did not change the character of any man. He suffered death and bought the race of mankind with all the ruin which sin had brought upon them. He died, "the just for the unjust." He "died for the ungodly" "while" they "were yet sinners." "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again." Had there been no part assigned to the Holy Ghost in the covenant of redemption, the death of Christ would have been fruitless. For had it not been the work of the Holy Spirit to renew the hearts of sinners, none of them would have become the willing subjects of Christ's kingdom. Hence the mere death of Christ saves no man from his sins, and none can be saved in their sins. It was to this end that Christ said to his disciples, "It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. Of sin, because they believe not on me; of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged." Therefore the sufferings and death of Christ are attended with a great reward, and his resurrection and ascension into heaven place him in an exalted position in the divine economy. To him is given the dominion over principalities and powers, and all things which pertain to this world. "Wherefore, God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of the things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Thus he "was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." By going down into the grave he wrested the keys of death from the devil, and "when he ascended up on high he led captivity captive." Therefore, an inspired apostle has said, "By one offence, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by one righteousness, the free gift came upon all men to the justification of life." He "died and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord of both the dead and living." The very fact that he tasted death for every man, proves that every man must appear at his judgment seat, in order that they be rewarded for the deeds which they have done in the body, whether they be good, or whether they be evil.

If the non-resurrection theory is true, Christ was greatly mistaken in supposing that he had wrested the keys of death and hades from the power of the devil. For if he only is to open the graves of the righteous dead, the greater portion of the human family will remain in their places of sepulture, and the last enemy, "death," will not be destroyed. But "the Scriptures cannot be broken"; hence "death and hell" must surrender the dead which are in them, at the time and in the manner that was revealed to John on the island of Patmos; for according to the Scriptures, the "multitude of captives" are to remain in "the shadow of death" until the ascended Lord returns from the right hand of the Majesty on high, and then every man will be raised in his own order. Those who live again, when Christ descends with the voice of the archangel, are to be caught up, together with those who were alive and changed, and "meet the Lord in the air." And the beloved John was informed that "this is the first resurrection." When this event takes place, the devil will be shut up in prison, and a seal set upon him, where he is bound "a thousand years." During that time, "the seven last plagues, for in them is filled up the wrath of God," are poured out upon the earth; and the saints stand "as it were" upon "a sea of glass," and they sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. For "blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." But "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." For Christ must reign till the last enemy is destroyed, when he is to deliver up the kingdom to the Father, that God may then "be all in all." But "when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison" for a little season, and "deceive the nations which are in the four corners of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle, the number of whom is as the sand of the sea." But they only "went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them." Then the devil "was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever." This is the last account that we have of the old arch-deceiver. After this had taken place, John "saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."

Now let it be kept in mind that "the second death" hath no power on such as have part in the first resurrection; and that "they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years," the time during which the vials of wrath were being fulfilled, then the class which compose the "rest of the dead" that are to live again when the thousand years are completed, are easily determined. For this class can be none other than those who are the end of the order, in the harvest crop from the graves, in 1 Cor. 15. And this settles the matter of the apocalyptic vision, that the dead then given up to be cast into the lake of fire, are the wicked dead of every age; and that the term "second death" applies to them only; and that their destruction by fire is the fulfillment of Christ's declaration, fear not them who are able to "kill the body, . . . but I will forewarn you" to fear him who "is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Therefore the first death pertains only to the body, but the second death is the everlasting destruction of both the soul and the body in the lake of fire. But a wonderful discovery has recently been made, which ignores the revelation of Jesus Christ concerning the apocalyptical vision. It is claimed that the symbolical lake of fire in the book of Revelations does not produce a literal death, and is not what some foolishly call "the second death." According to this exegesis the judgment in Rev. 20 was only designed to symbolize complete destruction by five elements which never did exist. Courtesy demands a silent reply to such logic.

According to the language of the Scriptures, which relate to the resurrection and final destiny of man, it is a matter of infinite importance that every accountable being should be brought before the judgment seat of Christ, in order that the long suffering and goodness of God may be manifested, and every one convinced of the justice of his righteous administration. And how can this be done more effectually than by the exhibition of every man's character before the assembled universe? Accordingly, God "hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." And regarding the judgment there are these prominent ideas clearly developed:

1st. That all the dead, small and great, are to be judged out of the things which are written in the books. "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."—John 5: 28.

2nd. That for every secret thought, idle word, and good or evil deed, all men shall give account. "I, the Lord, search the heart; I try the reins, even to give unto every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings."

3d. That the judgment of the world belongs to Christ. "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son; that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father."—John 5: 22, 23.

It is distinctly stated in various portions of the Scriptures, that the character of both the righteous and the wicked will be brought to light at the session of the grand assize; that the rewards may be given to every man according to what he has done in this life. The exhibition of all the infirmities of the saints is necessary to the awarding of the various degrees of glory according to their meekness and faithfulness in the cause of Christ. Although their sins had been forgiven when they repented and were converted, they will not "be blotted out" until "the times of refreshing [revivifying] shall come from the presence of the Lord," whom the heaven now retains. And every account of "the day of the Lord" presents the blessedness of the righteous, and the perdition of the wicked.

That there is to be a resurrection, both of the just and of the unjust, is a doctrine clearly revealed in the Bible; and its importance to the christian faith is shown by the apostle Paul in 1 Cor. 15. For if the doctrine does not prove to be true, the whole gospel scheme necessarily fails, and the resurrection of Christ was but a fable. He commences by calling to the mind of his brethren the gospel which had been preached unto them, that Christ died for our sins, was buried, and rose again the third day, "according to the Scriptures." He then refers to the number of times, and also gives the number of those persons who saw him after he had arisen from the dead. By this amount of evidence, the fact that Christ was personally raised to life again was unmistakably established. "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" From the fact that Christ was raised up again, he proves the doctrine of a future resurrection of the dead. "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. . . . And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." By this he shows that the whole gospel scheme is but a fable, if so be the dead rise not at all. For "if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we [christians] are of all men most miserable." Why so? Because we are persecuted for Christ's sake, and counted but "the offscouring of all things." "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept." Christ, the first-fruits of the resurrection harvest, thus proves that the crop will be gathered subsequently to his resurrection. And as his body, that was in the grave, was the body that was raised, so will the bodies of all the sleepers be raised up again. "But every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." Then the end of the crop, when Christ delivers up the kingdom to God, even the Father. "For he (Christ) must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Now bear in mind that he is "Lord of both the dead and living."

Having thus shown that the gospel scheme and plan of redemption of the all in Adam, from the power of death, together with the order of the resurrection, he says, "But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" He then demonstrates the doctrine by the object that men have in sowing different kinds of grain, and illustrates the essential properties of the spiritual body, or the crop that springs up from that which is sowed, by the different glory that exists between celestial bodies and bodies terrestrial. In his answer to the question which is raised in the premises, he says, "Thou fool! that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die." Every candid and reflecting mind must perceive that the object in sowing seed, is the crop to be produced from that which falls into the ground. And without the dissolution of the seed, there can be no crop. He then says, "And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain." That is, thou sowest not the crop that germinates and springs up from the seed, but barely the seed itself; no matter whether it be wheat, or any kind of some other grain. And then he lays down the rule which must be observed, in order that all the illustrations throughout the chapter may be properly understood and determined.

Rule. "But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body." By this rule he proves that, although God produces the crop by his own power and agency, yet in all his works, as it was in the beginning, at the creation, he observes the strict est order and consistency. He never produces tares from the seed of wheat. For as it was said on another occasion, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." When wheat is sown, the crop will also be wheat. But if tares are sown, the crop will also be tares. The idea is more clearly brought out in the parable of the wheat and tares (Matt. 13: 24–30). In the parable, Christ shows that both the wheat and the tares, the one representing the children of the kingdom of God, and the latter the children of the wicked one, are to be gathered in the harvest, which is the end of the world, or age, when the tares are to be burned, and the righteous will be gathered into God's "barn," representing his everlasting kingdom. The same body that dissolves and dies is reproduced in the crop. But "it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." The same "it" that is sown, is the "it" that is raised.

(Concluded next week.)

IS MAN A COMPOUND BEING?

Some tell us that man is a compound being, that the body is the house, and in this house abides a never-dying soul. But how came man in possession of this immortal soul? God has told us, in his word, that he formed man of the dust of the earth: not the body, only, the house, the covering of the spirit, as it is termed; but God formed man—a complete, perfect man, of the dust of the earth. Are you astonished that so perfect a piece of mechanism could be produced from the dust of the earth? Is it more astonishing than that such a piece of mechanism should be supported, sustained, and kept in running order by the dust of the earth? Do we not receive all our food that tends to support and prolong life from mother earth? Whether we consume vegetables, fruit, farinaceous matter, or meat, it all originates from the earth; and, without this continual supply of food, we should lose all our precious thoughts—we could neither think, reflect, or act; but would grow weaker and weaker, until we finally returned to the earth, from whence we are taken. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

But says the objector, God formed the house, the body, of dust, and breathed into this frame, or organism, the breath of life;" and "man became a living soul." But God tells us he formed the man, a complete man, of the dust of the ground; but the breath of life did not animate his frame: hence, God breathed into man the breath of life, and he became a living soul. Prior to man's receiving this breath he could not be called a living soul; but now life is infused throughout all his system. The breath of life has entered his nostrils, the life-giving air fills his lungs, and radiates its vitality throughout his system, imparting power of motion and sensation, and Adam becomes a breathing, or living, man.

But, says the objector, I believe that when God gave man this breath, he breathed into him a part of himself: a part of God: and this part of God is what we call "the immortal soul." Let us look at this a little. If God breathed into Adam a part of himself, then this part of God which Adam received from God, must possess the same nature with God. Now as God is an all-wise being, so must Adam henceforth have been: for like begets like. Adam being all-wise, the inducement held out by the tempter saying, "Ye shall be as the gods, knowing both good and evil," would have been of no avail; for he would have possessed equal wisdom with God. Yea, was not his very being a part of God? As God is omniscient, and omnipresent, so would Adam have been: and we would not read of his hiding himself from the presence of the Lord among the trees of the garden, where, when God called unto him, he answered that he was afraid. God is an all-powerful being; consequently, Adam must have been, and we should not read of God driving him out of Eden. Adam being all-powerful, would have remained in the garden as long as he pleased. But allowing Adam had this part of God infused in him by the breath of the Almighty, how did his descendants get a part of God? Could Adam transmit it to his offspring? and has there been a constant transmission of the deity from generation to generation for the past six thousand years? Do you answer, Yes? Then, I ask, How is it mankind have become so wicked? If, as you contend, that portion of man that was made of the dust of the earth is only the tenement formed for this part of God to dwell in, and, consequently, cannot feel, act, or think, then all thoughts, all deeds, originated from this part of God dwelling in this framework of dust!

What has been the history of this race of men in which you contend dwelleth so much of God? The first human pair were tempted, yielded at once to the temptation, and committed sin. Cain, their first born son, slew his brother: and that, too, because his brother's works were righteous, and his own were evil. And from the days of Adam until now, the great mass of mankind have tracked their pathway on the earth with crimson lines of blood. Lust, murder, pride, and hate are completely interwoven with the history of man.

God is immortal. If Adam possessed so much of God he certainly would have possessed immortality. We are told in God's word, that God alone hath immortality. If that is the case, how can man possess it: or how consistent would it have been for God to tell Adam "in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," if, indeed, he was immortal? Why did God say, "Lest he put forth his hand and take of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever?" Did he not possess already an immortal life, a life that was destined to run parallel with that of Deity itself? Why, then, such care to guard the tree of life? Did he die, as you say, a spiritual death? then this "part of God" died, and consequently, man was no longer immortal. A spiritual death must mean the death of the spirit: and if the spirit that animated this house died, and the breath that God breathed into this house made it a living soul, what animated the frame after the spirit, or the "part of God," died? Do you contend that by this spiritual death you mean a change which took place in the inner man, this soul; and that man, in consequence of sin, fell from a state of purity and blessedness, to one of impurity and misery, I ask, Can God or his attributes change? and, if one attribute can be changed, cannot every one? can his justice, mercy, and truth be changed to malice, oppression, and falsehood? If so, then indeed can he descend from immortality to mortality? Would it not follow, by a natural sequence, if one of his attributes underwent a change, all would be affected?

Immortality is a great and impressive word. To be immortal is to possess no principle of alteration or corruption. Now we are expressly told that "he [the man] that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption"; and "the soul that sinneth it shall die." This cannot mean the Adamic death; for all suffer this, good or bad; consequently it must refer to the second death, when all those that have sowed to the flesh shall reap corruption, and perish, while those who have sowed to the spirit reap life eternal.—HENRY M. ROWELL.—Voice of the West.

More Valuable than Treasury Notes.

How that old cynic, Sam Johnson, would have revelled through Webster's massive new Unabridged! How he would have gloated over its magnificent letter-press and its illustrations, beautiful as new Treasury Notes, and much more valuable to the student. The Merriams have incurred a fabulous expense in having the whole work rewritten, reset, recast, and republished. It is not a mere revision, but a reconstruction. To insure excellence in typography, it comes from the Riverside Press, which is all that need be said about its mechanical execution. It is a marvellous specimen of learning, labor, research, and taste. It is by far the greatest literary work of the age.—Baltimore American.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Nov. 29, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

A LIBERAL OFFER.

Believing as we do that "the end of all things is at hand," and that it is our duty, in consequence of the light now shining upon the prophetic scriptures, to do all we can to spread the light in all directions, among all classes of mankind, we feel anxious that all who are interested should help us in this good work of scattering light and truth far and wide. But as few of our readers feel able to spend any extra time in this work, we make them the following liberal offers, as part pay for their services in getting new subscribers for the Crisis. Let every man, woman, and child, take hold of the work in earnest, and we think great good may be accomplished, with but little sacrifice.

For every thirty-two new subscribers for one year, or sixty-four for six months, we will send Grover and Baker's sewing machine, the price of which is $55.

We have taken some pains to ascertain which is the best of the great variety of sewing machines now in market, and find the choice is between Wheeler and Wilson's, and Grover and Baker's. The latter has been so improved that it is now taking the preference among those who have tried all of the most approved machines. It is more simple, and hence better adapted to all classes.

For every ten new subscribers for one year, or twenty for six months, we will send Webster's Unabridged Dictionary,—the new illustrated edition, with 3000 engravings. All unite in declaring this the best English dictionary in the world. Every family should have a copy. It has 1768 quarto pages. Price $12. Now is your time to get a copy without money, while at the same time you are spreading the truth among your neighbors.

For every three new subscribers for the Crisis for one year, or six for six months, we will give a copy of Cruden's Concordance, or the Bible Dictionary, price $1.75. No one who reads the Bible should be without Cruden's Concordance. We think every family very much needs all the premiums we have offered, and we hope that thousands will secure them. Almost every reader of our paper, with a little effort, can get one or more of the premiums; and many may get them all.

If they prefer, they can have the worth of the premiums in tracts, or any other books we have in the office, which they may choose; or, instead of these, they can have the Crisis sent to their friends, or the poor, whom they

Remember we merely want the names and the money, with the Post Office address; they may be sent all at once, or one at a time; they may be sent to one post-office, or several; and we will allow till the first of next June as the time in which to obtain the given number of subscribers to secure the premiums.

Those who wish to take the benefit of this liberal offer, will please mention it in each case when they send the names of subscribers.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us all go to work with new energy to spread the great truth of the Bible. The people are famishing for the lack of the light which the Lord has caused us to rejoice. Let us make a sacrifice of time and money for the benefit of our fellow beings, and thus bear "one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

They sew with equal facility all fabrics, the most delicate and the heaviest, and with all kinds of thread, silk, cotton, or linen.

The seam is so strong and elastic that, when properly sewed, it will not break, even on the bias.

The seam, though cut at every sixth stitch, remains firm, and neither runs or ravels in wear.

The face stitch is more plump and beautiful, and retains its plumpness and beauty after washing better than any other.

Watching and varying the tensions upon the threads, necessary in other machines, is unnecessary in this. The tension being once adjusted on the GROVER & BAKER machine, any amount of sewing may done without change.

They will make BEAUTIFUL EMBROIDERY without any change of arrangement, simply by inserting threads of suitable sizes and colors for this purpose. These are the only machines that both embroider and sew perfectly.

LIGHT ON ACTS 13: 19--20.

The period of 450 years, mentioned in Acts 13: 20, has been one that has greatly perplexed chronologers, when they have endeavored to harmonize it with some other scriptures. The difficulty lay in making 450 years for the judges, after the division of the land of Canaan, till Samuel the prophet.

The passage reads as follows:—"And about the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness. And when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them by lot. And after that, he gave unto them judges, about the space of four hundred and fifty years until Samuel the prophet."

We recently came across a fact that seemed to remove the whole difficulty. In a work by the noted scholar, S. P. Tregelles, entitled, "New Testament Historic Evidence," when referring to this passage in Acts, he says, on page 103, "Now, in the most ancient copies, the period four hundred fifty years stands in quite a different connection: 'He destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, and gave them their land by lot about four hundred and fifty years; and afterwards he gave unto them judges, etc.'"

☞ You will find the article headed "Spiritual Revival," a most excellent one. It ought to be read by everybody. Mr. Spurgeon's eyes, seem to be fully opened to the sad state of things in these last days, characterized by moral declension. It is high time for all to awake, and prepare to meet the King of kings.

☞ Do not fail to read the article from "The Witness," headed, "Separation from the world the condition of true service to God."

"The Witness" is an excellent monthly, edited by James Inglis, 26 Cooper Institute, New York. It is full of good things. Price 50 cents a year.

WAR CLOUDS.

Again the war clouds begin to float about, indicating another bloody storm. Preparations are active in all parts of the world for a terrible conflict. The spirit of peace seems to have departed from the nations of the earth, especially the most civilized. We can expect no bright future for this planet till the coming of the Prince of Peace. But we do not expect to have to wait long. The glad hour makes haste, and soon the glorious hour will burst upon an astonished world.

"War clouds again begin to float across the political horizon, and military men talk of a campaign against the French occupants of Mexico, as if it was decided upon. Meanwhile large sales of government arms and munitions of war are to be made, which will afford emigrants to our sister republic a chance to procure means of defense. At the War and Navy Departments it is denied that any warlike preparations are being made."

SPIRITS OF ANIMALS.

This is certainly "an age of progress," as claimed by the spirits. There are two ways to progress, one towards the light, the other into darkness;—one towards the haven of eternal rest; the other to perdition. The Savior has most plainly taught us that one way leads to life, the other to death. When we hear men boasting of the "progress" of these days, we like to inquire in what that progress consists? If they mean in error, pride, covetousness, love of pleasure, licentiousness, and wickedness of all kinds, then, we cannot dispute the statement; because facts abundantly sustain it; but if by "progress" is meant advance towards a better moral condition; then we call for the proof, which we have not yet seen produced. Facts are as stubborn things as they ever were, and they stand arrayed in overwhelming strength against the idea of any progress in favor of a pure christianity, such as Jesus taught.

But to the point that was in our mind when we wrote the heading of this article. When reading a communication, purporting to come from a spirit, in answer to the inquiry,—"Do the spirits of animals exist hereafter?" we thought surely this is an age of progress; for the spirit answered—"they do," and then goes on to say "these animals have a spiritual part," and "that spiritual part is the part that lives in the spirit-world." So rather than admit that man dies, the spirits teach that animals have immortal spirits. When we come to compare the teachings of Spiritualism with ancient Buddhism, in Hindostan, we find them almost one and the same thing. Indeed, we believe the doctrines of the two systems come from the same source, that is, from the demons. The correspondence is unmistakable. The doctrines of modern Spiritualism are only the revival of the doctrines of the pagans.

When speaking of "the religion of Jesus Christ," a spirit says, as reported in the Banner of Light for Sept. 30th, 1865, "It is not fit for the developed mind of the nineteenth century."

Twenty years since, who would have believed that thousands and thousands of intelligent men and women, in this enlightened age, so called, would have so far departed from the teachings of Jesus as to claim that "it is not fit for the developed mind of the nineteenth century"? Yet such infidel expressions have become so common, as hardly to attract attention, and men who make or believe them are among the honored members of society, who hold the first positions of office in our nation. Where will this thing end? These sentiments are rapidly advancing in all directions. Those who think otherwise are not acquainted with the facts in the case. We might as well say the waters of the Niagara cease to flow after they have passed the cataract, because they are not accompanied by a mighty roar as when plunging over the precipice. The facts in the case are, the world, as a whole, has already made the Niagara plunge into Spiritualism, and will never return to Christianity again; and now a host, who did not come over the cataract with the pioneers in the cause, have joined the company for a pleasant sail on the same stream; and after they have floated with the current to some "vanity fair" on board their pleasure boat, they find, when they attempt to return, that, like "The Maid of the Mist," they can go no further than to the falls, when they again return with the current, and float on to perdition.

To all, who wish for salvation through Christ, we would say, keep as far as possible from every thing pertaining to Spiritualism. As is arsenic to the physical constitution, so are the doctrines of Spiritualism to the moral nature—a deadly poison.

Some may wonder why we so often speak on this subject. Did they know and see all that we do, they might wonder why we do not say more. But few have even a faint idea of what is being accomplished by this crowning work of Satan. Spiritualism has entered the field as the avowed enemy of the Bible and the religion of the Bible, and the God of the Bible. Said an aged Spiritualist lecturer, once a Baptist preacher, "I am going to impeach the Bible,—it shall be impeached." "The spirits of devils" have begun their last great work in earnest. Shall we who see the perils of these last days be silent in an hour like the present? Who would give such counsel?

THE ADVANCE OF CRIME.

The advance of crime is most marked. We can scarcely take up a paper but we find the editorials referring to the astonishing progress of crime. Instead of abating, it grows like an avalanche, threatening ruin in all directions. Says the Boston Journal:—

"The present seems to be the high carnival of crime. Accounts from all quarters show outrages on person and property to be numerous beyond all precedent. A St. Louis paper says that highway robberies and burglaries have become so really alarming—especially the former—that it is dangerous to walk the streets after 9 o'clock at night. The Democrat says the police seem to be unable to meet the exigency, and the day is fast approaching, if indeed it has not already arrived, when the people themselves will have to take the matter in hand, and makes a suggestion tending to the organization of a vigilance committee."

"THE FRENCH CANADIAN MOVEMENT."

A meeting of French Canadians has been recently held in New York, for the purpose, it seems, of considering the propriety of being free from British rule. It is very evident that Napoleon is doing all he can to persuade all nations to break friendship with England, so that when the hour arrives for him to invade her, there will be no one to interfere.

"For many years the French Canadians have been compelled—by persecution from the English government, and, shame to say, from the hands of those from whom they naturally expected love and protection—to leave their native soil and emigrate to the United States, where they sought the bread, space and liberty that were refused them under British rulers. The tory press and false patriots of Canada, fearing that the large emigration of Canadians toward the United States would continue, and jealous of the prosperity and the blessing of liberty we enjoy in this country, have poured upon us for the past ten years continued insults and gross calumnies worthy of their authors. But during the late war forty thousand French Canadians have taken arms and fought bravely for the defense of the government which had given them protection, and this, especially, has exasperated the Canadian tories so much that their presses and pulpits thunder not only falsehoods, but the most ridiculous and false assertions. Our compatriots are suffering in Canada, pining away under hard labor, which, under despots, never rewards. Let us seize the first opportunity not only to refute the black calumnies of the Canadian tories, but let us watch the progressive events which are passing before us, and, at the first rallying cry, let us give our support to our compatriots in the neighboring provinces and help them to break their shackles. Let us not be deceived. The hour of deliverance for Canada, like that of Ireland, will soon strike."

"EVIL MEN."

The apostle Paul has told us that "in the last days" "evil men" will abound. It is certain that they have not been as plenty at any time during the present generation, as they are at this time. Crimes multiply all around us, especially the darkest ones—the most shocking.

The following is the bill of fare for one night in Chelsea, Mass.:—

"While Mr. Stephen Jennings was passing through Cherry street, in the rear of the Orthodox Church, shortly after eight o'clock last evening, he was assaulted by three men, one taking him by the throat and holding over his mouth a handkerchief wet with chloroform. A desperate struggle ensued between Mr. Jennings and the villains, in which the former was at length overpowered and robbed of his wallet containing $50 in greenbacks, which he had just before received at the City Hall from the Treasurer of the Savings Bank. The three men made good their escape.

At about half-past ten o'clock, Mr. Charles White, while passing by Garden Cemetery, when near the gate was attacked by two ruffians with whom he had hard fight, and finally succeeded in putting them to flight.

Shortly before eleven o'clock, Mr. J. S. Brown, being on his way from Salem to Boston in an open buggy, encountered two highwaymen, not far from the junction of the turnpike and Chelsea Beach roads, who seized his horse by the bridle, and one pointing a pistol at his head demanded his money or his life, in good old-fashioned style. There being no help at hand, and no chance of escape, Mr. Brown gave up his pocket book, which contained $80 in United States notes, and the robbers left, taking the Saugus road."

SOCIAL HYMNS.—What they say of them.—A preacher in a new place writes:—

"They took up a collection for me, and I send you the money for the hymn books, so that we may be able to sing. I have long wanted something of the kind."

A sister writes: "Hymn — was the means of bringing me up out of the horrible pit into which sin had plunged me. May it go to many others, bearing tidings of hope and peace. Then, 'A little while,' (No. 160), how cheering! 'Forsaken, anguish-torn'; written 'out of the depths,' etc." D.

"I like your social hymn book very much, and have been requested to send for one dozen for others." E. J.

A preacher in Canada writes:—"I have seen your last edition of Social Hymns, and I like it. It is the nearest right of any one that I know of. Everybody gets their books too large. Then yours is so handy. A man can carry a dozen of them easily, and save all the bother, when out preaching here and there, on finding that there are only three or four books in one congregation, and those not alike. I should like a dozen of them." L.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

How many Sunday Schools are there connected with our denomination? That question I am unable to answer, but this I know, there name is not "Legion," for there are not many. I have been grieved many times in my missionary work in various places, to find many of our churches without Sunday schools. This is not right.

Many children belonging to Adventist parents are attending Episcopal, Orthodox, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist and other Sunday schools, and after being in them awhile it is next to impossible for them to leave. They become ashamed of the denomination to which their parents belong, and in many cases they do not attend our meetings.

The parents have left those churches for a better theology, but put their children under the very instruction that they repudiate themselves. This ought not so to be. All that is needed to get up a good Sunday school is, first, a love for Christ and his gospel. Second, a love for children. Third, a disposition to teach them what we believe to be truth, and not an indifference as to where they go, or what they learn. Fourth, a little enterprise. Fifth, "stick-to-itiveness." Sixth, some self-denial. Seventh, a little money. Eighth, punctual and constant attendance. Ninth, singing-books, gift cards, and the Young Pilgrim, to be furnished to the scholars.

When the Crisis comes along, father, mother, and the rest of the older ones, get it and read, and after that the children can have the paper, to read what is in the children's department, after being cautioned about a dozen times not to tear the paper, or get it dirty, or tumble it, or to hold it near the lamp or stove, and the poor children, in many instances, look upon the Crisis as they do upon eggs that are to be very carefully handled.

Give the children a paper of their own, the Young Pilgrim, if you please. Then teach them little by little how to take care of it.

Who will organize a Sunday school in their village, town, or city? None of you work too hard for Christ. You can work all the week for temporal benefits, but you can manage to do something for the Master in the Sunday school line. Let us fill up the ranks at once. "Time is short." "The Lord is at hand." Yours in Christ,

Philadelphia, Pa. F. H. BURBANK.

THE FAIR.

BRO. G[illegible]:—Is not this the day spoken of by the prophet, when darkness should cover the earth, and gross darkness the people? and that perilous times have come, when men are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, and the time when men will not endure sound doctrine, but heap to themselves teachers having itching ears? As I view the tide of iniquity rising higher and faster, as we advance down the stream of time, my soul cries out, to what are we coming?

Last Thursday, as I was returning to my work after dinner, I saw a large flag, the emblem of our nation, hanging out of the window of Jackson and Huntington Halls, and from that were stretched on a line twenty-three or four other flags, the emblems of the nations of the earth. I inquired what it meant? I was informed that the Worthen St. Methodists were to have a fair and festival. I enclose one of their bills, hoping that you and all the faithful watchmen will lift your voices like a trumpet, that the people may be warned against all such influences. Is it not true that the world has converted the church? Men who make no pretensions to religion, say if that is religion, I am best off as I am; and so I think. My prayer is, Lord of love, spare the little flock in this perilous time. Who will be able to stand? Who will endure to the end? It will be only those that have pure hearts and clean hands. For this I am striving.

IRA THOMPSON.

"Remember the fair and festival to be given by the ladies of the Worthen St. Methodist church, at Huntington and Jackson Halls, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, Nov. 16th, 17th, and 18th. Among the attractions in Huntington Hall will be Prof. D. C. Hall's band, of Boston. Fair tables, fishing pond, an extensive museum, shooting gallery, etc. Provisions will be served the same as last year. In Jackson Hall Prof. Thwackum will hold a session of his country singing school! Also, Mons. Carlo will exhibit his trained elephant Tippo! Huntington Hall will be splendidly decorated by Colonel Beals, of Boston. Tickets 25 cents."

NOTICE TO IOWA FRIENDS.

Agreeably to the request of the friends of Iowa, that I would notify through the Crisis when I would come to that State, I hereby give notice that, nothing in providence preventing, after attending our quarterly meeting appointed to be held at Elliota, Dec. 23d and 24th, in company with my husband, I will proceed directly to Bro. C. P. Burroughs, Floyd, Floyd Co., Iowa. From thence go to Strawberry Point, in time to attend the quarterly meeting, to be held at that place, Dec. 30th and 31st. After the close of that meeting, visit other places, as the way opens and health permits. The different friends in Iowa, who have written to me, will please excuse me from answering their letters individually, and let this notice suffice. For however much I would like to write to them, my duties are so many and so pressing, it is next to impossible to answer all communications.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

It is a question yet in discussion, at least among some of our advent friends, what is a Christian Church? Feeling my own inability to write on the great subject, what constitutes a Christian Church, I leave this discussion to them, with the suggestion that they study carefully the Acts of the Apostles, and that they give these inspired builders of churches a prominent place in the list of their authorities.

But the question, What is the purpose and design of a Church? is one of these practical inquiries which need often to be asked, and never pressed itself home with greater weight than at the present time. What object had Christ, its head and founder, in establishing it here on the earth? For what did the apostles travel over all the known world, planting churches in every city and country, wearing out their lives, or freely giving themselves up in martyrdom? Was it that a few christian men and women might have a pleasant place to meet on the Sabbath, when it is not too hot or too cold; when it does not rain, or snow, or blow; where they may sit upon their cushioned seats and hear the word of God preached, and his praises sung; pay their quarter's rent; see that the finances for their society are well kept up; bless themselves in their privileges, and inwardly thank God that they are not as other men? To judge from what we often see, one might conclude that this is the great aim and end of a Christian Church; and yet every heart that has ever given the subject a thought, knows that this utterly and grossly belies the grand purpose of a church.

What are lighthouses for? The personal comfort of those who occupy them? Nay. They are to lift up and hold forth a light in the gloom of the night, which shall send its rays far out over the dark waters, where men are buffeting the waves, and breasting the storm, to show them their place on the trackless deep, to direct them on their course, and guide them into the safe harbor.

What are life-boats for? The pleasure sailing of those who are in them? Nay, but to go among the breakers where men are clinging to the wreck, where they are swept off and lost in the remorseless waves, and to rescue them when half dead and bring them to the safe shore.

And so is the Christian Church to save men by holding forth in this dark world, where men are groping their way down to eternal death, the light of truth, the word of life as it shines from the Scriptures of truth, as it beams forth from the Cross, and is reflected in the godly walk and conversation of those who have received it. To save men by going out amid the breakers of sin, and through the great waves and billows of temptation, in which they are struggling and disappearing, and going down to destruction and perdition; to lay hold of them and bring to the safe shore.

This is the grand object of a Christian Church,—if we have read aright the design of Christ. For this they have been furnished with a ministry which is to sound abroad the invitations of the gospel, and beseech men in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God. For this her heralds are to go out through the streets and lanes of our cities, into the highways and hedges, and compel men by all the arts of moral suasion, and by all the logic of a heart touched by the constraining love of Christ, to come in. Now, unless the church be true to this object for which Christ planted it here on the earth, it is not worth sustaining. Christ leaves it, the Holy Spirit withdraws from it, life becomes extinct, and it becomes a mass of corruption.

The only right a church has to live, and the only condition in which it can live, is that it be sending forth the streams of salvation; that it be putting forth its energies to reclaim the wayward, and to save the lost; and just as soon as a church draws itself into itself, and becomes solicitous only for its own interest, it begins to decline, and it ought to. The only condition on which a fountain lives, is that it sends forth streams. The moment it ceases to do this it ceases to be a fountain. The only way in which the sun maintains his glorious pre-eminence as king of day, is that he shines. The moment he ceases to shine, he ceases to be the sun, and becomes a great, black, chilly orb—a blot on the face of the heavens, and the sooner he sinks out of sight he better.

The proper questions for a church to ask are,—What can we do, as a church of Christ, to rescue the wayward, and to save the lost? What can we do to arrest the tide of evil and wickedness that is surging through our streets? What can we do to save the largest number of men and women? And what especially can we do to save the young and to bring them to Christ before he leaves the mediatorial seat, and comes to gather his saints, and to pour his fury upon the wicked? These are the proper questions for christians to ask, because such is the proper work for them to do.

SPIRITUAL REVIVAL THE WANT OF THE CHURCH.

BY C. H. SPURGEON.

"O Lord, revive thy work."—HAB. 3: 2.

All true religion is the work of God; it is pre-eminently so. If he should select out of his works that which he esteems most of all, he would select true religion. He regards the work of grace as being even more glorious than the works of nature; and he is, therefore, especially careful that it shall always be known, so that if any one dare to deny it, they shall do so in the teeth of repeated testimonies to the contrary, that God is indeed the author of salvation in the world and in the hearts of men, and that religion is the effect of grace, and is the work of God. We firmly believe that it is God who quickens the soul "dead in trespasses and sins." We think we can have no subject more appropriate for our consideration than the text: "O Lord, revive thy work!" Let us commence with ourselves, remembering that we are part of the church, and that our own want of revival is in some measure the cause of that want in the church at large.

Now, I directly charge the great majority of professing christians—and I take the charge to myself, also—with a need of a revival of piety in these days. In the first place, look at the conduct and conversation of too many who profess to be the children of God. The evil lies with too many of you who unite yourselves with christian churches, and in practically protesting against your profession. It has become very common now-a-days to join a church; go where you may, you find professing christians, who sit down at some Lord's table or another; but are there fewer cheats than there used to be? Are there less frauds committed? Do we find morality more extensive? Do we find vice entirely at an end? No, we do not. The age is as immoral as any that preceded it; there is still as much sin, although it is more cloaked and hidden. The outside of the sepulchre may be whiter: but within, the bones are just as rotten as before. Society is not one whit improved. My brethren, it is well known—and who dares deny it that is not too partial, and who will not speak willful falsehood?—it is well known that it is not in these days a sufficient guaranty even of a man's honesty, that he is a member of a church. It is a hard thing for christian ministers to say, but we must say it, and if friends say it not, enemies will, and better that the truth be spoken in our own midst, that men may see that we are ashamed of it, than that they should hear us impudently deny what we must confess to be true. O sirs, the lives of too many members of christian churches give us grave cause to suspect that there is none of the life of godliness in them all! Why that reaching after money, why that covetousness, why that following of the crafts and devices of a wicked world, why that clutching here and there, that grinding of the faces of the poor, that stamping down of the workman, and such like things, if men are truly what they profess to be? God in heaven knows that what I speak is true, and too many here know it themselves. If they be christians, at least they want revival; if there be life in them, it is but a spark which is covered up with heaps of ashes; it needs to be fanned, aye, and it needs to be stirred, also, that, haply, some of the ashes may be removed, and the spark may have place to live. The members of christian churches are not what once they were. It is fashionable to be religious now; persecution is taken away; and ah! I had almost said, the gates of the church were almost taken away with it.

Have you noticed the conversation of too many who think themselves christians? You might live with them from the first of January to the end of December, and you would never be tired of their religion for what you would hear of it. They scarcely mention the name of Jesus Christ at all. On Sabbath afternoon all the ministers are talked over, faults are found with one and the other, and all kinds of conversation take place, which they call religious, because it is concerning religious places. When we step into each other's houses, do we begin to talk concerning the cause and truth of God? We talk too little about our Lord and Master. That word sectarian has crept into our midst, and we must say nothing about Christ, because we are afraid of being called sectarians. I am a sectarian, and hope to be so until I die, and I glory in it; for I cannot see, now-a-days, that a man can be a christian, thoroughly in earnest, without winning for himself the title. Why, we must not talk of this doctrine, because such and such a friend doubts or denies it; and so we drop all the grand topics which used to be the staple commodities of godly talk, and begin to speak of anything else, because we feel that we can agree better on worldly things than we can on spiritual. Is not this the truth?

Brethren, let me ask some of you how long is it since you have had a love-visit from Jesus Christ—how long since you could say, "My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among the lilies"? Perhaps some of you can say, "It was but this morning that I saw him; I beheld his face with joy, and was ravished with his countenance." But I fear the greatest part of you will have to say, "Ah, sir, for months I have been without the shinings of his countenance." What have you been doing, then, and what has been your way of life? Have you been groaning every day? Have you been weeping every moment? "No!" Then you ought to have been. Christians will lose sometimes the society of Jesus; the connection between themselves and Christ will be at times severed, as to their own feeling of it, but they will always groan and cry when they lose their Jesus. In the present era there is a sad decline of the vitality of godliness. This age has become too much the age of form, instead of the age of life. God had clothed Whitefield with power: he was preaching with a majesty and a might of which one could scarcely think mortal could ever be capable; not because he was anything in himself, but because his Master girded him might. But now, we have fallen upon the dregs of time. Men are the rarest things in all this world; we have not many left now. There is preaching, and what is it? "O Lord, help thy servant to preach, and teach him by thy spirit what to say." Then out comes the manuscript, and they read it. A pure insult to Almighty God! We have preaching, but it is of this order. It is not preaching at all. It is speaking very beautifully and very finely, possibly eloquently, in some sense of the word; but where is the right down preaching, such as Whitefield's? Have you ever read one of his sermons? You will not think him eloquent; you cannot think him so. His expressions were rough, frequently very coarse and unconnected; there was very much declamation in his speech. But where lay his eloquence? Not in the words you read, but in the tone in which he delivered them, and in the earnestness with which he felt them, and in the tears which ran down his cheeks, and in the pouring out of his soul. He did not speak as a trade, or as a mere machine, but he preached what he felt to be the truth, and what he could not help preaching. When you heard him preach you could not help feeling that he would die if he could not preach, and with all his might call to men and say, "Come! come! come to Jesus Christ, and believe on him!" Now that is just the lack of these times. Where is earnestness now? It is neither in pulpit nor yet in pew, in such a manner as we desire it; and it is a sad, sad age when earnestness is scoffed at, and when that very zeal which ought to be characteristic of the pulpit is regarded as enthusiasm and fanaticism. One sad proof that the church wants revival is the absence of that death-like, solemn earnestness which was once seen in the christian pulpits.

The absence of sound doctrine is another proof of our want of revival. Do you know who are called Antinomians now, who are called "hypers," who are laughed at, who are rejected as being unsound in the faith? Why, the men that were once the orthodox are now the heretics. We have got a "new theology." New theology? Why, it is any thing but a Theology; it is an ology which hath cast out God utterly and entirely, and enthroned man. We want a revival of sound doctrine once more in the midst of the land. Look at our prayer-meetings, with here and there a bright exception. Go in. There are six women; scarcely enough members ever come to pray four times. Prayer-meetings, they are called; spare meetings they ought to be called, for sparely enough are they attended. "Oh!" says one, "if we had another minister; another kind of worship; a different sort of preaching." Just as if that were all! It is, "Oh! if the Lord would come into the hearts of the men you have got. Oh! if he would make the forms you do use full of power." You do not want fresh ways or fresh machinery; you want the life in what you have. There is an engine on a railway; a train has to be moved. "Bring another engine," says one, "and another, and another." The engines are brought, but the train does not move at all. Light the fire, and get the steam up, that is what you want; not fresh engines. We do not want fresh ministers, or fresh plans, or fresh ways, though many might be invented, to make the church better; we only want life in what we have got. I have noticed in different churches, that the minister thought first of this contrivance, then of that. He tried one plan, and thought that would succeed; then he tried another; that was not it. Keep to the old plan, but get life in it. We do not want any thing new; "the old is better"—let us keep to it. But we want the life in the old. The church wants fresh revivals. Oh! for the days of Cambuslang again, when Whitefield preached with power. It has been known that two thousand credible cases of conversion have happened under one solitary discourse. Oh! for the age of deep feeling—the age of deep, thorough-going earnestness! Let us ask God for it! let us plead with him for it. Perhaps he has the man, or the men, somewhere, who will shake the world yet; perhaps even now he is about to pour forth a mighty influence upon men, which shall make the church as wonderful in this age as it ever was in any age which has passed.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. A. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—After having closed the debate, there being a number of questions asked, and unanswered for the want of time, I gave out that I would answer them the next Sunday afternoon and evening, because Mr. P. and a number of his church said they were anxious to hear me explain them if I could. When the time came, only two or three of their members were present. But outsiders and Mr. Smith and lady, the Methodist preacher, were present. But Mr. Pendergast and his three preachers, who were present the last evening, were among the missing.

Thus closed my efforts, in Woodland, to spread the truth among a very sectarian class of people.

Now the question arose, what was my duty next? My circumstances required me to be either engaged in some business, or to be preaching the gospel of the kingdom. And as no one but Bro. Fike had invited me to their place to hold meetings, and it was very expensive to travel and put up at public hotels among strangers, and hire places in which to hold meetings, with the prejudices among such a money-loving and God-forsaking people as I found in Cal., I concluded I had received all the benefits, in regard to my health, that I should by staying longer. And if I came back before next summer, I ought to come in the next steamer, in order to arrive here in this climate before cold weather, that I might not be attacked severely with the asthma.

I took the opposition steamer by the way of Nicaragua, Aug. 12th, and arrived at San Juan del Sur, Nicaragua, Friday, Aug. 25th. A part of the passengers landed about four o'clock P. M., and rode on horseback, on horses and mules, the distance of twelve miles, to Virgin Bay. I arrived there about eight o'clock in the evening. It was very pleasant before dark, in seeing and hearing the parrots, and seeing the monkeys. I saw four on one tree picking nuts. But after dark, it was a very dangerous road to travel, as the natives have very long-bladed knives, with which they could despatch a person very quickly, and no one would have known it.

While on the Pacific, we had quite a "storm at sea," that made some look rather sober, who had before this been making fun of every thing that was said or done of a religious nature. But I found the "blessed hope" sustained me, while others turned pale. I had no more fear than I should have had on land. A number were very sick, and one little boy died from its effects, and was buried on the banks of the San Juan river.

We went aboard the steamer, on the Lake Nicaragua, the next day at evening after arriving at Virgin Bay, and arrived at the head of San Juan river at midnight. There we shifted on to a light draft steamer, to run down the river.

While getting aboard, a man fell overboard; but having so much gold coin on his body, he did not rise again, and was drowned. The boat soon started down the river, and left him to be eaten up by crocodiles and alligators. I thought they acted as though one man was not of much account among so many. We arrived at Greytown Monday, Aug. 28th, being sixty-five hours crossing the isthmus, instead of twenty, as they had advertised. Instead of having a vessel there, ready to bring us direct to N. Y., we lay at Greytown from Monday to the next Sunday. While there, I had an opportunity of preaching twice in the English Western Mission Wesleyan Methodist church. The minister and church received the truth with joy, which the minister signified by a motion of thanks to the speaker, which he desired to have the congregation signify by standing up on their feet, which they did. The minister then addressed me, invoking God's blessing to go with me in proclaiming the gospel to the children of men. I thank the Lord I had an opportunity of preaching the "gospel of the kingdom" in Central America, for a witness. They enjoyed the singing very much. O how they did sing "Happy day," in the words,—

> "So let our lips and lives express
> The holy gospel we profess";

which they sung out of my little hymn book, with the words printed on the outside of the cover—"Advent Hymns." That title did not scare them, I think, for they wanted to get the books to sing in, in the church. I gave the preacher one, and one of every kind of book I had with me. I had visited their houses, and distributed what tracts I had left to the poor class, which they received with a warm "thank you, sir." The next day, one of the officers of the church came to me and requested me to preach. He said the tracts I had scattered had waked up quite an interest among the people to hear more on the subject. I would suggest that the Publication Society send a package of tracts, and one copy of the Crisis. Direct to the preacher in charge at that mission. I think him to be a good man. The government and many of the people are Catholics. Any help this mission church can get is received very thankfully.

The first Sunday after sailing from Cal., being the next day, the people were so rough that there was no attempt made by any one for preaching. My time was spent in circulating books, and in defending the "hope." Some infidels, some Catholics, some Jews, and a great many that had been in the mountains for six or eight years, and had not been to a meeting in that time, were very rough.

The next Sunday was the storm, and there could not be any meeting. The next, we were sailing down the San Juan river, on a small boat, with about one thousand on board, and hardly room to stand up on the boat, and almost starved at that. The people were cross and mad, on account of the poor fare. There was no chance for a meeting there. The next Sunday was the day we sailed from Greytown. There was so much confusion in getting ready and putting water aboard, and so much grumbling all over the decks of the boat, that there was no use in trying to have a meeting.

The next Sunday, and last on board, the Capt. concluded to put into force the rules of the ship. He gave orders to stop gambling, and gave out that there would be preaching on the stern of the boat, at half past ten o'clock A. M. A Baptist minister preached a very good discourse. There was some talk of his preaching on the bow of the boat in the afternoon; but the passengers said, "If he comes on this end of the boat, we will throw him overboard"; that there was a preacher on that end of the boat, and if any one preached he should. I was the one referred to. The Capt. was consulted, and his permission granted. So, of course, I improved the occasion. Text, Prov. 11: 31. Although the congregation was the roughest set of people that I ever addressed, yet they behaved as well, and listened with as much interest, as any congregation I ever spoke to. It was made up of almost all nations and sects. After that, I could hear a good many remarks made that assured me that there was good done.

One would say, "I can hardly believe it, yet it is the most reasonable doctrine that I ever heard. I should like to hear you through." I heard one Catholic say, if we were right, it was better for him to know it, and he was going to look into it; for, said he, "I have to do penance, go to confessional, abstain from meat, all of which is a great deal of trouble; and if we can be saved without all that trouble, it is better."

We arrived in N. Y. Thursday, Sept. 14th, making thirty-two days, instead of twenty-five, that the boat of the old line made. The line we came on they call the "opposition." I think the first syllable should be im, instead of op. It would convey the true meaning—imposition. I think there should be a little legislation to make those companies treat their passengers like human beings, and not like four-footed beasts, because they happen to be poor and cannot pay cabin passage. The meat they call beef, that they set before the steerage passengers, is an insult to a human being; and what is good before being cooked is served up in such a dirty manner that it is not fit to eat. If the officers of the boat had to eat it for one month, I think they would agree with me. A person going in the steerage should take food enough to last to the Isthmus, and then replenish for the other side. Take soda crackers, and ginger snaps, put up in tin cans, also meats and fruits.

But I should never advise my friends to go in the "opposition," by the way of Nicaragua, especially females: it don't pay. There is a good deal of danger, and many privations. In my case, I wanted to see the country, and oh, what a country! I thank the Lord that my birth was in a land that I prize as much more than that, as I prize a beautiful garden above a wilderness. I have seen the country where tropical fruits grow. It is a universal wilderness, no enterprise, no society, the people ignorant and lazy; no vegetables; cannot rove over the woodland for fear of the wild creatures killing you. The climate, to be sure, is good for particular conditions of health. I never felt better. And as for California, let those live there that want to. I think there are places in America with as good climate, and where you can have the benefits of a shower of rain in six months, and be privileged with the sight of some green grass, which is a luxury compared to that dry, scorched, parched, dusty place. I think I could live there without the asthma, although some people have it there; but by changing from one part to the other, they get relief.

I do not know what I shall be forced to do to get rid of so much suffering, but I dislike, in order to get rid of one trouble, to add three or four more. I think, however, that we shall have to wait till Jesus comes, before we shall have it all right. I long to see that time, when this mortal shall put on immortality.

I have been laboring in Murray, where the Lord has poured out his Spirit. About ten started for the kingdom. I labored till I was so sick I had to come home and doctor myself. I am now some better. Yours waiting for the coming of Jesus, P. A. Smith.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 7th, 1865.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

Dear Brother:—I have of late been passing through the severest affliction and trials of my life. Suddenly and unexpectedly, I was called to part with my only daughter, leaving us lonely to sigh and weep. My wife is feeble, but, by the grace of God, able to bear it with christian resignation. The condition of my family was such that it became necessary for me to make some change. Having an only son left, with his wife, and they being desirous of our being together, and his business being in Lynn, in order to bring it about, it became necessary for me to change location. Consulting duty, and this being the only opening, I came to Salem, found a rent, and engaged it (as I could find none in Lynn, where we could live in a family together). I soon went to Groton and sent my goods to Salem, and I found it quite a trial to leave the associations of forty years, and the homestead of thirty; the place of my married life, and the birthplace of my children, and leaving all but one sleeping in the shady cemetery, till they come from the land of the enemy, and we with them range fair Eden's bowers.

But now I am pleasantly situated in Salem, which denotes peace, and hope, by the blessing of the Lord, to be useful till the coming of our Lord and Master. And I hope it will be so that I can visit my brethren, and preach the gospel of the kingdom to some who may come to the knowledge of the truth and be saved. In this transition state, I have been unable to answer many kind, sympathizing letters, which have been of much comfort to me and wife. God bless you all, and help us to be faithful to the end, and receive a crown of life. L. Boutell.

Salem, Mass., Nov. 10th, 1865.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to insert in the Crisis, an obituary of a dear sister in Christ, Sr. Hale. One who was unknown, yet well known; a Methodist, but one who loved our hope. None knew her but to love her, she was so meek and unassuming. But she has fallen a victim to death. The enemy claims her, but not long will he hold the precious dust. Our Life-giver will soon restore her to us again, with all of the sainted dead.

Before her death, this dear sister had the pleasure of witnessing the conversion of an only son. Her joy was inexpressible.

The Lord is pouring out his Spirit in this place. Souls are being awakened and converted. Some four have given good evidence; others are tender and under concern of mind. Some are coming fast into the truth. I give them tracts, send them our papers. For this one thing I have been praying and wrestling with God, that the people might know the truth and be sanctified by it. Pray for us, that the Lord may raise up others in this place to honor his great name. The harvest truly is great, but laborers are few.

I have been telling our people here, I could not stay, unless the Lord moved in this place. The children of God are being awakened. All classes,—Orthodox, Baptist, Methodist, and Adventist, work together, and know no name but Christ. It is blessed. All the dear children are willing to work together for the salvation of sinners. What care we for those who have not the cause of Christ at heart? Pray for me, that I may be wise as a serpent, but harmless as a dove, that I may win souls to Christ. Some of the first class of people labor with us. One is an Orthodox deacon, a very devoted man. L. Davis.

Fitzwilliam, N. H.

From Bro. J. K. Bellows.

Bro. Grant:—Our meeting at Hoosick, in September last, was a good one. We commenced Wednesday evening, Sept. 17th, with a good attendance, and interest and anxiety to hear. The brethren and sisters had a mind to work. Some from abroad took hold in earnest. The Spirit of the Lord was present. The church was quickened, and sinners convicted, one converted, and two baptized. Bro. Jacob Wilber, of West Hoosick, New York, was set apart for the ministry, and the meeting left a good impression upon the community.

I spent two Sundays at Pownal, Vt., Bro. Batchelor's old battle-ground. Found things in a bad state; a large number of professors, and a few holding on to the faith, keeping clear of picnics and church fairs, and looking and longing for deliverance. Stopped at Eld. Blanchard's, in Stamford, Vt., an old pilgrim and waymark. Had two good meetings.

Oct. [illegible]th, went to Florida, Mass. While there the snow fell ten inches, and hindered our meetings. The 29th, I was at Savoy. Here is a lamentable division, that never ought to have been, and I hope the stray sheep will soon come back into the fold again. I am now at Plainfield, Ms., holding meetings. Here, too, we see the effect of abounding iniquity, the love of some waxing cold, and I sometimes feel almost discouraged. But my trust is in the Lord. Pray for me. J. K. Bellows.

Bro. J. T. Dixon writes:—"My post office address for three weeks will be Rutland, Vt., care of Eld. H. F. Carpenter. Letters forwarded me from home I have not received, so cannot reply. Don't know who they were. Write again."

☞ Bro. S. C. Hancock wishes us to say that he is about to issue another edition of his music to Eld. D. T. Taylor's "Glad Voices," and that orders may be addressed to him at Forestville, Ct.

Obituaries.

Lambert. Died of consumption, in Mapleton, Kansas, Oct. 24th, Sr. Mary K. Lambert, aged forty-seven years.

Sr. Lambert, daughter of Justus Ives, was born in the town of Russels, St. Lawrence county, N. Y. She experienced religion at the age of fourteen, and joined the Presbyterian church. She was married to Taylor Wright at the age of seventeen, and was left a widow at twenty-two. At the age of twenty-three she joined the Advent Christian church, passed through all the fanaticism of '43 and '44, but remained firm in the faith, as her abundant labors in many parts of the United States will prove.

She labored in the temperance cause in the counties of Seneca and Allegheny, and many other places, also preaching the Gospel of Christ as she travelled through the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Ohio, Indiana, and extensively in Illinois, where over one hundred were converted under her labors in Pike and Brown counties alone. About that time she was married to Joseph E. Lambert, of Illinois. Her health failing, her physician advised her to remove to a Southern climate. Accordingly she moved to Texas. Her health improving at first, and then declining, she removed to Kansas, where she remained and continued her labors as health would permit until her death.

Wherever she has lived she was always engaged in some reform for the improvement and elevation of the human race. Her unflinching zeal and energy did not fail her till the last. She suffered much during her last illness, yet submitted to her affliction with christian resignation. Her mind was composed and her faith and confidence in God firm and unmoved. She leaves many friends to mourn her early exit. Many who have known her in years past will feel and know that the gospel of God's dear Son has been bereft of one of its most faithful and able advocates, and the world has lost a faithful christian counsellor.

She was followed to her grave by her family and friends. Her funeral services were held by Elder E. R. Nugent, a Presbyterian brother, no minister of like precious faith being within reach. D. L. Campbell.

Millennial Harbinger and Herald of Life please copy.

Roby. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Warner, N. H., Aug. 23d, 1865, Flora Ettie, only daughter of Bro. and Sr. Simeon Roby, aged seven months and eight days.

The funeral was attended by Bro. John G. Hook. Though they miss the sweet young face, and their hearts yearn for the little prattling voice that shall sound in their dwelling no more, they have an assurance which nothing can obliterate, that their precious one will come forth again blooming in immortality, to die no more.

> Then father, mother, brother dear,
> Trust in the Lord, be of good cheer;
> Flora, we know, will rise again,
> Free from sickness, death and pain.
>
> In that blest land to which we go,
> No sorrow shall we ever know;
> Then we will shout our suffering o'er,
> When landed safe on Canaan's shore.

Blanchard. Died in Charlestown, Mass., Nov. 7th, 1865, of typhoid fever, Sr. Sarah Blanchard, aged seventy-three years.

Sr. Blanchard was an ardent lover of the christian's blessed hope, and has long enjoyed its holy comfort. She has been an active member of the body of Christ, and as the result, she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, expecting to be awakened soon to attend the marriage of the Lamb. Like the setting sun, she still shines by reflected light from her good works. We miss her now, but hope to greet her soon in the kingdom of heaven, where none will ever be sick or sad. Miles Grant.

Peterson. Died in Utica, Minn., Thursday morning, Oct. 26th, Nancy Jane Peterson, wife of Andrew Peterson, and daughter of Solomon Ramer of that place, aged twenty-five years and seven months.

She was a dutiful daughter, a faithful wife, and an affectionate mother. When the trying hour for her exit from life had come, she exclaimed, "Blessed Jesus—sweet sleep," and closed her eyes in death without a struggle or a groan.

Wilson. Died in Kittery, Me., Feb. 19th, 1865, of consumption, Sr. Lucinda Wilson, daughter of Bro. Augustus and Sr. Nancy Wilson, aged twenty years and five months.

Sr. Lucinda embraced religion about three years since. Her voice has often been heard, exhorting and warning sinners to flee from the impending storm. She met death with calm trust, and quietly fell asleep in Christ. As a family we expect, if faithful to our trust, to meet in the morning. Praise God for the prospect the christian has of immortality. J. D. Goodwin.

Hough. Died in East Douglass, Oct. 21st, of diphtheria, Elmer E. Hough, aged four years, eleven months.

No age is exempt from the cruel enemy death. May the parents derive comfort from the hope of soon meeting Elmer in a deathless world. Funeral by the writer. S. G. Mathewson.

An affectionate wife, tender mother, and a self-sacrificing, christian friend, has left us to mourn her loss. The mourning circle was comforted by a discourse from our pastor, George W. Cutting, from John 14: 2, 3. Lizzie Davis.

Help, Brethren!

The church in Biddeford, Me., believing in the speedy advent of our Savior, and having struggled hard to sustain a meeting, so that the people shall hear the doctrine of Jesus' second advent, have decided to build them a house for that purpose, as they cannot sustain their meetings and pay the amount of rent which they will have to pay the coming year, all of them being poor, and would thankfully receive any assistance which any one would feel a privilege to render. Now, dear brethren, you who can, help this church, for they are worthy of your assistance. W. H. Mitchell, A. W. Sibley, Miles Grant.

O glorious morning, when Jesus shall come
[illegible] to take his bride home,
[illegible] forever will rest
[illegible] to the home of the blest.
O glorious morning, when saints come again
From the enemy's land where so long they have lain;
What shouts, what rejoicing, as upward they'll rise
To meet their dear Savior they love in the skies.
We'll hail that glad morn which brings us sweet peace,
When trouble and care and suffering will cease,
When the poor aching invalid's freed from all pain,
And sickness and mourning will ne'er reign again.
O thrice blessed home, where death comes no more,
And parting with loved ones forever is o'er;
Where sin never enters that bright starry land,
And naught mars the peace of the pure ransomed band.
I long for that home where the bright beaming eye
Will shine [illegible], where sorrow will die;
[illegible] on that fair radiant shore,
[illegible], when time is no more.

SEPARATION FROM THE WORLD
THE CONDITION OF TRUE SERVICE TO GOD.

The followers of Jesus of Nazareth might be expected to know that it is not by the energies, activities, and powers of the natural man, and that it is not by the wisdom, resources, and influences of the world, that their mission and the glory of his name can be promoted. Yet who, that regards the true objects of the church's existence here, can see without pain and humiliation the extent to which the professing churches are falling back upon these elements of worldly success? It is considered not only allowable, but necessary, to surround the worship of God with carnal attractions; to resort to the expedients of worldly policy; to rely upon talent, intellectual cultivation, and the arts of eloquence; to seek wealth, honor, worldly position, worldly alliances; and to make the church a felt power in the affairs of the world, as the means by which the gospel is to be diffused, the truth advocated, souls saved, God served and glorified. Almost every degree of worldly conformity is justified under the plea of "becoming all things to all men." Christians almost seem to be persuaded that Satan will cast out Satan, and that he is at length divided against himself, to the overthrow of his kingdom.

Some, who perceive the evil, shrink from the consequences of separation from it. Some, who have prayerfully sought to walk in fellowship with Christ, to live a life of faith upon the Son of God, and to serve him in his own way, are perplexed and tried; and their perplexity is increased by the arguments and expostulations of those who are reputed wise. "See," they say, "how you are narrowing your sphere of usefulness, cutting yourself off from access to men, exciting prejudice, and losing your hold especially upon the young." It is a hard lesson to learn to follow where he leads, leaving the results in his hands; and in the midst of these perplexities it may be well to ask whether our shrinking from humiliation is not disguising itself as a zeal for God.

Nothing stands out more plainly in Scripture than the fact that the service of God involves separation from the world. When he calls a chosen instrument to eminent service, in which, it might seem, the highest endowments and accomplishments, and all the advantages of power and position were demanded, he chooses one destitute of these supposed qualifications; or, if he chooses one who possesses them, he sets them all aside, and makes it only more evident that "no flesh should glory in his presence." "Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?"

"The lesson is impressively taught in the history of Moses, "the servant of God." See him at the age of forty years, in the maturity of manhood, learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, mighty in word and deed, acknowledged as the son of Pharaoh's daughter, in the height of renown at the court of Egypt, with one foot on the step of its throne, and all the power of present glory within his grasp. There, men would have thought, were unequaled advantages for the service of God and the relief of his oppressed people. The spirit of expediency which has crept into the counsels of the church would have regarded it as worse than folly to relinquish all this to take part with his brethren, or at least would have deemed it a wiser love to have used the power of Pharaoh's sceptre on their behalf. The splendor and influence of his position would have secured the confidence of the Israelites; and in the wise use of his power, he might have benefited the oppressors at the same time that he emancipated the oppressed. So it seemed to sense; but "by faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God." The first step toward his destined office was separation from that which, to the world, must have seemed the best means of securing his object.

When he had renounced the name of Pharaoh's daughter, and its accompanying honor and influence, nature would conclude that a man so endowed, at that period of his life, with all the claims which such a sacrifice gave him upon the gratitude and confidence of his brethren, was the very man, and that the very time, to lead them to liberty. Moses himself seems to have had such an impression. "For he supposed his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them." But then the faith which separated him from Pharaoh's court, led him to be faithful in rebuking sin in Israel; and so "they refused him." Rejected by Israel, and refused by Pharaoh, the favorite of a court is a fugitive in Midian—the emancipator of Israel is feeding a flock in the wilderness. Now worldly wisdom may taunt him with folly, and probably Moses himself had many misgivings when he saw in what his course had, for the time being, ended. But it was there in the desert, and not at the court of Pharaoh, that God trained a ruler and a leader for his people.

Forty years were spent in that school, not surely in cultivating the gifts which man would regard as essential to the character of the emancipator, leader, and legislator of a nation. And now behold him at the burning bush. The vigor of youth is spent; the fire of natural ambition is extinguished; he has reached the four-score years of which he has sung—"Yet is their strength labor and sorrow"; the wisdom of Egypt has been unlearned; the man "mighty in word and deed" now says of himself, "I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue"; so far as either Israelite or Egyptian could recall his name from the oblivion of forty years, it was [illegible] associated with [illegible] world, and had been cast out by it; after the pride and energy of the flesh had been subdued, and he stood stripped of all that the world had given or could claim—nothing but a poor old man—that the Lord said: "Come, now, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people, the children of Israel, out of Egypt." So God ever orders it, "that no flesh should glory in his presence."

Moses, in the confidence of an untaught and impetuous zeal, like many a child of God since, who has thought to carry all before him, "supposed that his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them." But forty years later, when God had actually called him to a service on which, confident and self-reliant, he had been so eager to enter, how he shrinks back in conscious insufficiency! "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel?" It was then, and only then, that God could say: "Certainly I will be with thee." And thus in deepest humiliation and trial, the Lord empties his chosen servants, and prepares them to say, in all service and success: "Yet not I, but the grace of God that was with me."

Robert Hall, himself a striking instance of the utter powerlessness of the most brilliant genius and the most enchanting eloquence in the service of God, says: "It is worthy of observation, that those who have had the greatest success in preaching the gospel, have ever been the most deeply convinced of this important truth. Brainerd, and Schwartz, and Eliot, and those in every age who have had the greatest success in turning men to righteousness, have been the first to declare that they were nothing; that they merely planted and watered, but that it was God who gave the increase." The place of the servant of God is to hide himself, and let God appear.

We close with an important suggestion by one who spoke from experience: "The preparation for active service is in secret with God; in learning to know ourselves in communion with him. There the battle is really fought. Power for active service is acquired not in active service, but in intercourse with God in secret."—The Witness.

For the World's Crisis.

A CHRISTIAN SOLDIER.

Am I called to be a soldier of the cross? Then I must equip myself for the battle; enroll myself under the banner of my Captain, and give up my whole being to his commands. Now, he has ordered me to be "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace"; that is, to abound in the knowledge of his word; and have on the girdle of truth, and "the breastplate of righteousness," believing what God has spoken he will perform; being pure in heart; truthful in all my ways; abounding in good works; having on "the helmet of salvation"; having confidence in ultimate victory through our Lord Jesus Christ; having "the shield of faith," to enable me to use "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," with unwavering confidence. Having all these in our possession, we are commanded to "stand fast." Arouse! thee, then, O drowsy soldier; arise! "put on the whole armor of God." Be courageous, thine immortal life is at stake. Pray "with all prayer, and supplication in the Spirit," for thy strength is in the Lord. He will give thee wisdom to use thy weapons skillfully, and strength to "fight the good fight of faith," and to lay hold on eternal life. "The fearful und unbelieving" the Lord will not receive.

We are nearing the gates of the New Jerusalem, the city of our God. We can almost behold the flag of glory floating in the celestial breeze. Courage, then, brother, stand manfully to the foe. Keep thy armor bright, at the foot of the cross, for in thy God is all thy strength. Seek not to save thy life, lest thou lose it. Let thy motto be, Victory! victory in the Lord! Let thy light shine. Fight for the kingdom, and a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Reach forth thy hand, take hold of the hope set before thee. Our Captain will soon return to lead us on to victory. A few more battles with the enemy of all righteousness, and our victory will be complete. Our Lord has said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."

Philadelphia. JOHN M. STETLER.

THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

"We obtain light upon the intermediate state by what is said to Abraham (Gen. 25: 8),—'Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and was gathered to his people.' This, by a superficial reader of the Bible, might be supposed to mean that Abraham's body was buried with his people. But it is not, for his fathers were buried hundreds of miles from him; some in Chaldea, and Terah in Haran, in Mesopotamia; while Abraham was buried in the cave of Machpelah, in Canaan. The sense of the passage is this: that he was gathered to the assembly of the blest,—that he went to those good men among his ancestors, who were united to that assembly." G.

It is an easy matter to assume a point; so G. assumes that Abraham had a ghost—a soul, that he gave up to go to his "good fathers." The fact is, so far as Scripture gives us an account of his "fathers," they were all idolaters; and hence he was called to go out from his kindred and his father's house to another land; but it seems G. places him back among them when dead; perhaps they had passed a purgatory and become "good men." Abraham was gathered unto his fathers, without distinction of moral character; and hence he must be in a state involving a common gathering; they were all in heaven, or all in hell, if G.'s theory is true; but if all were silent in death, then he could be gathered into the same state.

Let us look at this text and subject a little further. It was Abraham that gave up the ghost. Now if he gave up the ghost then, he—Abraham—had no ghost left. Abraham lost the possession of that which he gave up; so that, if the ghost was his soul, he lost his soul and was without one. The text saith nothing of Abraham's ghost or soul being gathered to his fathers; it was Abraham who was gathered; the same person who gave up the ghost, and not the ghost he gave up. Was the body Abraham? According to G.'s theory, it was the body that gave up the soul; and yet, strange to tell, it was the thing given up, and not he who gave it up, that was gathered to his fathers!

But G. has mangled the text, and put his words in the place of God's words. The text saith, "Abraham gave up the ghost, and died." [illegible] assumes [illegible] Prof. Pick, in his Bible Student's Concordance, says is, literally, "wasted away." Abraham was "in a good old age," saith the text, and he "wasted away, and died." How very plain and simple is truth. The term osaph—translated gathered—Prof. Pick gives the literal sense, "to be brought in." Abraham died, and was brought into the state of his people, which was the state of death, where "there is no knowledge."

The same thing is said of Ishmael, ver. 17 of the same chapter, as is said of Abraham, viz: that "he gave up the ghost and died, and was gathered to his people." As nothing very good is recorded of Ishmael, and he did "mock" the child of promise, it is for G. to show that he was a "good man." But whatever his character, he was gathered to the same "people" as Abraham, for all G. can prove to the contrary. Whatever the state of "the people" was, it was a state of death, not life.—Herald of Life.

SONNET.
SUGGESTED BY GOUGH'S LECTURE ON "HABIT."

The power of habit! who can estimate
Its influence on the heart, the hopes, the will?
Like ermine snow-flakes fall they silently,
Each in its tiny place, till mountains great
Of frigid vanity the valleys fill!
When, lo! the frowning clouds a flood outpour,—
The fragile mountains melt, they rush and roar,
And madly revel in stark misery!
Bad habits! are not they a hideous height
Of vain and villainous hypocrisy?
Snow white without,—alas! how false within!
Just retribution storms, and all is night!
Flee! flee! oh tempted soul, from every sin;
Crush out the fiends of hell, and heaven win!

EDWARD P. NOWELL.

WINGS OR WEIGHTS.

Hebrews 12 is so precious that my Bible almost always opens there. "Laying aside every weight." Oh! then how easily and joyfully could we "run." But what are these weights, and how shall they be laid aside? Every christian has his own, and probably no two find the same equally burdensome. Our Father gives us blessings—wings to assist our upward flight to him, but we, through sin, change them to "weights." The more precious the gift, the greater the curse it becomes, if its use is perverted. The greater the ascent the wings might have made for us, the greater the degradation the "weights" will cause us.

Gifts, physical, intellectual and spiritual, are all wings or weights—just as we choose. The gratification of our desire for food is an enjoyment essential to the prolongation of physical life, yet it is often made the means of shortening it, or of producing untold suffering. The marriage relation, that most sacred of earthly ties, when wisely and truly enjoyed, may, nevertheless, become the source of the deepest sorrow and most degrading misery. Another has said that the most dreadful corruption is the corruption of the best thing. Shall we, can we take the richest gifts of our ever loving Father, and make them weights to keep us from loving and obeying him, when we might make wings of them with which to rise constantly higher and higher above every defiling thing of earth, getting new and sweeter foretastes of heavenly joy? The watchful christian finds that every gratified desire of the "old nature" becomes a weight and hindrance to the "new life," and every act of self-denial increases the strength and vigor of the "new nature." Let us all be watchful, ever "looking unto Jesus," making for ourselves wings, so that our "running" shall be with flying speed, hindering none, and being hindered never.

My dear readers, are you looking to Jesus, conscious that his gracious blood has made you pure, and does your heart respond to the desire to lay aside every weight? Oh! then, rejoice, for the Lord knoweth them that are his, and causeth all things to work together for your good. Most wonderful truth! How seldom is it fully realized! How imperfectly do we comprehend the workings of such a law and the goodness and unbounded love of him who made it. "All things"—no exceptions—not even our mistakes and errors. We ask, how can it be? We cannot answer, but have only to believe our Father's word, and be happy.

But what can be said to you who do not love God, who are carrying your sins, cherishing them so dearly, that you do not realize that they are "weights," dragging you down to earth, to prove your ruin! Listen now, and believe your best friends, who would have you leave the service of your enemy, the arch deceiver, and come into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Listen to the loving voice of Jesus, who asks you to be his, that he may make you, with himself, an heir of his Father's love. You commend and admire the benevolence which can receive a poor, forlorn, despised child, and bestow upon it a parent's tender and patient care, and can you be unmoved by God's infinite condescension and boundless love to the sinner?—Friend of Virtue.

THE CLOSING HOURS OF TIME.

Are we really in the winding up of our world's history? If so, what a solemn thought. All to be over soon! Our work all to be closed up!! A day of settlement to dawn!!! Yes, the scrutinizing eye of the Judge will then be turned with a searching glance upon us. Our past history of faithfulness, or unfaithfulness, will then reappear, to approve or condemn us. Our hearts, filled with heavenly zeal, or chilling lukewarmness, will then decide our claims to the felicities of a celestial paradise; for we shall then continue "holy still" or "filthy still." Are we indeed nearing a day of such magnitude? Are we truly living in the closing hours of time? We cannot evade the conclusion that such is the case. Then what is our duty? If the Master is about to return, how should we improve these closing hours? If we have been remiss in duty in days gone by, should we not begin now to do the will of Christ? If we have lived prayerless lives, let us begin to visit the throne of grace, and seek pardon for past indifference, and strength for time to come. Let us go to work for God, and pluck men as brands from the burning. The hours fly—will we improve them? The closing hours of time are upon us; shall we squander them in idleness? Oh! sound out the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and do it with devoted hearts, and earnest minds.—Voice of the West.

KEEP YOUR PROMISE.—A promise given is a bond inviolable. A man is already of consequence in the world when it is known that we can implicitly rely on him. I have frequently seen such a man preferred to a long list of applicants for some important charge. He has been lifted at once into station and fortune, because he has the reputation that [illegible]

BLIND?—YES, THEY ARE.

Multitudes are now blind that once could see, that once had their eyes opened. Instead of being able to say with the blind man in the gospel, "Whereas I was once blind, now I see,"—it is evident that whereas they once saw, now are they blind, judicially blind; a blindness most fearful, most terrible, most lamentable!

Look at the writings and pulpit ministrations of some ministers and editors some ten or twenty years ago. The spirit of Bible reform was then manifested, a holy unction, a conscience tender as the apple of the eye; they rose above a man-fearing spirit, a time-serving policy. God was evidently with them in very deed, they had power from on high, God crowned their labors marvellously. Mark the writings and preachings of these same public teachers—where now the flash of holy zeal, the fire pentecostal? Alas! alas! what a falling off, what a sad, lamentable degeneracy! The form of godliness is still kept up, but where the soul, the life, the power? the flint, the nail, the hammer? They are evidently shorn of their strength. Wherefore? —they have hewn out to themselves cisterns, broken cisterns that hold no water. They have gradually yielded to the tempter, lowered the gospel standard, bowed the knee to the popular voice. The Holy Spirit is grieved, takes his flight!

Christ says, "He that findeth his life shall lose it! and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

The Earnest Christian, a valuable monthly, alluding to this backsliding in old age, says: "The body may retain its form long after vitality is fled.... The form of devotion may be retained long after the spirit has departed. Consider the history of Solomon. The God of nature gave him wisdom above all men. The God of grace gave him another heart; and, in a special sense, the Lord loved him. Yet, strange to say, 'it came to pass when Solomon was old,' that 'his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel.' He yielded to a compromising spirit—the sin of old age. The altar and worship of Jehovah he never thought of forsaking; but in sinful compliance to the wishes of his wives, he gave countenance and support to the worship of false gods. 'And the Lord was angry with Solomon.'

"How many, who, in their younger days were noted for their uncompromising hostility to the fashionable follies and vanities of the world, find reasons, when their children come upon the stage of action, in favor of practices, which, when they walked in the light of the Spirit, they strongly condemned.—What a pitiable sight to see men in old age spending the remnant of their days in pulling down the edifice for the erection of which they devoted the strength of their manhood."—Home Thrusts.

"I CANNOT REVERSE IT."

God, in his wisdom, having placed "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem" before the laying of the foundation of the temple (Isa. 44; 28), "I cannot reverse it" (Num. 23: 20), for that would violate the express word of God, which says "one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass."—Matt. 5: 18. Being commanded to "hold fast the form of sound words" (2 Tim. 1: 13), "I cannot reverse" the order of things in the book of God, hence am compelled to admit that "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," (Dan. 9: 25), went forth before the laying of the foundation of the temple; therefore, if the foundation of the temple was laid in the second year of Cyrus (Ezra 3: 8), "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem" must have gone forth "in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia; that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled" (Ezra 1: 1), saying, I "will build them as at the first" (Jer. 33: 7). When they were "BUILDED AS AT THE FIRST," Jerusalem was restored; and if the object of the decree of Cyrus was to fulfill this, "the word of the Lord," Daniel's 69 weeks cannot be reckoned from a later epoch. "I WILL HELP THEE."

"For I, the Lord thy God, will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee."—Isa. 41. 13.

Dearly beloved, chosen ones, take courage! Here is a "thus saith the LORD" for you. "Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy GOD; I will strengthen thee; yea I will help thee; yea I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." Believe this, and rest upon this promise, "I will help thee." If you are now doing your duty, and have a conscience void of offence, and feel your need of help, ask for it in faith.

If you are not quite clear in regard to your standing, if you have doubts and fears, yet honestly desire to please God and feel willing to deny yourself and take up your cross, go FORWARD. Believe him who says, "I will help thee." Is your companion or your dear child out of the ark of safety? And are you praying and laboring for their salvation? "Fear not, I will help thee." Let this sure word of promise increase your hope and strengthen your faith.

Praise the Lord for what he has done, and trust that he will yet do more and better for you than you can ask or even think.

A LAWYER ON PREACHING.

I have been a listener to sermons for fifty years, and either I have changed or there has been a change for the worse in the delivery of the gospel message. There is less earnestness, less directness, less logical power, and less study than there was thirty years ago; and as a necessary consequence, the general style has become diffuse, if not superficial, and the result less efficient. If I am right in this, we have an important fact to be dealt with, and it ought to be removed, greatly modified, and that immediately.

What is the remedy? Let the ministers of the gospel review their past history, and return, as soon as it is possible, to the good old paths of their fathers, and preach the Bible in all its simplicity and grandeur.

No pulpit orator can hope to orator much into his audience unless he follows his text closely, and he must advance nothing that does not tend directly to illustrate his main proposition; and, when his argument is finished, he should not spend half an hour, more or less, in restating his propositions.

Many ministers deliver finely written, and even classical sermons, on very solemn subjects, but they are essays merely; and their effect is to lower the standard of christian [illegible]

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In the closing remarks of our last article, we proposed to show in this one that all the rewards of the righteous, and the punishments of the wicked, are to take place after the day of judgment, and not before.

We will now refer to a few positive declarations of the Bible, which plainly show that no one will receive his or her reward till Christ comes and raises the dead, and changes the living. We will refer the reader to John 5: 29. "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear this voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." And also in Rev. 20, we find it brought to view that "the dead small and great" shall "stand before God," when they would be "judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Also in Jude 14th and 15th verses, where the apostle refers to the prophecy of Enoch, who speaks of the Lord's coming "with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment" upon the ungodly. But when is the time of the destruction here spoken of? We will let St. Paul answer, in 2 Thess. 1: 7: "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Again, in Matt. 16: 27: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." See Luke 14: 14: "And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." We also find, in 1 Pet. 5: 4: "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory, that fadeth not away."—In Psa. 17: 15, the Psalmist says: "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." In 2 Tim. 4: 8, Paul tells us that "henceforth there is laid up for" him "a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give" him at that day; and not to "him" only, but unto all them also that love his appearing; which plainly shows that St. Paul will receive his crown when Christ comes to raise the dead, and sit in judgment upon the wicked.

Perhaps some one will ask the question, "What will become of the saint and the sinner, between death and the resurrection?" We answer, they will be silent in their graves. "What! does not the spirit return to God who gave it?" Yes, indeed it does; but what is the spirit? We answer, negatively, it is not an immortal soul, that can live as a separate entity from the body; for the Hebrew word (ruach) from which spirit is translated, is rendered wind, air, and breath, but never translated soul; and never translated "immortal spirit," or "never-dying spirit;" but the word from which soul is translated, in Hebrew, means life and person; but never in all the Bible is it called immortal. But if the word nephesh, which is translated soul, when applied to man, is called immortal, so by the same rule, we can prove the beasts and creeping things of the earth, and fish in the sea, to have immortal souls; for the word nephesh, which is rendered soul, when applied to man, is often applied to beasts. The fact in the case is, that according to the Bible, no one is immortal but God. But supposing that the spirit of man is an immortal soul, which returns to God who gave it; then, of course, the spirit of beast is an immortal soul, that goeth downward to the earth, and must be a never-dying soul, and live somewhere in the earth forever. This is the only conclusion we can arrive at, if we call the word spirit an immortal, self-existent entity; for the spirit of man, and the spirit of beast, are both from one Hebrew word (ruach), and, of course, must have the same meaning in relation to man as it does to the beast, and the same meaning in relation to the beast as it does to man.

In relation to the Greek word pneuma, which is rendered spirit in the New Testament, it is never called an immortal, or never-dying spirit, and is never translated soul; but the word pneuma, which is rendered spirit so often in the New Testament, very frequently refers to the mind in man, or the faculties of the mind, which cannot exist as a separate entity from the body, any more than fire can blaze without fuel. The faculties, or mind in man, exist only by the action of the nerves on the brain; and if any one can make out that a man's brains are immortal, and can live separate from the body, then they will make out that the man's mind is an immortal soul, and leaves the body at death, and goes to heaven or hell in the shape of live brains.

But oh, adsurdity, thou art cruel!

We will leave the subject of the spirit, and take the word soul. Perhaps the reader says, "I wonder if the man is going to try to make out that the soul is not immortal? Can it be possible that he has gone into such an error as that? when in fact our fathers and mothers have always told us that we had immortal souls, and we have been taught from childhood, by our ministers, that every person has an immortal soul, that went immediately to heaven, at the death of the body, if a christian; or to hell, if wicked, and there roll in the flames of fire and brimstone to all eternity!" But stop a moment, dear reader, and do not be too fast. Did you ever find the word immortal soul, or never-dying soul, or immortal spirit, and never-dying spirit, in the Bible? Do you think that holy book of God carries out the devil's lie, and declares that man shall not surely die, but live eternally in the flames of fire, for his sins which were committed here on earth? when in fact God declares that the sinner shall die and be consumed, or "destroyed," or die "the second death," and be burned up root and branch, "and be as though they had not been."

Let us see if we can't find a plenty of proof that the wicked are mortal and must die, soul and body. If we find that God only hath immortality, surely man has not got it. Now let us turn to 1 Tim. 6: 15, 16. Here it is positively asserted that God "only hath immortality," and that he is the only potentate and Lord of lords; so that if any person contends that the word only does not show us to be mortal, by the same rule we are all potentates, and supreme Lords. "I'M AS UNHAPPY AS I CAN BE."

So said a little girl to herself one autumn evening, as she was passing a long covered bridge. "I'm real mad about it, and I think it's very mean that I can't have it." Bessie thought she was alone on the bridge, and she started in alarm when she heard a voice say,

"Little girl, come back, and let me speak to you."

The voice was so pleasant that the child turned back, and a few steps from her, resting on a beam, sat a small woman, with bent form and wrinkled face, who asked, "Will you tell me your trouble?"

"My mother won't buy me a new cloak that I want, just like Mary Cloud's, and I want it so much," said Bessie.

"What's the matter with this cloak that you are now wearing? it is nice and warm, and very pretty."

"Why will not your mother get you one? tell me that, little girl."

"She says that this cloak is perfectly good, and that Harry, my cousin, whose father and mother are dead, needs all the money she can spare this winter."

"Has he an overcoat to wear?"

Bessie laughed. "Why, he is a little boy not big enough to get out alone, if he could walk; and he can't walk one step, and perhaps he never will."

"Would you like to take his place, and have just what he has?"

"No, not for anything."

"Would you like to be me, and carry this big basket a mile?"

"Would I like to be you?" said Bessie. "Why, no; you are old, and most ready to die; and I guess you are lame, by the way you are resting. No, I don't want to be you."

"Well, now, little girl, do you know that I would not be you—that I would not change my feeble body and my wrinkled face and my faded clothes for your young face and bright looks and your home; and yet I am, as you said, near death; and I haven't any one to take care of me, as you have."

"Why not?" almost gasped Bessie in astonishment.

"Because I don't wish to be unhappy, nor mad, nor do I wish to think that I have a mean mother."

"O," said Bessie, "I don't. Mother is so kind to me, and she is so good to Harry; but do you like to be old and wrinkled and lame, and to have no home?"

"Yes, I like all these things, because God sent them. He has let me live so many years to try and do a little good, and I have tried. . . . Now go home, and be thankful that you are young and strong, and have such a comfortable cloak to wear; and don't say again that you are unhappy or mad, for only sin can make people unhappy. Now, good bye, and don't forget me. I've a long way to go, and my basket is heavy."

Bessie watched the little woman as she slowly went her way through the bridge.

"O, dear me, I am so thankful for what I have, I won't mind not having the cloak any more," thought Bessie; and she truly intended to remain thankful to the end of her days.—Child's Paper.

THE CHILD'S POCKET ETIQUETTE.
IN TEN COMMANDMENTS.

Although not appertaining to the laws of health, the following hints on education, etiquette, and morals, from the pen of George Francis Train, are worth publishing:—

[Obey these, and you shall have five dollars every Fourth of July, which you may give to the poor.]

1. Always say, Yes, sir. No, sir. Yes, papa. No, papa. Thank you. No, thank you. Good night. Good morning. Never say how, or which, for what. Use no slang terms. Remember that good spelling, reading, writing, and grammar, are the base of all true education.

2. Clean faces, clean clothes, clean shoes, and clean finger nails, indicate good breeding. Never leave your clothes about the room. Have a place for every thing, and every thing in its place.

3. Rap before entering a room, and never leave it with your back to the company. Never enter a private room or public place with your cap on.

4. Always offer your seat to a lady or old gentleman. Let your companions enter the carriage or room first.

5. At table eat with your fork; sit up straight; never use your toothpick (although Europeans do), and when leaving ask to be excused.

7. Never overlook any one when reading or writing, nor talk or read aloud while others are reading. When conversing listen attentively, and do not interrupt or reply till the other is finished.

8. Never talk or whisper aloud at public places, and especially in a private room, where any one is singing or playing the piano.

9. Loud coughing, hawking, yawning, sneezing, and blowing, are ill mannered. In every case cover your mouth with your handkerchief (which never examine, nothing is more vulgar except spitting on the floor.)

10. Treat all with respect, especially the poor. Be careful to injure no one's feelings by unkind remarks. Never tell tales, make faces, call names, ridicule the lame, mimic the unfortunate, or be cruel to insects, birds, or animals.—Herald of Health.

DO YOU OBEY YOUR MOTHER?

Charles T—— was the son of a poor widow in the city of N. B. He and a younger brother were her only earthly comfort and care. But when ten years of age, he began to go with wicked companions, and yield to their wishes in disobedience to his mother's commands. Charles loved her, yet when tempten to do wrong forgot her kindness, and the grief he would occasion. Like all habits, good and evil, disobedience became stronger every time he was guilty of it; and sins which were once thought of with dread, Charles, before he was twelve years old, committed boldly.

One morning a police officer, whose business it is to arrest criminals, called at his humble home and took him away to be tried for stealing. The little fellow cried, and so did his lonely mother. After he was found guilty, it was decided to send him to the Reform-school in a distant city. The next news Charles' mother had from him, he was very sick. An epidemic prevailed in the institution, and he was among those most dangerously ill. A benevolent man gave Mrs. T—— money to pay the expenses of a visit to her sick boy. When she arrived at the large building in which he was confined, she entered a room where several lads were lying on their small beds, in pain, with no mother to watch over them. She looked around for the familiar locks of hair above the pale face of her son. But she sought in vain for the one for whom her heart was yearning. When an attendant came and told her that he was too ill to be there; he was in another room.

The weeping mother hastened to the apartment, and in a moment she saw the emaciated features of her Charles. It was a sad and affecting meeting. After she had talked [illegible] forehead, she unfolded a little handkerchief, and said it was his brother's at home.

"Oh, mother," exclaimed Charles, "lay it on my breast; I want it near my heart." And soon he added, "Does brother mind you, mother?" "Sometimes," she replied. "Oh, tell him to obey you always, always; if I had done so, I should not be here." And he buried his tearful face in the bed clothes and sobbed.

Mrs. T—— saw that Charles must die, and begged permission to stay all night in the room, and sleep on the floor, or watch by his side. But this was contrary to the rules of the institution, and she left him with a breaking heart. In the morning he was delirious, and soon after died. The same kind gentleman who helped the widow when she went to see Charles, sent for the body, and last autumn, as the leaves were dying, it was laid in the grave, upon which for the first time the snows of winter have fallen.

Think of Charles, and of what God said amid the thunderings and flames of Sinai: "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

THE TENTH COMMANDMENT.

"Thou shalt not covet," said all the boys in a breath, and then each one repeated it from beginning to end.

"That means you mustn't wish for things that don't belong to you," said Frank.

"I don't see how you can help it" exclaimed Sam. "I see heaps of things every day that I want."

"There are two ways of wishing," explained the teacher. "We may wish for things which we cannot get, but in an improper and dishonest way; or we may wish for things which we can ask for, or buy, or earn. One way is wrong, and the other right. One way will make us industrious and careful, in order to obtain what we want, and the other will lead to dishonesty and crime. I will tell you a story to explain this: When I was teaching school up north, one afternoon I put some money into my desk; there was a bill and a silver five cent piece. At recess the scholars played touch-and-run in the room. My desk was a little way open, and the boys as they ran past it could see the little piece of money, which was new and bright. One boy named Waldo, stopped and looked at it. That made him want it, I suppose; for after he had run past the desk three or four times, I saw him put in his hand slyly and take it out, and slip it into his pocket. What commandments had he broken so far, boys?"

"He coveted, and broke the tenth, and stole and broke the eighth," said Sam.

"I had seen him take the money, but I wanted to give him a chance to be sorry and confess his fault; and so before school was done I told the scholars of the money I had lost, and talked to them of the great sin of stealing. And then I told them that I would wait after school that the child who had done the wicked act might come to me and own it, and return the five cent piece. But Waldo did not come; he made his bow, put on his cap, and walked off just like the others. Did he break any commandment, then?"

"The ninth," said Frank.

"But he did not speak a word."

"Never mind, he lied, though."

"I thought I would go then to his mother's and tell her about it, for I felt very sorry for Waldo, and was afraid he would go on to steal more and more. I found her in great trouble. It was an hour after school, and the child had not got home yet; and, said she, 'It is my rule for him to come straight home from school, and he knows it.' Boys, had he broken any other of God's commandments?"

"The fifth," answered all the boys.

"Yes, he had disobeyed his mother. Pretty soon he came in, his face and hands all daubed with molasses candy. 'Where did you get candy?' asked his mother. 'John Smith gave it to me,' said Waldo. 'It is not so, my child, I am sure,' said the sorry mother. 'I believe you bought it with the five cent piece you took out of your teacher's desk this afternoon.'"

"He broke the ninth commandment over again," said Sam.

"Certainly. Waldo looked at his mother, then at me, and burst out crying. Poor child, how sorry I felt for him that he should have been led into so many sins. And, dear boys, remember this story. If you break the tenth commandment you will be sure to break others. A good man once said we must never wish for anything which we could not kneel down and pray for. If we do this, it will be sure to keep us from using any wicked means to optain it."—Freedmen.

SEPARATION FROM THE WORLD

THE CONDITION OF TRUE SERVICE TO GOD.

The followers of Jesus of Nazareth might be expected to know that it is not by the energies, activities, and powers of the natural man, and that it is not by the wisdom, resources, and influences of the world, that their mission and the glory of his name can be promoted. Yet who, that regards the true objects of the church's existence here, can see without pain and humiliation the extent to which the professing churches are falling back upon these elements of worldly success? It is considered not only allowable, but necessary, to surround the worship of God with carnal attractions; to resort to the expedients of worldly policy; to rely upon talent, intellectual cultivation, and the arts of eloquence; to seek wealth, honor, worldly position, worldly alliances; and to make the church a felt power in the affairs of the world, as the means by which the gospel is to be diffused, the truth advocated, souls saved, God served and glorified. Almost every degree of worldly conformity is justified under the plea of "becoming all things to all men." Christians almost seem to be persuaded that Satan will cast out Satan, and that he is at length divided against himself, to the overthrow of his kingdom.

Some, who perceive the evil, shrink from the consequences of separation from it. Some, who have prayerfully sought to walk in fellowship with Christ, to live a life of faith upon the Son of God, and to serve him in his own way, are perplexed and tried; and their perplexity is increased by the arguments and expostulations of those who are reputed wise. "See," they say, "how you are narrowing your sphere of usefulness, cutting yourself off from access to men, exciting prejudice, and losing your hold especially upon the young." It is a hard lesson to learn to follow where he leads, leaving the results in his hands; and in the midst of these perplexities it may be well to ask whether our shrinking from humiliation is not disguising itself as a zeal for God.

Nothing stands out more plainly in Scripture than the fact that the service of God involves separation from the world. When he calls a chosen instrument to eminent service, in which, it might seem, the highest endowments and accomplishments, and all the advantages of power and position were demanded, he chooses one destitute of these supposed qualifications; or, if he chooses one who possesses them, he sets them all aside, and makes it only more evident that "no flesh should glory in his presence." "Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?"

The lesson is impressively taught in the history of Moses, "the servant of God." See him at the age of forty years, in the maturity of manhood, learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, mighty in word and deed, acknowledged as the son of Pharaoh's daughter, in the height of renown at the court of Egypt, with one foot on the step of its throne, and all the power of present glory within his grasp. There, men would have thought, were unequaled advantages for the service of God and the relief of his oppressed people. The spirit of expediency which has crept into the counsels of the church would have regarded it as worse than folly to relinquish all this to take part with his brethren, or at least would have deemed it a wiser love to have used the power of Pharaoh's sceptre on their behalf. The splendor and influence of his position would have secured the confidence of the Israelites; and in the wise use of his power, he might have benefited the oppressors at the same time that he emancipated the oppressed. So it seemed to sense; but "by faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God." The first step toward his destined office was separation from that which, to the world, must have seemed the best means of securing his object.

When he had renounced the name of Pharaoh's daughter, and its accompanying honor and influence, nature would conclude that a man so endowed, at that period of his life, with all the claims which such a sacrifice gave him upon the gratitude and confidence of his brethren, was the very man, and that the very time, to lead them to liberty. Moses himself seems to have had such an impression. "For he supposed his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them." But then the faith which separated him from Pharaoh's court, led him to be faithful in rebuking sin in Israel; and so "they refused him." Rejected by Israel, and refused by Pharaoh, the favorite of a court is a fugitive in Midian—the emancipator of Israel is feeding a flock in the wilderness. Now worldly wisdom may taunt him with folly, and probably Moses himself had many misgivings when he saw in what his course had, for the time being, ended. But it was there in the desert, and not at the court of Pharaoh, that God trained a ruler and a leader for his people.

Forty years were spent in that school, not chiefly in cultivating the gifts which man would regard as essential to the character of the emancipator, leader, and legislator of a nation. And now behold him at the burning bush. The vigor of youth is spent; the fire of natural ambition is extinguished; he has reached the four-score years of which he has sung—"Yet is their strength labor and sorrow"; the wisdom of Egypt has been unlearned; the man "mighty in word and deed" now says of himself, "I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue"; so far as either Israelite or Egyptian could recall his name from the oblivion of forty years, it was become associated with [illegible] world, and had been cast out by it; after the pride and energy of the flesh had been subdued, and he stood stripped of all that the world had given or could claim—nothing but a poor old man—that the Lord said: "Come, now, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people, the children of Israel, out of Egypt." So God ever orders it, "that no flesh should glory in his presence."

Moses, in the confidence of an untaught and impetuous zeal, like many a child of God since, who has thought to carry all before him, "supposed that his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them." But forty years later, when God had actually called him to a service on which, confident and self-reliant, he had been so eager to enter, how he shrinks back in conscious insufficiency! "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel?" It was then, and only then, that God could say: "Certainly I will be with thee." And thus in deepest humiliation and trial, the Lord empties his chosen servants, and prepares them to say, in all service and success: "Yet not I, but the grace of God that was with me."

Robert Hall, himself a striking instance of the utter powerlessness of the most brilliant genius and the most enchanting eloquence in the service of God, says: "It is worthy of observation, that those who have had the greatest success in preaching the gospel, have ever been the most deeply convinced of this important truth. Brainerd, and Schwartz, and Eliot, and those in every age who have had the greatest success in turning men to righteousness, have been the first to declare that they were nothing; that they merely planted and watered, but that it was God who gave the increase." The place of the servant of God is to hide himself, and let God appear.

We close with an important suggestion by one who spoke from experience: "The preparation for active service is in secret with God, in learning to know ourselves in communion with him. There the battle is really fought. Power for active service is acquired not in active service, but in intercourse with God in secret."—The Witness.

A CHRISTIAN SOLDIER.

Am I called to be a soldier of the cross? Then I must equip myself for the battle; enroll myself under the banner of my Captain, and give up my whole being to his commands. Now, he has ordered me to be "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace"; that is, to abound in the knowledge of his word; and have on the girdle of truth, and "the breastplate of righteousness," believing what God has spoken he will perform; being pure in heart; truthful in all my ways; abounding in good works; having on "the helmet of salvation"; having confidence in ultimate victory through our Lord Jesus Christ; having "the shield of faith," to enable me to use "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," with unwavering confidence. Having all these in our possession, we are commanded to "stand fast." Arouse! thee, then, O drowsy soldier; arise! "put on the whole armor of God." Be courageous, thine immortal life is at stake. Pray "with all prayer, and supplication in the Spirit," for thy strength is in the Lord. He will give thee wisdom to use thy weapons skillfully, and strength to "fight the good fight of faith," and to lay hold on eternal life. "The fearful and unbelieving" the Lord will not receive.

We are nearing the gates of the New Jerusalem, the city of our God. We can almost behold the flag of glory floating in the celestial breeze. Courage, then, brother, stand manfully to the foe. Keep thy armor bright, at the foot of the cross, for in thy God is all thy strength. Seek not to save thy life, lest thou lose it. Let thy motto be, Victory! victory in the Lord! Let thy light shine. Fight for the kingdom, and a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Reach forth thy hand, take hold of the hope set before thee. Our Captain will soon return to lead us on to victory. A few more battles with the enemy of all righteousness, and our victory will be complete. Our Lord has said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."

THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

"We obtain light upon the intermediate state by what is said to Abraham (Gen. 25: 8),—'Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and was gathered to his people.' This, by a superficial reader of the Bible, might be supposed to mean that Abraham's body was buried with his people. But it is not, for his fathers were buried hundreds of miles from him; some in Chaldea, and Terah in Haran, in Mesopotamia; while Abraham was buried in the cave of Machpelah, in Canaan. The sense of the passage is this: that he was gathered to the assembly of the blest,—that he went to those good men among his ancestors, who were united to that assembly." G.

It is an easy matter to assume a point; so G. assumes that Abraham had a ghost—a soul, that he gave up to go to his "good fathers." The fact is, so far as Scripture gives us an account of his "fathers," they were all idolaters; and hence he was called to go out from his kindred and his father's house to another land; but it seems G. places him back among them when dead; perhaps they had passed a purgatory and become "good men." Abraham was gathered unto his fathers, without distinction of moral character; and hence he must be in a state involving a common gathering; they were all in heaven, or all in hell, if G.'s theory is true; but if all were silent in death, then he could be gathered into the same state.

Let us look at this text and subject a little further. It was Abraham that gave up the ghost. Now if he gave up the ghost then, he—Abraham—had no ghost left. Abraham lost the possession of that which he gave up; so that, if the ghost was his soul, he lost his soul and was without one. The text saith nothing of Abraham's ghost or soul being gathered to his fathers; it was Abraham who was gathered; the same person who gave up the ghost, and not the ghost he gave up. Was the body Abraham? According to G.'s theory, it was the body that gave up the soul; and yet, strange to tell, it was the thing given up, and not he who gave it up, that was gathered to his fathers!

But G. has mangled the text, and put his words in the place of God's words. The text saith, "Abraham gave up the ghost, and died." Prof. Pick, in his Bible Student's Concordance, says it, literally, "wasted away." Abraham was "in a good old age," saith the text, and he "wasted away, and died." How very plain and simple is truth. The term [illegible] translated gathered—Prof. Pick gives the literal sense, "to be brought in." Abraham died, and was brought into the state of his people, which was the state of death, where "there is no knowledge."

The same thing is said of Ishmael, ver. 17 of the same chapter, as is said of Abraham, viz: that "he gave up the ghost and died, and was gathered to his people." As nothing very good is recorded of Ishmael, and he did "mock" the child of promise, it is for G. to show that he was a "good man." But whatever his character, he was gathered to the same "people" as Abraham, for all G. can prove to the contrary. Whatever the state of "the people" was, it was a state of death, not life.—Herald of Life.

SONNET.

SUGGESTED BY GOUGH'S LECTURE ON "HABIT."

The power of habit! who can estimate
Its influence on the heart, the hopes, the will?
Like ermine snow-flakes fall they silently,
Each in its tiny place, till mountains great
Of frigid vanity the valleys fill!
When, lo! the frowning clouds a flood outpour,—
The fragile mountains melt, they rush and roar,
And madly revel in stark misery!
Bad habits! are not they a hideous height
Of vain and villainous hypocrisy?
Snow white without,—alas! how false within!
Just retribution storms, and all is night!
Flee! flee! oh tempted soul, from every sin;
Crush out the fiends of hell, and heaven win!

WINGS OR WEIGHTS.

Hebrews 12 is so precious that my Bible almost always opens there. "Laying aside every weight." Oh! then how easily and joyfully could we "run." But what are these weights, and how shall they be laid aside? Every christian has his own, and probably no two find the same equally burdensome. Our Father gives us blessings—wings to assist our upward flight to him, but we, through sin, change them to "weights." The more precious the gift, the greater the curse it becomes, if its use is perverted. The greater the ascent the wings might have made for us, the greater the degradation the "weights" will cause us.

Gifts, physical, intellectual and spiritual, are all wings or weights—just as we choose. The gratification of our desire for food is an enjoyment essential to the prolongation of physical life, yet it is often made the means of shortening it, or of producing untold suffering. The marriage relation, that most sacred of earthly ties, when wisely and truly enjoyed, may, nevertheless, become the source of the deepest sorrow and most degrading misery. Another has said that the most dreadful corruption is the corruption of the best thing. Shall we, can we take the richest gifts of our ever loving Father, and make them weights to keep us from loving and obeying him, when we might make wings of them with which to rise constantly higher and higher above every defiling thing of earth, getting new and sweeter foretastes of heavenly joy? The watchful christian finds that every gratified desire of the "old nature" becomes a weight and hindrance to the "new life," and every act of self-denial increases the strength and vigor of the "new nature." Let us all be watchful, ever "looking unto Jesus," making for ourselves wings, so that our "running" shall be with flying speed, hindering none, and being hindered never.

My dear readers, are you looking to Jesus, conscious that his gracious blood has made you pure, and does your heart respond to the desire to lay aside every weight? Oh! then, rejoice, for the Lord knoweth them that are his, and causeth all things to work together for your good. Most wonderful truth! How seldom is it fully realized! How imperfectly do we comprehend the workings of such a law and the goodness and unbounded love of him who made it. "All things"—no exceptions—not even our mistakes and errors. We ask, how can it be? We cannot answer, but have only to believe our Father's word, and be happy.

But what can be said to you who do not love God, who are carrying your sins, cherishing them so dearly, that you do not realize that they are "weights," dragging you down to earth, to prove your ruin! Listen now, and believe your best friends, who would have you leave the service of your enemy, the arch deceiver, and come into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Listen to the loving voice of Jesus, who asks you to be his, that he may make you, with himself, an heir of his Father's love. You commend and admire the benevolence which can receive a poor, forlorn, despised child, and bestow upon it a parent's tender and patient care, and can you be unmoved by God's infinite condescension and boundless love to the sinner?—Friend of Virtue.

THE CLOSING HOURS OF TIME.

Are we really in the winding up of our world's history? If so, what a solemn thought. All to be over soon! Our work all to be closed up!! A day of settlement to dawn!!! Yes, the scrutinizing eye of the Judge will then be turned with a searching glance upon us. Our past history of faithfulness, or unfaithfulness, will then reappear, to approve or condemn us. Our hearts, filled with heavenly zeal, or chilling lukewarmness, will then decide our claims to the felicities of a celestial paradise; for we shall then continue "holy still" or "filthy still." Are we indeed nearing a day of such magnitude? Are we truly living in the closing hours of time? We cannot evade the conclusion that such is the case. Then what is our duty? If the Master is about to return, how should we improve these closing hours? If we have been remiss in duty in days gone by, should we not begin now to do the will of Christ? If we have lived prayerless lives, let us begin to visit the throne of grace, and seek pardon for past indifference, and strength for time to come. Let us go to work for God, and pluck men as brands from the burning. The hours fly—will we improve them? The closing hours of time are upon us; shall we squander them in idleness? Oh! sound out the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and do it with devoted hearts, and earnest minds.—Voice of the West.

KEEP YOUR PROMISE.—A promise given is a bond inviolable. A man is already of consequence in the world when it is known that we can implicitly rely on him. I have frequently seen such a man preferred to a long list of applicants for some important charge. He has been lifted at once into station and fortune, because he has the reputation that [illegible]

BLIND?—YES, THEY ARE.

Multitudes are now blind that once could see, that once had their eyes opened. Instead of being able to say with the blind man in the gospel, "Whereas I was once blind, now I see,"—it is evident that whereas they once saw, now are they blind, judicially blind; a blindness most fearful, most terrible, most lamentable!

Look at the writings and pulpit ministrations of some ministers and editors some ten or twenty years ago. The spirit of Bible reform was then manifested, a holy unction, a conscience tender as the apple of the eye; they rose above a man-fearing spirit, a time-serving policy. God was evidently with them in very deed, they had power from on high, God crowned their labors marvellously. Mark the writings and preachings of these same public teachers—where now the flash of holy zeal, the fire pentecostal? Alas! alas! what a falling off, what a sad, lamentable degeneracy! The form of godliness is still kept up, but where the soul, the life, the power? the flint, the nail, the hammer? They are evidently shorn of their strength. Wherefore? —they have hewn out to themselves cisterns, broken cisterns that hold no water. They have gradually yielded to the tempter, lowered the gospel standard, bowed the knee to the popular voice. The Holy Spirit is grieved, takes his flight!

Christ says, "He that findeth his life shall lose it! and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

The Earnest Christian, a valuable monthly, alluding to this backsliding in old age, says: "The body may retain its form long after vitality is fled.... The form of devotion may be retained long after the spirit has departed. Consider the history of Solomon. The God of nature gave him wisdom above all men. The God of grace gave him another heart; and, in a special sense, the Lord loved him. Yet, strange to say, 'it came to pass when Solomon was old,' that 'his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel.' He yielded to a compromising spirit—the sin of old age. The altar and worship of Jehovah he never thought of forsaking; but in sinful compliance to the wishes of his wives, he gave countenance and support to the worship of false gods. 'And the Lord was angry with Solomon.'

"How many, who, in their younger days were noted for their uncompromising hostility to the fashionable follies and vanities of the world, find reasons, when their children come upon the stage of action, in favor of practices, which, when they walked in the light of the Spirit, they strongly condemned.—What a pitiable sight to see men in old age spending the remnant of their days in pulling down the edifice for the erection of which they devoted the strength of their manhood."—Home Thrusts.

"I CANNOT REVERSE IT."

God, in his wisdom, having placed "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem" before the laying of the foundation of the temple (Isa. 44: 28), "I cannot reverse it" (Num. 23: 20), for that would violate the express word of God, which says "one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass."—Matt. 5: 18. Being commanded to "hold fast the form of sound words" (2 Tim. 1: 13), "I cannot reverse" the order of things in the book of God, hence am compelled to admit that "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," (Dan. 9: 25), went forth before the laying of the foundation of the temple, therefore, if the foundation of the temple was laid in the second year of Cyrus (Ezra 3: 8), "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem" must have gone forth "in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia; that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled" (Ezra 1: 1), saying, I "will build them as at the first" (Jer. 33: 7). When they were "BUILDED AS AT THE FIRST," Jerusalem was restored; and if the object of the decree of Cyrus was to fulfill this, "the word of the Lord," Daniel's 69 weeks cannot be reckoned from a later epoch.

"I WILL HELP THEE."

"For I, the Lord thy God, will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee."—Isa. 41: 13.

Dearly beloved, chosen ones, take courage! Here is a "thus saith the LORD" for you. "Fear thou not, for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy GOD; I will strengthen thee; yea I will help thee; yea I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." Believe this, and rest upon this promise, "I will help thee." If you are now doing your duty, and have a conscience void of offence, and feel your need of help, ask for it in faith.

If you are not quite clear in regard to your standing, if you have doubts and fears, yet honestly desire to please God and feel willing to deny yourself and take up your cross, go FORWARD. Believe him who says, "I will help thee." Is your companion or your dear child out of the ark of safety? And are you praying and laboring for their salvation? "Fear not, I will help thee." Let this sure word of promise increase your hope and strengthen your faith.

Praise the Lord for what he has done, and trust that he will yet do more and better for you than you can ask or even think.

A LAWYER ON PREACHING.

I have been a listener to sermons for fifty years, and either I have changed or there has been a change for the worse in the delivery of the gospel message. There is less earnestness, less directness, less logical power, and less study than there was thirty years ago; and as a necessary consequence, the general style has become diffuse, if not superficial, and the result less efficient. If I am right in this, we have an important fact to be dealt with, and it ought to be removed, greatly modified, and that immediately.

What is the remedy? Let the ministers of the gospel review their past history, and return, as soon as it is possible, to the good old paths of their fathers, and preach the Bible in all its simplicity and grandeur.

No pulpit orator can hope to orator much into his audience unless he follows his text closely, and he must advance nothing that does not tend directly to illustrate his main proposition; and, when his argument is finished, he should not spend half an hour, more or less, in restating his propositions. Many ministers deliver finely written, and even classical sermons, on very solemn subjects, but they are essays merely; and their effect is to lower the standard of christian character and the dignity and glory of the [illegible]

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In the closing remarks of our last article, we proposed to show in this one that all the rewards of the righteous, and the punishments of the wicked, are to take place after the day of judgment, and not before.

We will now refer to a few positive declarations of the Bible, which plainly show that no one will receive his or her reward till Christ comes and raises the dead, and changes the living. We will refer the reader to John 5: 29. "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear this voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." And also in Rev. 20, we find it brought to view that "the dead small and great" shall "stand before God," when they would be "judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Also in Jude 14th and 15th verses, where the apostle refers to the prophecy of Enoch, who speaks of the Lord's coming "with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment" upon the ungodly. But when is the time of the destruction here spoken of? We will let St. Paul answer, in 2 Thess. 1: 7: "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Again, in Matt. 16: 27: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." See Luke 14: 14: "And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." We also find, in 1 Pet. 5: 4: "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory, that fadeth not away."—In Psa. 17: 15, the Psalmist says: "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." In 2 Tim. 4: 8, Paul tells us that "henceforth there is laid up for" him "a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give" him at that day; and not to "him" only, but unto all them also that love his appearing; which plainly shows that St. Paul will receive his crown when Christ comes to raise the dead, and sit in judgment upon the wicked.

Perhaps some one will ask the question, "What will become of the saint and the sinner, between death and the resurrection?" We answer, they will be silent in their graves. "What! does not the spirit return to God who gave it?" Yes, indeed it does; but what is the spirit? We answer, negatively, it is not an immortal soul, that can live as a separate entity from the body; for the Hebrew word (ruach) from which spirit is translated, is rendered wind, air, and breath, but never translated soul; and never translated "immortal spirit," or "never-dying spirit;" but the word from which soul is translated, in Hebrew, means life and person; but never in all the Bible is it called immortal. But if the word nephesh, which is translated soul, when applied to man, is called immortal, so by the same rule, we can prove the beasts and creeping things of the earth, and fish in the sea, to have immortal souls; for the word nephesh, which is rendered soul, when applied to man, is often applied to beasts. The fact in the case is, that according to the Bible, no one is immortal but God. But supposing that the spirit of man is an immortal soul, which returns to God who gave it; then, of course, the spirit of beast is an immortal soul, that goeth downward to the earth, and must be a never-dying soul, and live somewhere in the earth forever. This is the only conclusion we can arrive at, if we call the word spirit an immortal, self-existent entity; for the spirit of man, and the spirit of beast, are both from one Hebrew word (ruach), and, of course, must have the same meaning in relation to man as it does to the beast, and the same meaning in relation to the beast as it does to man.

In relation to the Greek word pneuma, which is rendered spirit in the New Testament, it is never called an immortal, or never-dying spirit, and is never translated soul; but the word pneuma, which is rendered spirit so often in the New Testament, very frequently refers to the mind in man, or the faculties of the mind, which cannot exist as a separate entity from the body, any more than fire can blaze without fuel. The faculties, or mind in man, exist only by the action of the nerves on the brain; and if any one can make out that a man's brains are immortal, and can live separate from the body, then they will make out that the man's mind is an immortal soul, and leaves the body at death, and goes to heaven or hell in the shape of live brains.

But oh, adsurdity, thou art cruel!

We will leave the subject of the spirit, and take the word soul. Perhaps the reader says, "I wonder if the man is going to try to make out that the soul is not immortal? Can it be possible that he has gone into such an error as that? when in fact our fathers and mothers have always told us that we had immortal souls, and we have been taught from childhood, by our ministers, that every person has an immortal soul, that went immediately to heaven, at the death of the body, if a christian; or to hell, if wicked, and there roll in the flames of fire and brimstone to all eternity!" But stop a moment, dear reader, and do not be too fast. Did you ever find the word immortal soul, or never-dying soul, or immortal spirit, and never-dying spirit, in the Bible? Do you think that holy book of God carries out the devil's lie, and declares that man shall not surely die, but live eternally in the flames of fire, for his sins which were committed here on earth? when in fact God declares that the sinner shall die and be consumed, or "destroyed," or die "the second death," and be burned up root and branch, "and be as though they had not been."

Let us see if we can't find a plenty of proof that the wicked are mortal and must die, soul and body. If we find that God only hath immortality, surely man has not got it. Now let us turn to 1 Tim. 6: 15, 16. Here it is positively asserted that God "only hath immortality," and that he is the only potentate and Lord of lords; so that if any person contends that the word only does not show us to be mortal, by the same rule we are all potentates, and supreme Lords. "I'M AS UNHAPPY AS I CAN BE."

So said a little girl to herself one autumn evening, as she was passing a long covered bridge. "I'm real mad about it, and I think it's very mean that I can't have it." Bessie thought she was alone on the bridge, and she started in alarm when she heard a voice say,

"Little girl, come back, and let me speak to you."

The voice was so pleasant that the child turned back, and a few steps from her, resting on a beam, sat a small woman, with bent form and wrinkled face, who asked, "Will you tell me your trouble?"

"My mother won't buy me a new cloak that I want, just like Mary Cloud's, and I want it so much," said Bessie.

"What's the matter with this cloak that you are now wearing? it is nice and warm, and very pretty."

"Why will not your mother get you one? tell me that, little girl."

"She says that this cloak is perfectly good, and that Harry, my cousin, whose father and mother are dead, needs all the money she can spare this winter."

"Has he an overcoat to wear?"

Bessie laughed. "Why, he is a little boy not big enough to get out alone, if he could walk; and he can't walk one step, and perhaps he never will."

"Would you like to take his place, and have just what he has?"

"No, not for anything."

"Would you like to be me, and carry this big basket a mile?"

"Would I like to be you?" said Bessie. "Why, no; you are old, and most ready to die; and I guess you are lame, by the way you are resting. No, I don't want to be you."

"Well, now, little girl, do you know that I would not be you—that I would not change my feeble body and my wrinkled face and my faded clothes for your young face and bright looks and your home; and yet I am, as you said, near death; and I haven't any one to take care of me, as you have."

"Why not?" almost gasped Bessie in astonishment.

"Because I don't wish to be unhappy, nor mad, nor do I wish to think that I have a mean mother."

"O," said Bessie, "I don't. Mother is so kind to me, and she is so good to Harry; but do you like to be old and wrinkled and lame, and to have no home?"

"Yes, I like all these things, because God sent them. He has let me live so many years to try and do a little good, and I have tried.... Now go home, and be thankful that you are young and strong, and have such a comfortable cloak to wear; and don't say again that you are unhappy or mad, for only sin can make people unhappy. Now, good bye, and don't forget me. I've a long way to go, and my basket is heavy."

Bessie watched the little woman as she slowly went her way through the bridge.

"O, dear me, I am so thankful for what I have, I won't mind not having the cloak any more," thought Bessie; and she truly intended to remain thankful to the end of her days.—Child's Paper.

DO YOU OBEY YOUR MOTHER?

Charles T—— was the son of a poor widow in the city of N. B. He and a younger brother were her only earthly comfort and care. But when ten years of age, he began to go with wicked companions, and yield to their wishes in disobedience to his mother's commands. Charles loved her, yet when tempted to do wrong forgot her kindness, and the grief he would occasion. Like all habits, good and evil, disobedience became stronger every time he was guilty of it; and sins which were once thought of with dread, Charles, before he was twelve years old, committed boldly.

One morning a police officer, whose business it is to arrest criminals, called at his humble home and took him away to be tried for stealing. The little fellow cried, and so did his lonely mother. After he was found guilty, it was decided to send him to the Reform-school in a distant city. The next news Charles' mother had from him, he was very sick. An epidemic prevailed in the institution, and he was among those most dangerously ill. A benevolent man gave Mrs. T—— money to pay the expenses of a visit to her sick boy. When she arrived at the large building in which he was confined, she entered a room where several lads were lying on their small beds, in pain, with no mother to watch over them. She looked around for the familiar locks of hair above the pale face of her son. But she sought, in vain for the one for whom her heart was yearning. When an attendant came and told her that he was too ill to be there; he was in another room.

The weeping mother hastened to the apartment, and in a moment she saw the emaciated features of her Charles. It was a sad and affecting meeting. After she had talked with him until her tears fell on his feverish forehead, she unfolded a little handkerchief, and said it was his brother's at home.

"Oh, mother," exclaimed Charles, "lay it on my breast; I want it near my heart." And soon he added, "Does brother mind you, mother?" "Sometimes," she replied. "Oh, tell him to obey you always, always; if I had done so, I should not be here." And he buried his tearful face in the bed clothes and sobbed.

Mrs. T—— saw that Charles must die, and begged permission to stay all night in the room, and sleep on the floor, or watch by his side. But this was contrary to the rules of the institution, and she left him with a breaking heart. In the morning he was delirious, and soon after died. The same kind gentleman who helped the widow when she went to see Charles, sent for the body, and last autumn, as the leaves were dying, it was laid in the grave, upon which for the first time the snows of winter have fallen.

Think of Charles, and of what God said amid the thunderings and flames of Sinai: "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

THE TENTH COMMANDMENT.

"Thou shalt not covet," said all the boys in a breath, and then each one repeated it from beginning to end.

"That means you mustn't wish for things that don't belong to you," said Frank.

"I don't see how you can help it!" exclaimed Sam. "I see heaps of things every day that I want."

"There are two ways of wishing," explained the teacher. "We may wish for things which we cannot get, but in an improper and dishonest way; or we may wish for things which we can ask for, or buy, or earn. One way is wrong, and the other right. One way will make us industrious and careful, in order to obtain what we want, and the other will lead to dishonesty and crime. I will tell you a story to explain this: When I was teaching school up north, one afternoon I put some money into my desk; there was a bill and a silver five cent piece. At recess the scholars played touch-and-run in the room. My desk was a little way open, and the boys as they ran past it could see the little piece of money which was new and bright. One boy named Waldo, stopped and looked at it. That made him want it, I suppose; for after he had run past the desk three or four times, I saw him put in his hand slyly and take it out, and slip it into his pocket. What commandments had he broken so far, boys?"

"He coveted, and broke the tenth, and stole and broke the eighth," said Sam.

"I had seen him take the money, but I wanted to give him a chance to be sorry and confess his fault; and so before school was done I told the scholars of the money I had lost, and talked to them of the great sin of stealing. And then I told them that I would wait after school that the child who had done the wicked act might come to me and own it and return the five cent piece. But Waldo did not come; he made his bow, put on his cap, and walked off just like the others. Did he break any commandment, then?"

"The ninth," said Frank.

"But he did not speak a word."

"Never mind, he lied, though."

"I thought I would go then to his mother's and tell her about it, for I felt very sorry for Waldo, and was afraid he would go on to steal more and more. I found her in great trouble. It was an hour after school, and the child had not got home yet; and, said she, 'It is my rule for him to come straight home from school and he knows it.' Boys, had he broken any other of God's commandments?"

"The fifth," answered all the boys.

"Yes, he had disobeyed his mother. Pretty soon he came in, his face and hands all daubed with molasses candy. 'Where did you get candy?' asked his mother. 'John Smith gave it to me,' said Waldo. 'It is not so, my child, I am sure,' said the sorry mother, 'I believe you bought it with the five cent piece you took out of your teacher's desk this afternoon.'"

"He broke the ninth commandment over again," said Sam.

"Certainly. Waldo looked at his mother, then at me, and burst out crying. Poor child, how sorry I felt for him that he should have been led into so many sins. And, dear boys, remember this story. If you break the tenth commandment you will be sure to break others. A good man once said we must never wish for anything which we could not kneel down and pray for. If we do this, it will be sure to keep us from using any wicked means to obtain it."—Freedman.

DELIGHUFUL PRAISE

"My son is now twenty-five years old," said a mother to her friend, at the same time wiping tears of gratitude from her face, "and he has always remembered what I taught him in his childhood. He has been a good son. He has never brought a tear to his mother's eye."

Boys, of how many of you can your mothers say the same? And if any of you feel that it could not with truth be said, who will resolve to-day,—"From this time, I will do nothing which shall bring tears to my mother's eyes"?—Freedmen's Journal.

WAITING.

I am waiting for the Bridegroom
To appear with glory bright,
With a crown of dazzling splendor,
Turning darkness into light.

Angels will attend his coming,
Seraphs will proclaim his power;
Wake, ye drowsy saints, look upward,
Hail with joy the coming hour.

Ye who long have mourned in sadness
For the friends your hearts held dear,
Wipe the tear drops, banish sadness,
Lo! your Savior draweth near.

Take my heart, O blest Redeemer,
Cleanse it all entire from sin;
Give me in thy home a welcome,
When thy saints shall enter in.

May there be no separation
From the ones I love so well,
But, O grant that we with Jesus
In one family may dwell.

O! how blest the comtemplation,
Sweetest peace pervades my soul,
While unto my raptured vision
Heavenly joys do now unfold.

Come, thou great Deliverer, hasten,
Change the jarring scenes of earth;
Give us pleasures never ceasing,
Where no pain is mixed with mirth.

Then before thy throne we'll triumph,
Heavenly halleluahs raise,
Bow before the King eternal,
Offer songs of endless praise.

THE PENALTY OF SIN.

"The wages of sin is death."—ROM. 6: 23.

(Concluded.)

2. The object is to prove an existence in conscious suffering and untold misery hereafter; and a "death that never dies." The penalty of sin being declared to be "a state" or "condition in sin," then "the second death" must be an eternal state of death in sin. "Death (the second) is a perpetuity of sin," it is affirmed. Again, "The moral law knows nothing of mercy, nothing of pardon," therefore, "the soul that sinneth it must die," i. e. forever be fixed in "a state of death in sin." And hence, "the sinner must always have conscious guilt—the writhings of conscience—endless torment—woe, sin, misery and anguish is their worm that eats and never destroys, and fire that burns and never consumes. Death is not the extinction of being; but endless consciousness in woe!" We deny that "the second death," which is the punishment threatened to all who disobey the gospel, is a state of "perpetuity in sin," and accordingly of "endless consciousness in woe"! For the penalty of sin is not to become a sinner with guilt, etc., but it is "DEATH." And the death threatened is not "a death that never dies"! for no such death is threatened or announced in the Scriptures. And such a death is an absurdity, as "a life that never lives" would be a contradiction of terms and of fact, and hence an absurdity.

As God has said, "All souls are mine; the soul that sinneth it shall die"; and as our Lord has declared that he is "able to destroy both soul and body in hell"; and as it is affirmed that "none can keep alive his own soul"—I conclude that Jehovah will and can execute the penalty of sin upon the sinner in "the second death," and that "whosoever" is "not found written in the Book of Life will be cast into the lake of fire." Then will be fulfilled the Scripture, "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." James 1: 15. Not merely "ruin," but "death." If "death is a perpetuity of sin," there can be no finishing of sin. There must be "the end of the ungodly and sinner," to be an end or finishing of sin. And for this the prophetic prayer has long since been uttered, which will finally be fulfilled:—"Oh, let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but establish thou the just." Psa. 7: 9. And when God shall establish the just in eternal life, and their eternal inheritance, the wicked shall be "consumed out of the earth—be no more," being "silent in darkness." Even as "Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them," are "set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." Jude 7.

The penalty of the Adamic law. The whole argument that the penalty of sin is a moral or spiritual death, is based upon a false interpretation of the threatened penalty of the FIRST transgression of man. If death in that instance can be made out to be "death in sin," then there is no difficulty in making "the second death" to be "a perpetuity in sin"; for "the second death" must be like unto the first, only it is "eternal" and "everlasting."

Now to prove this, Satan and his ministers play upon the first clause of the threatened penalty,—"In the day." Says the serpent, Did I not say ye shall not surely die? And that I told the truth, do you not see that the man did not die "in the day" he did eat of the forbidden fruit? Therefore that threatened penalty was just what I told you would be the result of your transgression: "God doth know that IN THE DAY ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Gen. 3: 5. And now the serpent endeavors to convince man that his "state and condition in sin," into which his transgression immediately plunged him, is the punishment of his sin; and so he still negates the true penalty, and endeavors to prove that man's state of experience of "knowledge of good and evil," is the real penalty of God's violated law! Thus making God a liar and himself a truth teller! instead, as the Scriptures saith,—"He is a liar and the father of it."

The argument upon the penalty of the Adamic law runs thus: "I assert that Adam did die 'in the day'; in the hour of the day; in the moment of the day he sinned, just as the author of the law threatened. That the penalty was carried into execution at once, according to the reading of the penalty: 'In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die.'"

Let us more critically examine the threatened penalty of the Adamic law. It reads thus: "In the day thou eatest thereof, dying thou shalt die." (Margin, Heb). Now this evidently does not declare, or can it be made to mean, that "in the day, in the hour of the day, in the moment of the day" Adam sinned he should suffer the full penalty of his crime. The language most clearly implies that there is to be a process and continuance as well as some duration of time in the execution and full infliction of the penalty. Immediately he would suffer, or begin to suffer the first part of the penalty, "dying"—which would ultimately be followed by the second—death," in its dread execution. The period of time for the duration and full infliction of the punishment must be determined by the Scriptures, and by fact.

A criticism on the following texts will illustrate this: "In Gen. 1: 29, it is written of "the herb bearing seed"—in the marginal rendering, "seeding seed." That is, continue to seed. How long? This must be determined by the following Scripture: "While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest shall not cease." Gen. 8: 22. Again (Gen. 2: 16), permit is given to the man, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayst freely eat" (Margin, "eating thou shalt eat"). That is, continue to eat. How long? Till driven from the garden. 3: 23.

These texts determine the meaning of the language,—"Dying thou shalt die." That is, first become a subject of death—change—vanity of life—corruption—disease—of which our present condition with our "body of humiliation" is an illustration and satisfactory proof. How long? Till death should end the scene. And that period in the case of the first man would include his own day of twenty-four hours, when the penalty would begin the process of fulfillment, and "the Lord's day" upon which he had already entered as a probationer for eternity. Hence within the first millennium the sentence would be fully executed in the death of Adam. And the fact that neither Adam nor his posterity has in mortality and corruption reached a thousand years, is proof of this meaning. This view is advocated by Justin Martyr: "The day of the Lord is a millennium—when it is said to Adam, that in the day he ate of the tree he should die, we know that he did not live out that millennium." Justin Martyr. Dia. with Trypho. In reference to Adam's race involved in the same penalty (Rom. 5: 12, Heb. 9: 27), that period of time has been subsequently shortened and limited. Job. 14: 5, 14; 7: 1; Ps. 90: 10. Acts 17: 26.

As the appointment of Adam and his posterity for sin, and the first transgression, is unto death—real and literal (Rom. 5: 12; Heb. 9: 27, 1 Cor. 15: 22), so must "the second death," the appointed sentence of the moral law and the rejection of Christ, and the offered gift of eternal life, together with disobedience to the gospel, be death—real and literal; yet "eternal" and "everlasting," as it is declared to be. The wicked "visited" with it, "in the land of uprightness," and in "the world to come," are ever to remain "dead—they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore thou hast visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Isa. 24: 21; 26: 10, 12–14; Matt. 12: 31, 32; Luke 13: 28; Rev. 21; 1; 22: 14, 15; 20: 5–9.

Final argument. Disobedience is rebellion, and rebellion is sin. A child that disobeys his parent rebels against parental authority. A citizen that disobeys and breaks the law of his government rebels. Both become sinners. The Bible regards disobedience as rebellion, and rebellion sin, and sin is the transgression of law. Samuel said to Saul, on Saul's refusing to execute the command of God upon Agag: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice . . . . for rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king. And Saul said unto Samuel, I have SINNED; for I have transgressed the commandment of the Lord." 1Sam. 15: 22–24. From that time "the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord terrified him." 1 Sam. 16: 14. And he was "delivered into the hands of the Philistines," and the "archers hit him, and he was sore wounded"—and finally "he fell" upon his "own sword" and "died"—"and they fastened his body to the wall of Bethshan"—having "cut off his head, and stripped off his armor, and sent them to the house of their idols, and among their people." 1 Sam. 31. This was Saul's punishment for his rebellion, which was sin.

As the punishment of sin is death, under the divine displeasure and the withdrawal of God's favor and spirit, so also is the punishment of rebellion. And furthermore, THE DEATH signified and determined as the punishment and penalty of rebellion, is defined to be "cast off from the earth," and not a moral or spiritual death. The following Scripture will show this: "Therefore thus saith the Lord: behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth; this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord." Jer. 28: 16. In this passage death is the punishment for the crime of rebellion, and the death which is the penalty is defined to be "cast off from the face of the earth."

Now Adam's disobedience was rebellion against the Lord. All must admit this. The penalty and punishment of his sin must be death; and that death which would "cast him from off the face of the earth." Not a moral or spiritual death! Who so blind that they cannot see this? And the fact that Adam, and his posterity in him, have in their successive generations been "cut off from the face of the earth" by real death, in horrid form, demonstrates that natural death, and not spiritual death, is the true penalty of his sin. The punishment, then, for the first transgression under the divine displeasure, and the withdrawal of God's favor and presence, was "death"—and that death which would "cast from off the face of the earth" the transgressor. Has the penalty been executed? It has to the very letter. "Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years: and he died." Gen. 5: 5. "He now lies in dust." Gen. 3: 19. His race are with him the subjects of death. Rom. 5: 12.

"For they in him by delegation were
In him to stand or fall, to live or die."

The fact that a few of his race are by the grace in Jesus Christ exempted from the penalty, as Enoch and Elijah, with those "alive" at "the Lord's coming" of his people, who shall not "see" or "taste death," is no proof or argument against this interpretation of the penalty.

"The second death" must be similar to the first. It will be extinction of being eternally, as from it there is no redemption, and its punishment is of everlasting duration. Therefore the Scriptures declare,—"The wages of sin is death." "The soul that sinneth it shall die." And this is defined to be,—"The end of the wicked shall be cut off." "Evil doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." "They that be cursed of him shall be cut off." "The sinners shall be consumed out of the earth—the wicked be no more." "The wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." "And it shall come to pass that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people:" "Exolothreuthesetai ek ton laon"—"shall be utterly exterminated out of, or, out from among the people." "And fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them . . . . This is the second death." Rev. 20. "They shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away." "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah—are set forth for an example suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."

These are a few of the many Scriptures which disclose "the end" of the sinner and ungodly. Therefore we conclude that the final end of rebellion is as the Lord by Samuel has declared. "The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken to pieces; out of heaven shall he thunder upon them: the Lord shall judge the ends of the earth; and he shall give strength unto his king, and exalt the horn of his anointed. He will keep the feet of his saints, and the wicked shall be silent in darkness." 1 Sam. 2: 9, 10.

The fruits of the error that the penalty of sin is not death, or extinction of life.

1st. It declares that God will save the life of the wicked," when God has said, "All the wicked will he destroy." Ezek. 13: 22; Psa. 145: 20. Thus "with a lie strengthening the hands of the wicked that he should not return from his wicked way." Ezek. 13: 22. This LIE, that God will "SPARE THE LIFE OF THE WICKED" (Ezek. 13: 32) gives hope that the future eternal existence may be a state where divine clemency may finally be shown rebels or transgressors. As this state since the first transgression has been one of divine wrath, yet of mercy; so if the future state is "a death in sin, divine clemency may some time in the eternal future reach the sad cases of those in woe. So the sinner puts off till another state of existence the repentance from his sins. For if it be true God is to "save his life" and he have an eternal existence hereafter you fail to convince him that Omnipotent Goodness and Justice will torture in hell-fire, or fire of any kind, with torment and torture extreme, endlessly, a creature he has made; or that he will allow sin and rebellion to reign in the universe under his sovereign sway, eternal and unending ages. It cannot be done. Therefore, Universalism, or Restorationism, is the fruit of this doctrine. Errors which never would have seen the light, or had an existence, had the penalty of sin been as faithfully announced as God's servants the prophets have done. "I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live." Deut. 30: 19.

Who will dare to be responsible for the continuance of such false doctrines and false hopes as such a view of the penalty of sin sustains? Beware! God has said, "The wages of sin is death." "The soul that sinneth it shall die." If you promise the wicked life—or that God will spare his life—you do it at your peril, and as the ministers of Satan; and not the servants of Jesus Christ. "The times of this ignorance God winked at"—but not now.

2d. The doctrine of the immortality of the soul, or spirit, or of a life element inherent in man, independent of the life, and distinct from the life in Christ, and a conscious existence in death, has given rise to the errors of spiritualism, witchcraft, necromancy, consulting with the spirits of the dead, demon worship, and all this train of abominations which Jehovah has forbidden, and has declared he will not suffer to go unpunished. Isa. 8: 19, 20; 50: 11; Deut. 18: 9–14; Rev. 16.

These are of heathen origin, where the doctrine of the immortality of the soul originated, and where there was no light of divine revelation or oracles of God to consult. And those who return to these errors with the Bible in hand are abandoned of the spirit of God, and denying the Word of God, they became possessed of "an evil spirit from the Lord." The world will soon be flooded by this class of men, who, under strong delusions and through demoniacal agency will set on fury the passions of men and kingdoms, gathering them to "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Rev. 16: 14.

Who will be responsible for the hastening on of this dread crisis of that great day by teaching the doctrine of devils, "Ye do not surely die"—"ye shall not surely die"? Beware! "They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind."

The doctrine of a conscious existence of soul or spirit in death, and rewards and punishments at death, nullifies and destroys the doctrines of the word of God,—of an appointed day of judgment—of the coming of the Lord himself to reward his servants the prophets, and all men according to their works, and the things written in the books of the resurrection of the dead, and hides and obscures the true character of the penalty of the moral law—the second death—when, where, how executed, and the terrible result of the doom. Beware! "God is not mocked." Rev. 22: 18–19.

While "the wages of sin is death," and the dread penalty awaits the unrepenting sinner and ungodly, to be visited upon them at the final judgment, let me say to all those in sin and unbelief, there is now mercy, and divine clemency, and pardon, proffered you through Jesus Christ, who "is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth on him." And "the gift of God is eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ." Oh, sinner! exposed to the wrath to come, accept the proffered salvation and live.

Now, without further delay of a single precious hour of probation, do make confession of your sins by a hearty repentance, and believe the glad tidings that to you is offered eternal life through Jesus Christ. Let not the golden moments of your precious mortal life pass away without securing the everlasting life and rewards of the just and believing hereafter.

Brethren, you have faithfully exposed the error of "the immortality of the soul." The battle upon that point has been nearly fought. But you must rally to the defense of the truth against the two positions in error Satan and his servants now assume, which I have mentioned in this article, namely:

1. That there is "a life element in man that survives death, and is rewarded in death;—death being defined to be "the departure of the life at the extinction of natural life."

2. That the penalty of sin, of both the first transgression and of the moral law, is "a moral or spiritual death,"—"a state of death in sin;" "perpetuity of sin" eternal ages, with consequent woe and writhings of conscience.

Let us rally with "the armor of God," and "the sword of the Spirit," and expose these errors, while we proclaim "with a loud voice," to a doomed generation,—Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Let us be faithful to our trust. "The Lord is at hand." "The Judge standeth before the door." O. R. FASSETT.

THE JUBILEE.

On page 149 of the "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," we observed that the eighth chapter of Nehemiah contains a history of what occurred during the fourth year after "the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem"; that is, during the sabbatical year of B. C. 485.

From Nehemiah 11: 3, we inferred that this was the year of jubilee, and in the Book of Daniel Opened set it down as such; but having at that time no clear proof of this, we omitted to mention it in our list of recorded and established jubilees. But having now discovered the proof that it was a jubilee, we here add it to the list, which gives us five established jubilees.

The proof we allude to is this:—"Rabbi Eliezer, who wrote either in the first or third century, and who is one of the most esteemed Jewish authorities, has a passage to this effect": "Ezra Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jehotzedech, went up from Babylon, . . . as it is said. Then arose Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel," and "laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord." (Ezra 3: 10.) "Against them the Samaritans came in battle, to the number of one hundred and eighty thousand." (Ezra 4: 23.) "Moreover, they formerly impeded the work of God (i. e., the restoration of the temple) for two years, even to the year of jubilee." (Rabbi Eliezer, Vorst's translation, p. 101.) The Jews returned home, B. C. 488. "In the second year of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem," that is, B. C. 487, they "laid the foundation of the temple." "Now when the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin heard that the children of the captivity builded the temple," "then the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building" (Ezra 4: 1, 4), "for two years, even to the year of Jubilee." Two from 487 leaves 485. Hence B. C. 485 was a year of jubilee, and to add this to our list of recorded and established jubilees, we here again publish the whole list of sabbatical years and jubilees, as found both in the Bible and history.

The explanation of this table is given in the Crisis of Oct. 31st, and we think it settles the long disputed question as to the length of the cycle by which the year of jubilee was pointed out. We have also proven that the forty-ninth year after Israel left Egypt; that is, B. C. 1563, was the first jubilee.

1. This is clearly proven thus: The Lord gave "the land of Canaan . . . unto the children of Israel for a possession," (Deut. 32: 49), and the time at which they were to receive this their possession was in the first jubilee; for, in allusion to the first jubilee, it is expressly said, "In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession." (Lev. 25: 13.) Now all that remains in order to know the time of the first jubilee, is to learn the particular epoch at which they did thus "return every man unto his possession." And from Joshua 21: 43, we learn that this occurred in the forty-ninth year from the time they left Egypt. At that time "the Lord gave unto Israel all the land which he swore to give unto their fathers, and they possessed it and dwelt therein." Now, if, as Joshua expressly declares, "all came to pass"; "there failed not aught of any good thing which the Lord had spoken unto the house of Israel"; this fixes even to absolute certainty the time of the first jubilee; for one "good thing which the Lord had spoken" was this: "In the year of this jubilee, ye shall restore every man unto his possession."

2. But if the reader should call for an additional proof, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established, we can prove it again thus:—Those who received their inheritance on the east of Jordan, left their families, their "wives" and "little ones" there "in the cities of Gilead," saying, "We will not return unto our houses until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance." (Num. 32: 18, 26.) That is, not until the jubilee, for that was the time at which they were to "return every man unto his possession." (Lev. 25: 13.) Therefore, if we can find the particular time at which they did "return every man unto his family," we can know the time of the first jubilee. From Joshua 22: 9, we learn that the particular time at which they returned to their "families" in "Gilead, and to the land of their possession," was in the forty-ninth year of the dispensation of jubilees; that is, of the Mosaic dispensation.

Now observe that this does as closely point out the time of the first jubilee, as if Joshua had said that the forty-ninth year from the time Israel left Egypt was the first jubilee.

3. We can again prove this thus: Saith the Lord, "Ye shall divide the land by lot for an inheritance among your families" (Num. 33: 54), and the time at which the land was thus to be divided was in the year of jubilee; for "when the jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received." (Num. 36: 4.) And Joshua "made an end of dividing the land for inheritance" (Josh. 19: 49), in the forty-ninth year after they left Egypt; hence the first jubilee could not have occurred at a later epoch.

4. We can prove it again thus: Every seventh year was a year of release; and the jubilee was the great national release observed at the end of seven times seven years; hence, the first could not have been later than at the end of the seventh sabbatical year of release.

5. The time Israel left Egypt was the epoch from which they reckoned time: for, saith the Lord, "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year unto you." (Ex. 12: 2.) "And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land" (Lev. 25: 10); hence the fiftieth year was the jubilee.

6. The jubilee was the proclamation of "liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof" (Lev. 25: 10); and the time at which liberty was proclaimed throughout all the land, to all the inhabitants thereof, was the forty-ninth year after the leaving of Egypt (Josh. 22: 1–9); therefore that was the jubilee.

7. Moses "was commanded by the Lord to give the inheritance of Zelophehad unto his daughters," which was to be done in the jubilee, for "when the jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received." (Num. 36: 24); and the time at which they received this inheritance was in the forty-ninth year after the leaving of Egypt (Josh. 17: 3); so we have seven times, or in seven different ways, established the time of the first jubilee.

8. We might prove it again thus: According to the law, "When ye come into the land I give you (saith the Lord), then shall the land keep (not Sabbaths, but) A SABBATH" (Lev. 25: 1); hence, a Sabbath must have been observed immediately on entering the land; but seven Sabbaths reckoned from that time would contain only forty-four years; and if you add five to make out the forty-nine, the jubilee would not be proclaimed until five years after the seventh Sabbath.

9. We might prove it again thus:—The "covenant" concerning the sabbatical year of release was made on the day the Lord "brought them forth out of the land of Egypt" (Jer. 34: 13); therefore, the seventh year after leaving Egypt was a Sabbath; and according to the express language of the law, "Thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee; seven times seven years, and the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years."—Lev. 25: 8.

10. If the jubilee was instituted on the tenth day of the seventh month, B. C. 1612, when the Lord came "down" out of the most holy to bless the people by proclaiming liberty from Egyptian thraldom, the first jubilee, to celebrate this proclamation of liberty, must have been at the end of forty-nine years from that time.

11. The Mosaic was a dispensation of jubilees; and every fiftieth year of that dispensation was a jubilee; hence, the fiftieth year from the beginning of the Mosaic dispensation must have been the first jubilee.

12. As the passover was at the end of twelve months observed in commemoration of the Lord's passing over the first-born in Egypt; so the jubilee was celebrated at the end of forty-nine years, in commemoration of the proclamation of liberty to Israel, on bringing them "forth out of the land of Egypt" (Lev. 25: 55); hence the first jubilee could not have been later than the end of forty-nine years from the proclamation, as made B. C. 1612 (Ex. 3: 16, 17).

13. The first jubilee could not have occurred later than the ninetieth year from the leaving of Egypt, and within the limits of that time the proclamation of liberty, as made by Joshua in the forty-ninth year, is all that has the least appearance of a jubilee.

14. Our fourteenth proof is the testimony of the Jews themselves. They say, in the time of Joshua, they counted the sabbatical years and jubilee (Bosanquet, page 93). As Joshua died in the sixty-fourth year after he left Egypt, the only jubilee that he could have observed was the one which occurred in the forty-ninth year; for if the first jubilee did not occur until the fiftieth year after he entered Canaan, he died twenty-five years before the jubilee.

15. But the great sabbatical rest, which "the Lord gave them round about"; the proclamation of liberty to those who had spent nine years in the thraldom of arms; the returning of husbands to their wives and little ones, and every man unto his family, after nine long years absence; the returning of the men unto their "tents and unto the land of" their "possession" (Josh. 21: 44; 22: 1–9); was as properly a jubilee as the rest of the seventh day was a Sabbath: therefore, we are compelled to admit that that was properly a jubilee, even if it could be proven that the Jews observed another forty-one years after.

But so far from any man being able to prove that they observed it in the forty-first year after, or in the ninetieth year from their leaving Egypt; no one can even suppose it possible that they may have done it, without bringing his supposition in direct contact with the Bible, Josephus, and the Jews; hence, in opposition to all authority to which we can appeal.

1. We have observed that it contradicts the word of God to suppose that the jubilee was in the ninetieth year from the leaving of Egypt; for Israel, being at that time in bondage to the heathen, could not return home (Judg. 3: 8), and yet the Lord had expressly declared, "In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession."

2. It contradicts those Jews who place the jubilee during the lifetime of Joshua, for Joshua died twenty-five years before.

3. It contradicts Josephus, for he says, "When the jubilee is come, which name denotes liberty, slaves are set at liberty;" which could not, according to his chronology, have occurred in the ninetieth year after leaving Egypt; for at that time they were in bondage to the heathen. (Jos. Ant., b. 3, c. 12, s. 3.)

In conclusion, let it be borne in mind that we have as clearly proven the time of the first jubilee, as if Joshua had said that "on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the forty-ninth year after leaving Egypt," the first jubilee commenced; for at that time we find every thing carried out which was required at the time of the jubilee.

1. Was the jubilee a Sabbath of rest? "The Lord gave them rest round about."—Josh. 21: 44.

2. Does the name jubilee denote liberty? There was liberty at that time. Josh. 22: 4.

3. Were they to proclaim liberty through out all the land? There was liberty to "all the inhabitants thereof." Josh. 22: 1–9.

4. Were slaves to be released? All of the Hebrews who up to that time had spent nine years in the thraldom of arms, were set free. Josh. 22: 1–9.

5. Were they to "return every man unto his possession"? They returned to "the land of their possession." Josh. 22: 4.

6. Were they to return unto their families? They did. "Now return ye, and get ye unto your tents." Josh. 22: 4.

7. Was the jubilee to occur in the fiftieth year? It was the ninth of Joshua, hence the fiftieth from the institution of the jubilee, by the proclamation of liberty to the Hebrew slaves in Egypt. Ex. 3: 16, 17.

8. Was it proclaimed on the tenth day of the seventh month, during the seventh sabbatical year? It occurred in the ninth of Joshua, which was the seventh Sabbath from the leaving of Egypt.

9. Was it at the end of forty-nine years, and on the day of atonement? Yes, just forty-nine years after the Lord came down out of the most holy, "to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land." Ex. 3: 8.

Thus we find all things pertaining to the jubilee duly accomplished. While the only shadow of authority that any man can claim for placing it in the ninetieth year, is the supposition that the seven Sabbaths are to be reckoned from the time at which they began to cultivate the land; but so far from this being a real objection, a strict adherance to the express language of the law would show that they did not come in possession of the land, to cultivate, until the first jubilee; for up to that time they, as soldiers, remained in arms; but "in the year of this jubilee, ye shall return every man unto his possession"; hence, the jubilee is not reckoned by Sabbaths of rest to the land; but "Sabbaths of years." "Thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years," and in the year of this jubilee they, receiving their possessions, commenced cultivating the land.

To make this plain, call to mind that they could not cultivate land before they had it to cultivate; and as those who received their inheritance on the west of Jordan had none to cultivate before the division made in the ninth of Joshua, they at least did not commence farming before the first jubilee; and since those who received their land on the east of Jordan said, "We will not return unto our houses until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance" (Num. 32: 18); that is, until the jubilee, it is clear that the cultivation of land did not begin until after the first jubilee.

A SERMON.

We began, in the closing remarks of our last article, to examine the popular sentiment of the immortality of the human soul. We will continue the subject by referring to 1 Tim. 1: 17,—"Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever. Amen." In Rom. 2: 7, we are exhorted to "seek for immortality," in the following words: "To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality." he will render "eternal life." If we are immortal beings, why should we be exhorted to seek for immortality? We find, through all the Bible, that we are to look to the coming of Christ, and to the resurrection, for immortality, and eternal life; and not to the death of the body.

We will now go into a more thorough examination in relation to the soul, and see if we can find out what it is, by the aid of God's eternal truth, and by so doing we think we shall understand more clearly what the punishment of the wicked will be, at the great day of accounts. What is the soul, which so many of our "so called" orthodox ministers tell us is immortal, and cannot die with the body? We think, by what we can learn from the Holy Scriptures, that the whole man is the soul; and when he is alive, he is a living soul, and when he is dead, he is a dead soul! The Hebrew word (nephesh), which is rendered soul in the Old Testament, is either life, person, or desire, and is applied to beasts in a large number of places, as well as to men.

Now let us see what God calls the soul, and then let us submit to his decision; for we think he knows what it is, and has told us very plainly what constitutes the living soul. We will first examine Gen. 2: 7, where it is stated in plain language,—"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Can you discover any thing in that Scripture to give you the least idea that the Creator intended to have us understand that any part of man, made of the dust, was immortal? Certainly, we cannot suppose the breath was an immortal soul, that can live as a separate being from the body. The idea is preposterous in the extreme. God never said the breath was the soul. "Well," says the objector, "the immortal soul went in with the breath." But stop, do you find a thus saith the Lord to prove it? If not, I have just as good a right to say that a horse and wagon went in with the breath, as you have to say that an immortal soul went into the man with his breath.

We do not see one particle of evidence in that passage of Scripture to show that any part of man was made immortal. In that verse God declares the whole man (made from dust) to be a living soul. In Gen. 3: 19, God declares to the same dust-man, which was pronounced in Gen. 2: 7 to be "a living soul,"—"dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." So you must see very plainly, that no part of the man was immortal. In the first chapter of Genesis and thirtieth verse, all living creatures which God had made are called living souls. See the marginal readings. We find by examination that the word life, which is applied to beasts, is translated from the same Hebrew word (nephesh) as the word soul, when applied to man. But we do not believe that beasts have immortal souls.

Man is made above the beasts in relation to his faculties, or intellectual powers; and if Christians, they have the promise of being made immortal "at the resurrection of the just."

Now we will show that the whole man, when he is dead, is wholly dead, and is unconscious till the resurrection; and of course can receive no reward, or punishment, until the day of judgment, or until Christ comes t

second time, personally, to raise the dead and change the living. We will refer the reader to Psa. 6: 5,—"For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Psa. 88: 10–12,—"Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah." Would this be the language of inspiration if the soul were in heaven praising God? No indeed.

"But," says the objector, "the spirit returns to God who gave it." Yes, we know the spirit returns to God who gave it; but the spirit there referred to in the writings of Solomon, is translated from the Hebrew word (ruach), which is translated breath and spirit in Eccl. 3: 19–21, and the same word spirit is applied to the beasts; so that, if the word spirit, which is translated breath, means an immortal soul, which returns to God who gave it, then of course the beasts have got immortal souls, which go down into the earth, and live there, while the souls of men go upward to heaven, where they formerly lived, before entering the human body. GEO. T. ADAMS, BUSINESS AGENT.

MRS. HENRY WARD BEECHER'S EXPERIENCE WITH THE Grover & Baker Family Sewing Machine.

Grover & Baker Sewing Machine Company:

Gentlemen: It gives me the greatest pleasure to add my testimony to the unrivalled excellencies of Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine. It is, in my opinion, by far the most valuable of any I have tried. The thorough operation of it is most easy and simple, and its unobtrusive and quiet movements are very grateful to a weary head. The work when done is wonderful in its strength. More than two-thirds of all the sewing done in my family for the last two years has been done by Grover & Baker's machine, and I have never had a garment rip or need mending, except those rents which frolicsome boys will make in whole cloth, and for them your machine has, I suppose, no remedy but a patch or darn.

The seam on the under side, sometimes represented as an objection to Grover & Baker's machine, is, I think, only the evidence of unskillful operation.

Honestly appreciating the excellencies of your machine as fully as I have here stated, I could give it no higher praise than the fact that when my only daughter married, I gave her this long-tried household friend, depriving myself of its services to lighten her first assumption of domestic duties. I can manage any machine comfortably, but my daughter was never willing to use any but Grover & Baker's.

I hope to be able soon to send you a well-deserved recommendation from my husband; meanwhile if any part of this will be of value, it is at your disposal.

Yours gratefully,
MRS. H. W. BEECHER.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine.

They are more simple, durable, and less liable to derangement than others.

They sew with equal facility all fabrics, the most delicate and the heaviest, and with all kinds of thread, silk, cotton, or linen.

The seam is so strong and elastic that, when properly sewed, it will not break, even on the bias.

They fasten both ends of the seam by their own operation.

The seam, though cut at every sixth stitch, remains firm, and neither runs or ravels in wear.

Greatest Addition to Philology in Half a Century.

The most important contribution to Philology, during the year 1864, was the publication of the illustrated edition of Webster's Quarto Unabridged Dictionary. This work, which had long been in preparation, and on the revision of which years of labor had been bestowed by several eminent scholars, was, in many respects, the greatest addition to the philology of the present age which has appeared within half a century.—Appleton's Cyclopaedia for 1864.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 6, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

THE PREMIUMS.

Now is the time for all our readers to make an effort to spread the light among their neighbors and friends and the members of the various churches, and thus do them good, at the same time they are securing to themselves some valuable articles that are needful in every family. We hope every preacher will succeed in obtaining a sewing machine for his wife, and Webster's invaluable Dictionary for his own use, if he has not got it already. It is a book that he needs.

A great favor might be done to some poor widow, if the brethren in the different churches where such live would unite their efforts, and get subscribers enough to obtain a sewing machine for such poor ones as are trying to get a living by the use of the needle.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary is a vast treasure house of knowledge, containing over 3000 fine engravings, and "ten thousand words and meanings not found in other dictionaries." Over thirty able American and European scholars were employed upon its revision, and thirty years of labor were expended upon it. It contains one fifth more matter than any former edition. Do not fail to secure a copy. We offered these premiums as part pay for the extra time that may be spent in securing subscribers. We think there are thousands in the country who would be glad to take just such a paper as the Crisis. All that is wanting is for them to see a copy, and learn its character. Many have been led to see the truth in the Bible, and are now waiting for our Savior from heaven, with hearts full of love, as the result of reading "our paper," which was first sent them by some friend who was interested in their welfare. If by all our efforts we can save one it will pay for the labor of a life-time. Think of the value of "eternal life." No other gift can equal it, and if we can be instrumental in leading any one to secure it, let us rejoice in such a privilege. A very little effort may accomplish such a glorious result. Let the effort be made, while we look to the Lord for his blessing upon our labors.

"THE HOUR OF PERIL."

The "perilous times" of "the last days" have really come. We think no one who looks candidly at the matter, can see any ground to deny the fact. It is a time when every christian should have on "the whole armor of God," and be established in the truth and work of the Lord. Indifference now is hazardous in the extreme. Every one is needed as an active soldier of the cross. The enemy is strong, united, well-disciplined, of long experience, very decided, and knows he is about to engage in the last conflict. The struggle before us is not one of a sham fight, but of deadly conflict,—the final battle for the everlasting kingdom; and all who stand firmly for the right, "immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," are sure of a share in the grand triumph when our King comes; but cowards and idle ones have no promise.

This is the hour for decisive action. It is no time for compromising with the enemy. An hour's delay may turn the scale in the wrong direction. Be bold and daring for the right. Risk every thing for Jesus, and all is safe.

Perhaps we can best illustrate the present "hour of peril" by relating the following incident:—

"The foundations of a gigantic mill were laid upon the banks of a rapid stream in Western New York, and the men of the little village near gathered to raise the massive frame to its place. Bent after bent was lifted, till the last and heaviest one alone was left. At the word of command, this rose above the strong arms which held the pikes, until it reached what builders call 'the pinch in the bent,' beyond which it passes with comparative ease to the vertical position, and there it stopped.

The master-builder shouted, with alarm: 'Lift, men, or die!' Every muscle was strained anew but in vain. There it hung over the living throng like an engine of swift destruction. Just then three men appeared in the highway, upon the brow of the hill, and the call for help fell on their ears; they saw the peril, and hastened away from the scene with cowardly fear.

The chief workman mounted a plate above the trembling company, and in tears again shouted: 'Lift, men, or die!' The struggle was fruitless—the frame was settling toward the exhausted throng.

Meanwhile the tidings had spread through the village; the women had gathered along the opposite bank of the current, and were anxiously looking up to the imperilled loved ones. The eye of the builder was turned upon them a moment, and then with a fresh flood of tears, he exclaimed, 'Mothers, if you would have sons; wives, if you would have husbands; and sisters, if you would have brothers, to-night, come and help us!' With the strong impulse of woman's nature they rushed across the stream, and stood side by side with the dear inmates of the deserted homes. Then came the cry of distress once more: 'Now, all together lift, or die!' And they did lift. Up—up—went the frame. A stroke of the hammer, and all was safe."

As in the thrilling scene just read, so now the church has come to a crisis, when help is absolutely necessary. We are at an awful point of danger, when the help of every one is needed. The enemy is making a grand rally of all his forces in order to crush out the little company of christians scattered over the world, who are trying to raise the spiritual bent. If they yield or give up, death will be the result. There are many who have been but spectators of the conflict; but has not the time come when they can see the distressing need of help, and will they, like the three men referred to, hasten away from the scene of danger? Who will be so cowardly, and desert when their help is most needed? Well may Jesus say of such, they are not worthy to be at the marriage of the Lamb. There are many who will follow Jesus at a distance; speak well of him, when the scoffer is absent; but in the hour of peril, their ears are not open to hear the cry for help, their aid is not given when it might save a soul from death. They see the danger, but have not courage to give the alarm. When they hear the cry—"Lift, men, or die!" they hope to save their lives by flight; but they are followed by the declaration of the Captain of our salvation,—"Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." Which shall be done?

The cry for help goes forth to our sisters in the Lord. We are aware that the popular voice enjoins silence upon them in the religious meetings, while they are urged to take an active part in picnics, fairs, festivals, and all other scenes of worldly amusement. This, we are sure, is as Satan would have it; but has not the time come for them to leave for ever all such vain pursuits, and, like those noble women who saved their husbands, sons, and brothers, from temporal destruction, make one more earnest, united effort to save them from eternal death? The cry echoes all around us, "Lift, men, or die." While a few stand burdened with their crushing load, that might be easily moved if all would help, will the rest look on, or turn away to save themselves, or to keep a good name among those who have no interest in the cause of Christ? Will Jesus say to such—"Well done?"

The hour has arrived for those to separate from the world, who expect to be "called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." Jesus is about to appear to take his bride; but she will be composed only of those who "love his appearing." Is the reader ready? Is your all consecrated to the Lord? Are you dead to the world? Are you lifting unitedly with all the children of the Redeemer? or are you only looking on to see the rest toil, when your help would turn the scale in your favor, and be the means of saving many more? Shall we entreat in vain? Can no words stir you? Is there no sympathy in your bosom for the suffering cause of Christ? Shall the few still stand in perilous need of your aid and receive none at your hand? Do not turn a deaf ear to their cries for help. It is too late for further delays.

"'Tis the last call of mercy
That lingers for thee;
Break away from thy bondage,
Come, help and be free."

ALCOHOL AS A MEDICINE.—We hope all will read the article in the Hygienic columns this week. It contains facts that all should know. Though the article is somewhat lengthy, it will pay well for a careful reading. Dr. Jewett, the author, is well qualified to speak on the subject.

THE DRESS OF WOMEN.

The dress of women at the present day is the most extravagant ever known since this continent was settled. The passion for costly apparel, and foolish ornaments, seems to have no limits. The instructions given in the Bible relative to dress, are treated with utter contempt, and so is the one who attempts to show the importance of adhering to the Bible directions. He is looked upon as some old "crusty cynic," that ought to live in a hermitage outside of society. It is a sad fact that there are ministers, professing to preach the gospel of the kingdom, who even give their sanction to the fashionable fooleries of these last day extravagances.

A careful observer might reasonably conclude that the chief end of woman was to spend all she could get in dress; each endeavoring to excel her neighbor. Many honest, hard-working men are completely beggared by the extravagance of those who should help bear the burdens of life; while thousands of active business men are obliged to do business on borrowed capital, in consequence of the extravagance of their families. It is said there is no nation in the world, except the French, that is so extravagant as the Americans, especially since the war began. Never have the festive halls and all scenes of amusement been so crowded as during the past year and the present; and the tide of fashion and pleasure is still rising.

The following list of articles in an American lady's wardrobe, at the present day, as enumerated by J. B. Gough, in his lecture on "Habit," will read very differently from one containing the modest variety worn by primitive christians. The list contains sixty-eight different articles, and yet it is not complete:

"Whalebone, rattan, cord, flannel, steel, silk, braid, silesia, chenille, tassels, buttons, hooks and eyes, fringe, furbelows, laces, ribbons, stockings, shoes, skirts, Balmorals, stays, pads, muslin, bracelets, breastpins, ear rings, cloaks, borders, collars, bosoms, trimmings, bonnets, waterfalls, pincushions, with somebody else's hair wound around them, rats, mice, combs, flowers, scarfs, gloves, muffs, furs, wristlets, opera cloaks, shawls, kids, passementier, point lace, trefoils, embroidery, lingerie, velvets, ruches, puffings, bugles, ruffles, flounces, beads, tucks, yokes, veils, undershirts, chemisettes, belts, buckles, tulle, leaves, berries," etc.

Has the following Scripture any meaning? Does it deserve any attention? Will it make any difference whether it is observed or not? Judging from the dress of a large proportion of professors of religion, we should think they considered these Scriptures as unworthy of their notice: "I will . . . . that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." 1 Tim. 2: 8–9. Let it be remembered that the Roman church, referred to in Revelation 17th chapter, is symbolized by a harlot woman richly dressed, "and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls." The dress she wore showed at once she did not represent the true bride of Christ; so, if those who now profess to be the true church, dress like the harlot woman, it is proof that they have departed from Christ, are conformed to the world.

Is it not time there was a reform? Who will take the lead? Many say, we do not want to be the first, lest it should make people talk. Had we all acted on that principle, we should not now be rejoicing in the "blessed hope" of soon seeing Jesus. We have bowed to the tyrant of fashion full long enough. Let us now try to please the Lord, if no one else is suited, then we may continually enjoy the peace that is like a river, passing all understanding, and soon our dear Savior will appear with his mighty angels to bring his bride to his loving embrace.

THE POWER OF HABIT.

But few are aware of the power of habit, when once fully formed. Almost every thing we do is the result of habit. It is said with much truth, that "man is a bundle of habits." His manner of walking, talking, eating, working, thinking, etc., are the result of habits formed. How important, then, that we form good habits; such as will honor the Lord, and cause us to rejoice in him. Good habits are a source of continued comfort; whereas, bad ones only rob us of our joy and peace; besides making us unpleasant companions for others.

Bad habits are like tyrants over us. In the case of eating and drinking, the bad ones produce a hankering, an uneasy longing for the bad thing, that is not felt by those who do not indulge in food and drinks that are unhealthy. The following is an instance:—

"Coleridge, one of the subtlest intellects and finest poets of his time, battled for twenty years before he could emancipate himself from his tyrant, opium. He went into voluntary imprisonment. He hired a man to watch him day and night, and keep him by force from tasting the pernicious drug. He formed resolution after resolution. Yet, during all the best years of his life, he wasted his substance and his health, neglected his family, and lived degraded and accursed, because he had not resolution to abstain. He would lay plans to cheat the very man whom he paid to keep the drug from him, and bribe the jailer to whom he had voluntarily surrendered himself."

The same is true of tobacco, tea, coffee, and intoxicating drinks. When one has formed the habit of using these things, it requires much decision and self-denial to break up one of these bad habits. They were formed gradually; and every time they are repeated they gain new power over us. Their repetition is like winding a cord around an object; every coil secures it more firmly. Satan is trying in every possible way to bind us up with bad habits. Our only safety is in continued resistance, and in no case yielding to what we know is not right.

The following bad habits are among those to be avoided entirely, if we would have the christian's peace and joy:—all unkind words to every one, all evil-speaking, backbiting, and joking. Wherever these things abound, vital godliness will be very low. But few, we think, are aware of the evil arising from an indulgence in these evils; but they are as common as they are wicked. Their only tendency is to spread ruin wherever they are allowed.

Let us commence a war of extermination against all our bad habits, that we may be ready for the return of the Son of man.

STUDY THE SCRIPTURES.

Said John Locke:—"Study the Holy Scriptures; therein are contained the words of eternal life. They have God for their author, salvation for their end, and truth without any mixture of error for their matter."

Said Sir William Jones:—Theological enquiries are no part of my present subject; but I cannot refrain from adding that the collection of tracts we call from their excellence THE SCRIPTURES, contain, independently of a divine origin, more true sublimity, more exquisite beauty, purer morality, more important history, and finer strains of poetry and eloquence than could be collected within the same compass from all other books that were ever composed in any age or in any idiom.

The two parts of which the Scriptures consist—[the Old and New Testament] are connected by a chain of compositions—[THE PROPHECIES], which bear no resemblance in form or style to any that can be produced from the stores of Grecian, Indian, Persian, or even Arabian learning. The antiquity of these compositions no man doubts; and the unstrained application of them to events long subsequent to their publication, is a solid ground of belief that they were genuine predictions, and consequently inspired."

THE LITTLE HORN.

Before the clear light shone on the prophecies of Daniel, there were several writers who thought the "little horn" of Daniel 7: 8, represented Antiochus Epiphanes who desolated the Jews; but that opinion has been most fully exposed as unsound. That it represents the Roman power in its Papal form, we see no room to doubt. Some of the objections to applying it to Antiochus are well stated by Sir Isaac Newton in his work on the book of Daniel, as follows:—

"This last horn is by some taken for Antiochus Epiphanes, but not very judiciously. A horn of a beast is never taken for a single person; it always signifies a new kingdom, and the kingdom of Antiochus was an old one. Antiochus reigned over one of the four horns, and the little horn was a fifth under its proper kings. This horn at first was a little one, and waxed exceeding great, but so did not Antiochus. It is described great above all the former horns, and so was not Antiochus. His kingdom on the contrary was weak, and tributary to the Romans, and he did not enlarge it. The horn was a king of fierce countenance, and destroyed wonderfully, and prospered and practiced; that is, he prospered in his practices against the holy people; but Antiochus was frightened out of Egypt by a mere message of the Romans, and afterwards rooted and baffled by the Jews. The horn was mighty by another's power, Antiochus acted by his own. The horn stood up against the Prince of the host of heaven, the Prince of Princes; and this is the character not of Antiochus, but of Antichrist. The horn cast down the sanctuary to the ground, and so did not Antiochus; he left it standing. The Sanctuary and Host were trampled under foot 2300 days; and in Daniel's prophecies days are put for years; but the profanation of the temple in the reign of Antiochus did not last so many natural days. These were to last till the time of the end, till the last end of the indignation against the Jews; and this indignation is not yet at an end. They were to last till the sanctuary which had been cast down should be cleansed, and the sanctuary is not yet cleansed."—Sir Isaac Newton on Daniel, pp. 123–4.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

BLIND BARTIMEUS; or, How to be Saved. Mark 10: 46–52.

A neat little tract of twelve pages, written by a "young brother," in earnest to save souls. It is plain, pointed, practical, and excellent to scatter among the unconverted. It opens the way of salvation more clearly, by drawing a beautiful and striking analogy between the condition and conduct of Blind Bartimeus and the experience of the spiritually blind, who, by faith and prayer and wonder-working grace, are brought out of nature's darkness into God's marvellous light. May the same pen be moved to write again, and cultivate the ability which God hath given. For sale at the Crisis office. Price per dozen, 25 cents; $1.50 per hundred.

"OUR MISSION WORK." This neat little tract of thirty-two pages contains a Report of the Organization of the America Advent Mission Society, its Constitution, list of Officers, the Address on "Our Mission Work," and the Address of the Board. Five thousand copies are published for general circulation. The Board desire to have them scattered as widely as possible, with or without money. Those who feel disposed to help defray the cost of printing, can send what they please, when ordering for distribution among the friends of the cause. PROSPECTUS
OF A
Critical Greek and English Concordance.

The undersigned herewith presents to students of the Bible, and to the friends of sacred literature generally, the accompanying specimen pages, of "A Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament." It differs materially from all other Concordances, and grew out of the personal wants and desires of the publisher, and has been improved in design and execution by the suggestions of persons accomplished in the department of sacred literature.

The following statement will indicate its peculiarities. It contains:

1. References to all places where each Greek word contained in the New Testament is used. A few particles only, constantly occurring, are excepted, and of these an ample account is given. The list of proper names is given separately, with their various readings.

2. The different English words and phrases by which these Greek words are translated in the common version.

3. The various readings of the four best editors of the New Testament, Griesbach, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles, and also of the SINAITIC MANUSCRIPT, in all places variously read by either of these editors.

4. An Index of English words, by means of which persons entirely unacquainted with the Greek language can find the original for any English word in any passage, and can trace and ascertain its usage throughout the entire New Testament.

It is proposed to the patronage of the public in the hope of supplying the existing lack of Greek Concordances of the New Testament; so CRITICAL that it will present the most advanced condition of sound textual investigation, and so THOROUGH that the most learned will find it adapted to their needs; so SIMPLE that the mere English student can use it with fecility; so CHEAP that the multitudes may obtain it; and so COMPACT and portable that it may be made a constant companion of the traveler, the student, and the evangelist.

The execution of the plan has been committed to the skilful and competent hands of Prof. C. F. Hudson, and the work is now about two-thirds completed. If the Lord will, it is hoped that it may be finished during the summer of 1866.

It will contain about five hundred pages, and, upon this paper, will make a book about six and a half inches long, four and a half inches wide, and half an inch thick. If subscribers should signify a desire for a larger edition, one suited for library use may be prepared upon thicker paper, and with a wider margin. The edition described will be portable. The prices, as nearly as can be estimated, will be, for copies bound in cloth, $2.50; for copies bound in morocco, $3.50.

Subscribers will confer a favor by sending their names, with or without the money, to the undersigned. When the book is ready, they will be apprised of the fact.

WORSHIP ON "THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK."

DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—I desire, in meekness, to submit to you the following observations relative to meetings for worship on "the first day of the week," commonly called "The Lord's day;" being named by the Holy Ghost "the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread," in commemoration of the Lord's death and resurrection.

It is the worship of sinners saved by grace—the church of God—believers, walking in holiness and having the one hope in Christ; whom they acknowledge as their Head, the ever-living Head of His body, the church, by meeting together in His name, and worshiping God as His Father and their Father. John 20: 17. It is thus family worship—the children scattered abroad gathered together by Jesus (John 11: 52), and brought into recognized relation to God, and to each other, by the Spirit of the Father dwelling in them. Rom. 8. 15; 1 John 4: 13.

And wherever the Lord's risen family meet together, he has not only given them an assurance that he is in the midst of them, as their Head (Matt. 18: 20), but he has also given them gifts whereby one may edify another. 1 Cor. 12; Luke 19: 13; Eph. 4: 15, 16. He has bountifully endowed his church—his own loved and cherished body; his Spirit dwells in her, and comforts, and rules, and teaches, and supplies her every need, enabling her to speak as he dictates to these several ends. John 14: 16, 17.

By the exercise of these gifts the newly begotten body is built up, strengthened, edified; and the utterance of the mind of the Spirit by the mouth of "each one severally as He will." Let us remember, for our comfort, that God has not left us to guess our way in these great privileges. No; we have his word and Spirit still for our guidance in these rebellious days; and if we search the word of God, in humble dependence on the Spirit of God to guide us aright, we shall not miss the way God has marked out for us. And what does the Scripture say on this very point, and with special reference to these last days? "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Heb. 10: 25. "Much the more," when others are neglecting to do so; and especially as the coming of the Lord draws nigh. How precious, then, these two portions of Scripture (Matt. 18: 20; Heb 10: 25) in these last evil days. And how clearly it is our duty and privilege to assemble ourselves together in the name of the Lord Jesus, as believers and brethren in Christ, as members of his body—the church of God.

On this subject, our next remark is, that Christ is the only Lord and Priest of the church. There is no ministry of lordship or priesthood in the church, but that of Christ, save the common priesthood of all believers. Ministry is simply service; those who have special gifts using them for the benefit of the body. There are those gifted to rule or guide the saints; and they are exhorted to be subject to them. But the service of rule is not lordship. "Not for that we have dominion over your faith." 2 Cor. 1: 24. "Neither as being lords over God's heritage." 1 Peter 5: 3. It is simply those who have more wisdom (gifts for so guiding) than the rest, for guiding the flock. And the command is, "Not for filthy lucre (money), but of a ready mind," etc. 1 Peter 5: 2.

To confine ministry to a class is to exclude the presence of the Holy Ghost, as dwelling in and guiding the body. Where he dwells he must be supreme; and he "divides to every man severally as he will." 1 Cor. 12: 11. He cannot be limited by us. If we would have his presence, guidance, and power, in connection with the assembly, there must be full liberty of ministry—liberty for all to use whatever gift the Lord may bestow, and as the Holy Ghost may lead.

The next remark I would make is, has the church, then, nothing to do with the world as to the things of God? Yes, much. She is "the light of the world" (Matt. 5: 14), but not to mingle her light with the world's darkness and make confusion, but by her light to reprove its darkness (Eph. 5: 11); and she has to hold forth the preached gospel, that they who are ordained unto eternal life may believe.

Now where ministry of the church is thus according to Scripture, the unity of the body is preserved, as well as its healthy action. The members are all dependent on each other; and each performing its proper function, the growth, strength, and unity of the whole are thereby promoted.

How blessed it would be for the church, if these God appointed principles were acted on by all the saints! If all were gathered around the common table of the Lord, with full liberty for the Spirit of God to minister by whom he will; then would the church know the presence of the Lord manifested in real, spiritual unity, power and blessing, as it is impossible to realize in sectarian fellowship.

Brethren, "the time is short." "The night is at hand." "Behold! the bridegroom cometh!" Oh! let not the Lord come and find us in systems that he will burn up in that day 1 Cor. 3: 12–15. But whatever others may do, may we through grace be found "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." And remember that the Lord's last words to us were, "Surely, I come quickly." Then may our hearts reply, "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. 22: 20

"BE YE ALSO READY."

Supposing a messenger, sent by the highest authority in the land, should go through our villages and towns proclaiming that all who should on a coming day be found fitted according to instructions given, should receive some high office, a position at once delightful to occupy, and every way calculated to promote the highest interests of the individual concerned; and that also, not only were provisions made that all the real sacrifices incurred by the necessary neglect of ordinary business, in securing the required fitness, should be made up manifold, but a heavy penalty should be incurred in case of a refusal, or neglect to comply with the conditions. What would be thought of the individual that would treat with indifference the whole matter, or that should defer the work of preparation until the very day they were to start for the place of examination?

Well, a proclamation has come to us from the King of Kings, the God of the universe, saying, that whosoever shall be found ready according to his expressly recorded instructions, shall on the day in which he shall crown his only Son King of the whole world, be made co-heirs with him in that kingdom. And that all the sacrifices that shall be made in consequence of opposition from the present ruler of this world, shall be made up a hundred fold here, and eternal life added, in the kingdom coming.

Now the time being just at hand for that coming of the King, in what case does it find the world? Many, who profess, nevertheless, an attachment to the King, and his Son, still prefer to have them at a distance, and are so well pleased with Cæser and his rule, who gave Cæser his seat and power, that they see no necessity for the coming of the Son of God, to take the kingdom, and conclude that it is all a mistake, that he never will come.

Others, just as good, profess to think that he may come sometime, but, shutting their eyes to the signs given to encourage and cheer the hearts truly waiting for him, inquire, "Where are these signs of his coming? These things were just so in the days of our fathers."

Still, by the order of the King sounds out the word, "Behold, he cometh," and with it there comes to the ears of the world a lingering remembrance of having heard, in some former time, perhaps, "In such an hour as ye think not, I come;" and turning to these popular teachers they inquire, "Is it indeed so? does the end draw nigh? the fearful Judgment come?" And the answer comes, "Nay, ye know not the time; look not for his coming, it is a delusion. Ages of peace and safety succeed these times. We have preached and prayed for it, and shall we not have it? We have persuaded tens of thousands of our fellows to shed their blood, cutting off their chance of a future salvation, and they now wail in unending torments for it, and SHALL WE NOT HAVE IT? Besides, it is written, 'My kingdom is not of this world:' this is for us and Cæser, and by and by, when we can possibly stay here no longer, we expect our spirits to go away beyond the bounds of time and space, where it must be more favorable for the Lord to reign than it can possibly be for him here."

Thus the fear of impending judgment is driven from the hearts of both professor and unprofessor; and the eye is seen to sparkle anew as they go about, trusting for a longer time in which to indulge the lusts of the flesh, ere they are summoned to take a reluctant leave of all, and go, as they think, through the gates of death into the presence of Him whom they could not endure to have to come to them.

In this manner, then, do we find the "many" treating this wonderful proclamation of an offended, yet gracious Being, to his erring, lost creatures, while the "few," here and there a traveler, are fleeing worldly lusts, keeping their garments unspotted, forsaking all that they may be accounted worthy to be crowned joint heirs with Christ in the kingdom of God.

Reader, to which of these classes do you belong? Are you, too, hoping that the "time is prolonged"? Then read in that very desire your unfitness for the event. What if, while reading this, the Son of God should come, "like a thief" indeed, to you, because you trusted to false teachers? how could you meet him? What a position, then, do you occupy? There is nothing to which you can liken it, for your risks are the greatest possible. Eternity cannot all reveal them, for that will never end. What are you to do, then? Let me tell you what I truly believe. The call is as imperative to you as to Lot in Sodom,—"Up! get you out of this place, flee for your life. Look not behind you." Cast not a lingering look to the fashions, habits and associations that consume your time, engross your mind, and involve you in eternal ruin. Your name may be enrolled on church records; that cannot save you. You may be living as well as very many; that cannot save you.

With all diligence, then, seek a knowledge of God's requirements of you, obey him, secure an application of that blood that cleanseth from all sin, then shall you in truth "love" the appearing of the great King, and thus shall an abundant entrance be administered unto you, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

second time, personally, to raise the dead and change the living. We will refer the reader to Psa. 6: 5,—"For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Psa. 88: 10–12,—"Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah." Would this be the language of inspiration if the soul were in heaven praising God? No indeed.

"But," says the objector, "the spirit returns to God who gave it." Yes, we know the spirit returns to God who gave it; but the spirit there referred to in the writings of Solomon, is translated from the Hebrew word (ruach), which is translated breath and spirit in Eccl. 3: 19–21, and the same word spirit is applied to the beasts; so that, if the word spirit, which is translated breath, means an immortal soul, which returns to God who gave it, then of course the beasts have got immortal souls, which go down into the earth, and live there, while the souls of men go upward to heaven, where they formerly lived, before entering the human body. MRS. HENRY WARD BEECHER'S EXPERIENCE WITH THE

Grover & Baker Family Sewing Machine.

Grover & Baker Sewing Machine Company:

Gentlemen: It gives me the greatest pleasure to add my testimony to the unrivalled excellencies of Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine. It is, in my opinion, by far the most valuable of any I have tried. The thorough operation of it is most easy and simple, and its unobtrusive and quiet movements are very grateful to a weary head. The work when done is wonderful in its strength. More than two-thirds of all the sewing done in my family for the last two years has been done by Grover & Baker's machine, and I have never had a garment rip or need mending, except those rents, which frolicsome boys will make in whole cloth, and for them your machine has, I suppose, no remedy but a patch or darn.

The seam on the under side, sometimes represented as an objection to Grover & Baker's machine, is, I think, only the evidence of unskillful operation.

Honestly appreciating the excellencies of your machine as fully as I have here stated, I could give it no higher praise than the fact that when my only daughter married, I gave her this long-tried household friend, depriving myself of its services to lighten her first assumption of domestic duties. I can manage any machine comfortably, but my daughter was never willing to use any but Grover & Baker's.

I hope to be able soon to send you a well-deserved recommendation from my husband; meanwhile if any part of this will be of value, it is at your disposal.

Yours gratefully,
MRS. H. W. BEECHER.

Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine.

They are more simple, durable, and less liable to derangement than others.

They sew with equal facility all fabrics, the most delicate and the heaviest, and with all kinds of thread, silk, cotton, or linen.

The seam is so strong and elastic that, when properly sewed, it will not break, even on the bias.

The seam, though cut at every sixth stitch, remains firm, and neither runs or ravels in wear.

Greatest Addition to Philology in Half a Century.

The most important contribution to Philology, during the year 1864, was the publication of the illustrated edition of Webster's Quarto Unabridged Dictionary. This work, which had long been in preparation, and on the revision of which years of labor had been bestowed by several eminent scholars, was, in many respects, the greatest addition to the philology of the present age which has appeared within half a century.—Appleton's Cyclopedia for 1864.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 6, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

THE PREMIUMS.

Now is the time for all our readers to make an effort to spread the light among their neighbors and friends and the members of the various churches, and thus do them good, at the same time they are securing to themselves some valuable articles that are needful in every family. We hope every preacher will succeed in obtaining a sewing machine for his wife, and Webster's invaluable Dictionary for his own use, if he has not got it already. It is a book that he needs.

A great favor might be done to some poor widow, if the brethren in the different churches where such live would unite their efforts, and get subscribers enough to obtain a sewing machine for such poor ones as are trying to get a living by the use of the needle.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary is a vast treasure house of knowledge, containing over 3000 fine engravings, and "ten thousand words and meanings not found in other dictionaries." Over thirty able American and European scholars were employed upon its revision, and thirty years of labor were expended upon it. It contains one fifth more matter than any former edition. Do not fail to secure a copy. We offered these premiums as part pay for the extra time that may be spent in securing subscribers. We think there are thousands in the country who would be glad to take just such a paper as the Crisis. All that is wanting is for them to see a copy, and learn its character. Many have been led to see the truth in the Bible, and are now waiting for our Savior from heaven, with hearts full of love, as the result of reading "our paper," which was first sent them by some friend who was interested in their welfare. If by all our efforts we can save one it will pay for the labor of a life-time. Think of the value of "eternal life." No other gift can equal it; and if we can be instrumental in leading any one to secure it, let us rejoice in such a privilege. A very little effort may accomplish such a glorious result. Let the effort be made, while we look to the Lord for his blessing upon our labors.

"THE HOUR OF PERIL."

The "perilous times" of "the last days" have really come. We think no one who looks candidly at the matter, can see any ground to deny the fact. It is a time when every christian should have on "the whole armor of God," and be established in the truth and work of the Lord. Indifference now is hazardous in the extreme. Every one is needed as an active soldier of the cross. The enemy is strong, united, well-disciplined, of long experience, very decided, and knows he is about to engage in the last conflict. The struggle before us is not one of a sham fight, but of deadly conflict,—the final battle for the everlasting kingdom; and all who stand firmly for the right, "immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," are sure of a share in the grand triumph when our King comes; but cowards and idle ones have no promise.

This is the hour for decisive action. It is no time for compromising with the enemy. An hour's delay may turn the scale in the wrong direction. Be bold and daring for the right. Risk every thing for Jesus, and all is safe.

Perhaps we can best illustrate the present "hour of peril" by relating the following incident:—

"The foundations of a gigantic mill were laid upon the banks of a rapid stream in Western New York, and the men of the little village near gathered to raise the massive frame to its place. Bent after bent was lifted, till the last and heaviest one alone was left. At the word of command, this rose above the strong arms which held the pikes, until it reached what builders call 'the pinch in the bent,' beyond which it passes with comparative ease to the vertical position, and there it stopped.

The master-builder shouted, with alarm: 'Lift, men, or die!' Every muscle was strained anew but in vain. There it hung over the living throng like an engine of swift destruction. Just then three men appeared in the highway, upon the brow of the hill, and the call for help fell on their ears; they saw the peril, and hastened away from the scene with cowardly fear.

The chief workman mounted a plate above the trembling company, and in tears again shouted: 'Lift, men, or die!' The struggle was fruitless—the frame was settling toward the exhausted throng.

Meanwhile the tidings had spread through the village; the women had gathered along the opposite bank of the current, and were anxiously looking up to the imperilled loved ones. The eye of the builder was turned upon them a moment, and then with a fresh flood of tears, he exclaimed, 'Mothers, if you would have sons; wives, if you would have husbands; and sisters, if you would have brothers, to-night, come and help us!' With the strong impulse of woman's nature they rushed across the stream, and stood side by side with the dear inmates of the deserted homes. Then came the cry of distress once more: 'Now, all together lift, or die!' And they did lift. Up—up—went the frame. A stroke of the hammer, and all was safe."

As in the thrilling scene just read, so now the church has come to a crisis, when help is absolutely necessary. We are at an awful point of danger, when the help of every one is needed. The enemy is making a grand rally of all his forces in order to crush out the little company of christians scattered over the world, who are trying to raise the spiritual bent. If they yield or give up, death will be the result. There are many who have been but spectators of the conflict; but has not the time come when they can see the distressing need of help, and will they, like the three men referred to, hasten away from the scene of danger? Who will be so cowardly, and desert when their help is most needed? Well may Jesus say of such, they are not worthy to be at the marriage of the Lamb. There are many who will follow Jesus at a distance; speak well of him, when the scoffer is absent; but in the hour of peril, their ears are not open to hear the cry for help, their aid is not given when it might save a soul from death. They see the danger, but have not courage to give the alarm. When they hear the cry—"Lift, men, or die!" they hope to save their lives by flight; but they are followed by the declaration of the Captain of our salvation,—"Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." Which shall be done?

The cry for help goes forth to our sisters in the Lord. We are aware that the popular voice enjoins silence upon them in the religious meetings, while they are urged to take an active part in picnics, fairs, festivals, and all other scenes of worldly amusement. This, we are sure, is as Satan would have it; but has not the time come for them to leave for ever all such vain pursuits, and, like those noble women who saved their husbands, sons, and brothers, from temporal destruction, make one more earnest, united effort to save them from eternal death? The cry echoes all around us, "Lift, men, or die." While a few stand burdened with their crushing load, that might be easily moved if all would help, will the rest look on, or turn away to save themselves, or to keep a good name among those who have no interest in the cause of Christ? Will Jesus say to such—"Well done?"

The hour has arrived for those to separate from the world, who expect to be "called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." Jesus is about to appear to take his bride; but she will be composed only of those who "love his appearing." Is the reader ready? Is your all consecrated to the Lord? Are you dead to the world? Are you lifting unitedly with all the children of the Redeemer? or are you only looking on to see the rest toil, when your help would turn the scale in your favor, and be the means of saving many more? Shall we entreat in vain? Can no words stir you? Is there no sympathy in your bosom for the suffering cause of Christ? Shall the few still stand in perilous need of your aid and receive none at your hand? Do not turn a deaf ear to their cries for help. It is too late for further delays.

"'Tis the last call of mercy
That lingers for thee;
Break away from thy bondage,
Come, help and be free."

ALCOHOL AS A MEDICINE.—We hope all will read the article in the Hygienic columns this week. It contains facts that all should know. Though the article is somewhat lengthy, it will pay well for a careful reading. Dr. Jewett, the author, is well qualified to speak on the subject.

THE DRESS OF WOMEN.

The dress of women at the present day is the most extravagant ever known since this continent was settled. The passion for costly apparel, and foolish ornaments, seems to have no limits. The instructions given in the Bible relative to dress, are treated with utter contempt, and so is the one who attempts to show the importance of adhering to the Bible directions. He is looked upon as some old "crusty cynic," that ought to live in a hermitage outside of society. It is a sad fact that there are ministers, professing to preach the gospel of the kingdom, who even give their sanction to the fashionable fooleries of these last day extravagances.

A careful observer might reasonably conclude that the chief end of woman was to spend all she could get in dress; each endeavoring to excel her neighbor. Many honest, hard-working men are completely beggared by the extravagance of those who should help bear the burdens of life; while thousands of active business men are obliged to do business on borrowed capital, in consequence of the extravagance of their families. It is said there is no nation in the world, except the French, that is so extravagant as the Americans, especially since the war began. Never have the festive balls and all scenes of amusement been so crowded as during the past year and the present; and the tide of fashion and pleasure is still rising.

The following list of articles in an American lady's wardrobe, at the present day, as enumerated by J. B. Gough, in his lecture on "Habit," will read very differently from one containing the modest variety worn by primitive christians. The list contains sixty-eight different articles, and yet it is not complete:

"Whalebone, rattan, cord, flannel, steel, silk, braid, silesia, chenille, tassels, buttons, hooks and eyes, fringe, furbelows, laces, ribbons, stockings, shoes, skirts, Balmorals, stays, pads, muslin, bracelets, breastpins, ear rings, cloaks, borders, collars, bosoms, trimmings, bonnets, waterfalls, pincushions, with somebody else's hair wound around them, rats, mice, combs, flowers, scarfs, gloves, muffs, furs, wristlets, opera cloaks, shawls, kids, passementier, point lace, trefoils, embroidery, lingerie, velvets, ruches, puffings, bugles, ruffles, flounces, beads, tucks, yokes, veils, undershirts, chemisettes, belts, buckles, tulle, leaves, berries," etc.

Has the following Scripture any meaning? Does it deserve any attention? Will it make any difference whether it is observed or not? Judging from the dress of a large proportion of professors of religion, we should think they considered these Scriptures as unworthy of their notice: "I will . . . . that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." 1 Tim. 2: 9-10. It is remembered that the Roman church, referred to in Revelation 17th chapter, is symbolized by a harlot woman richly dressed, "and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls." The dress she wore showed at once she did not represent the true bride of Christ; so, if those who now profess to be the true church, dress like the harlot woman, it is proof that they have departed from Christ, are conformed to the world.

Is it not time there was a reform? Who will take the lead? Many say, we do not want to be the first, lest it should make people talk. Had we all acted on that principle, we should not now be rejoicing in the "blessed hope" of soon seeing Jesus. We have bowed to the tyrant of fashion full long enough. Let us now try to please the Lord, if no one else is suited, then we may continually enjoy the peace that is like a river, passing all understanding, and soon our dear Savior will appear with his mighty angels to bring his bride to his loving embrace.

THE POWER OF HABIT.

But few are aware of the power of habit, when once fully formed. Almost every thing we do is the result of habit. It is said with much truth, that "man is a bundle of habits." His manner of walking, talking, eating, working, thinking, etc., are the result of habits formed. How important, then, that we form good habits; such as will honor the Lord, and cause us to rejoice in him. Good habits are a source of continued comfort; whereas, bad ones only rob us of our joy and peace; besides making us unpleasant companions for others.

Bad habits are like tyrants over us. In the case of eating and drinking, the bad ones produce a hankering, an uneasy longing for the bad thing, that is not felt by those who do not indulge in food and drinks that are unhealthy. The following is an instance:—

"Coleridge, one of the subtlest intellects and finest poets of his time, battled for twenty years before he could emancipate himself from his tyrant, opium. He went into voluntary imprisonment. He hired a man to watch him day and night, and keep him by force from tasting the pernicious drug. He formed resolution after resolution. Yet, during all the best years of his life, he wasted his substance and his health, neglected his family, and lived degraded and accursed, because he had not resolution to abstain. He would lay plans to cheat the very man whom he paid to keep the drug from him, and bribe the jailer to whom he had voluntarily surrendered himself."

The same is true of tobacco, tea, coffee, and intoxicating drinks. When one has formed the habit of using these things, it requires much decision and self-denial to break up one of these bad habits. They were formed gradually; and every time they are repeated they gain new power over us. Their repetition is like winding a cord around an object; every coil secures it more firmly. Satan is trying in every possible way to bind us up with bad habits. Our only safety is in continued resistance, and in no case yielding to what we know is not right.

The following bad habits are among those to be avoided entirely, if we would have the christian's peace and joy:—all unkind words to every one; all evil-speaking, backbiting, and joking. Wherever these things abound, vital godliness will be very low. But few, we think, are aware of the evil arising from an indulgence in these evils; but they are as common as they are wicked. Their only tendency is to spread ruin wherever they are allowed.

Let us commence a war of extermination against all our bad habits, that we may be ready for the return of the Son of man.

STUDY THE SCRIPTURES.

Said John Locke:—"Study the Holy Scriptures; therein are contained the words of eternal life. They have God for their author, salvation for their end, and truth without any mixture of error for their matter."

Said Sir William Jones:—Theological enquiries are no part of my present subject; but I cannot refrain from adding that the collection of tracts we call from their excellence THE SCRIPTURES, contain, independently of a divine origin, more true sublimity, more exquisite beauty, purer morality, more important history, and finer strains of poetry and eloquence than could be collected within the same compass from all other books that were ever composed in any age or in any idiom.

The two parts of which the Scriptures consist—[the Old and New Testament] are connected by a chain of compositions—[THE PROPHECIES], which bear no resemblance in form or style to any that can be produced from the stores of Grecian, Indian, Persian, or even Arabian learning. The antiquity of these compositions no man doubts; and the unstrained application of them to events long subsequent to their publication, is a solid ground of belief that they were genuine predictions, and consequently inspired."

THE LITTLE HORN.

Before the clear light shone on the prophecies of Daniel, there were several writers who thought the "little horn" of Daniel 7: 8, represented Antiochus Epiphanes who desolated the Jews; but that opinion has been most fully exposed as unsound. That it represents the Roman power in its Papal form, we see no room to doubt. Some of the objections to applying it to Antiochus are well stated by Sir Isaac Newton in his work on the book of Daniel, as follows:—

"This last horn is by some taken for Antiochus Epiphanes, but not very judiciously. A horn of a beast is never taken for a single person; it always signifies a new kingdom, and the kingdom of Antiochus was an old one. Antiochus reigned over one of the four horns, and the little horn was a fifth under its proper kings. This horn at first was a little one, and waxed exceeding great, but so did not Antiochus. It is described great above all the former horns, and so was not Antiochus. His kingdom on the contrary was weak, and tributary to the Romans, and he did not enlarge it. The horn was a king of fierce countenance, and destroyed wonderfully, and prospered and practiced; that is, he prospered in his practices against the holy people; but Antiochus was frightened out of Egypt by a mere message of the Romans, and afterwards rooted and baffled by the Jews. The horn was mighty by another's power, Antiochus acted by his own. The horn stood up against the Prince of the host of heaven, the Prince of Princes; and this is the character not of Antiochus, but of Antichrist. The horn cast down the sanctuary to the ground, and so did not Antiochus; he left it standing. The Sanctuary and Host were trampled under foot 2300 days; and in Daniel's prophecies days are put for years; but the profanation of the temple in the reign of Antiochus did not last so many natural days. These were to last till the time of the end, till the last end of the indignation against the Jews; and this indignation is not yet at an end. They were to last till the sanctuary which had been cast down should be cleansed, and the sanctuary is not yet cleansed."—Sir Isaac Newton on Daniel, pp. 123–4.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

BLIND BARTIMEUS; or, How to be Saved. Mark 10: 46–52.

A neat little tract of twelve pages, written by a "young brother," in earnest to save souls. It is plain, pointed, practical, and excellent to scatter among the unconverted. It opens the way of salvation more clearly, by drawing a beautiful and striking analogy between the condition and conduct of Blind Bartimeus and the experience of the spiritually blind, who, by faith and prayer and wonder-working grace, are brought out of nature's darkness into God's marvellous light. May the same pen be moved to write again, and cultivate the ability which God hath given. For sale at the Crisis office. Price per dozen, 25 cents; $1.50 per hundred.

"OUR MISSION WORK." This neat little tract of thirty-two pages contains a Report of the Organization of the America Advent Mission Society, its Constitution, list of Officers, the Address on "Our Mission Work," and the Address of the Board. PROSPECTUS
Critical Greek and English Concordance.

The undersigned herewith presents to students of the Bible, and to the friends of sacred literature generally, the accompanying specimen pages, of "A Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament." It differs materially from all other Concordances, and grew out of the personal wants and desires of the publisher, and has been improved in design and execution by the suggestions of persons accomplished in the department of sacred literature.

The following statement will indicate its peculiarities. It contains:

1. References to all places where each Greek word contained in the New Testament is used. A few particles only, constantly occurring, are excepted, and of these an ample account is given. The list of proper names is given separately, with their various readings.

2. The different English words and phrases by which these Greek words are translated in the common version.

3. The various readings of the four best editors of the New Testament, Griesbach, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles, and also of the SINIATIC MANUSCRIPT, in all places variously read by either of these editors.

4. An Index of English words, by means of which persons entirely unacquainted with the Greek language can find the original for any English word in any passage, and can trace and ascertain its usage throughout the entire New Testament.

It is proposed to the patronage of the public in the hope of supplying the existing lack of Greek Concordances of the New Testament; so CRITICAL that it will present the most advanced condition of sound textual investigation, and so THOROUGH that the most learned will find it adapted to their needs; so SIMPLE that the mere English student can use it with fecility; so CHEAP that the multitudes may obtain it; and so COMPACT and portable that it may be made a constant companion of the traveler, the student, and the evangelist.

The execution of the plan has been committed to the skilful and competent hands of Prof. C. F. Hudson, and the work is now about two-thirds completed. If the Lord will, it is hoped that it may be finished during the summer of 1866.

It will contain about five hundred pages, and, upon this paper, will make a book about six and a half inches long, four and a half inches wide, and half an inch thick. If subscribers should signify a desire for a larger edition, one suited for library use may be prepared upon thicker paper, and with a wider margin. The edition described will be portable. The prices, as nearly as can be estimated, will be, for copies bound in cloth, $2.50; for copies bound in morocco, $3.50.

Subscribers will confer a favor by sending their names, with or without the money, to the undersigned. When the book is ready, they will be apprised of the fact.

WORSHIP ON "THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK."

DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—I desire, in meekness, to submit to you the following observations relative to meetings for worship on "the first day of the week," commonly called "The Lord's day;" being named by the Holy Ghost "the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread," in commemoration of the Lord's death and resurrection.

It is the worship of sinners saved by grace—the church of God—believers, walking in holiness and having the one hope in Christ; whom they acknowledge as their Head, the ever-living Head of His body, the church, by meeting together in His name, and worshiping God as His Father and their Father. John 20: 17. It is thus family worship—the children scattered abroad gathered together by Jesus (John 11: 52), and brought into recognized relation to God, and to each other, by the Spirit of the Father dwelling in them. Rom. 8. 15; 1 John 4: 13.

And wherever the Lord's risen family meet together, he has not only given them an assurance that he is in the midst of them, as their Head (Matt. 18: 20), but he has also given them gifts whereby one may edify another. 1 Cor. 12; Luke 19: 13; Eph. 4: 15, 16. He has bountifully endowed his church—his own loved and cherished body; his Spirit dwells in her, and comforts, and rules, and teaches, and supplies her every need, enabling her to speak as he dictates to these several ends. John 14: 16, 17.

By the exercise of these gifts the newly begotten body is built up, strengthened, edified; and the utterance of the mind of the Spirit by the mouth of "each one severally as He will." Let us remember, for our comfort, that God has not left us to guess our way in these great privileges. No; we have his word and Spirit still for our guidance in these rebellious days; and if we search the word of God, in humble dependence on the Spirit of God to guide us aright, we shall not miss the way God has marked out for us. And what does the Scripture say on this very point, and with special reference to these last days? "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Heb. 10: 25. "Much the more," when others are neglecting to do so; and especially as the coming of the Lord draws nigh. How precious, then, these two portions of Scripture (Matt. 18: 20; Heb 10: 25) in these last evil days. And how clearly it is our duty and privilege to assemble ourselves together in the name of the Lord Jesus, as believers and brethren in Christ, as members of his body—the church of God.

On this subject, our next remark is, that Christ is the only Lord and Priest of the church. There is no ministry of lordship or priesthood in the church, but that of Christ, save the common priesthood of all believers. Ministry is simply service; those who have special gifts using them for the benefit of the body. There are those gifted to rule or guide the saints; and they are exhorted to be subject to them. But the service of rule is not lordship. "Not for that we have dominion over your faith." 2 Cor. 1: 24. "Neither as being lords over God's heritage." 1 Peter 5: 3. It is simply those who have more wisdom (gifts for so guiding) than the rest, for guiding the flock. And the command is, "Not for filthy lucre (money), but of a ready mind," etc. 1 Peter 5: 2.

To confine ministry to a class is to exclude the presence of the Holy Ghost, as dwelling in and guiding the body. Where he dwells he must be supreme; and he "divides to every man severally as he will." 1 Cor. 12: 11. He cannot be limited by us. If we would have his presence, guidance, and power, in connection with the assembly, there must be full liberty of ministry—liberty for all to use whatever gift the Lord may bestow, and as the Holy Ghost may lead.

The next remark I would make is, has the church, then, nothing to do with the world as to the things of God? Yes, much. She is "the light of the world" (Matt. 5: 14), but not to mingle her light with the world's darkness and make confusion, but by her light to reprove its darkness (Eph. 5: 11); and she has to hold forth the preached gospel, that they who are ordained unto eternal life may believe.

Now where ministry of the church is thus according to Scripture, the unity of the body is preserved, as well as its healthy action. The members are all dependent on each other; and each performing its proper function, the growth, strength, and unity of the whole are thereby promoted.

How blessed it would be for the church, if these God appointed principles were acted on by all the saints! If all were gathered around the common table of the Lord, with full liberty for the Spirit of God to minister by whom he will; then would the church know the presence of the Lord manifested in real, spiritual unity, power and blessing, as it is impossible to realize in sectarian fellowship.

Brethren, "the time is short." "The night is at hand." "Behold! the bridegroom cometh!" Oh! let not the Lord come and find us in systems that he will burn up in that day. 1 Cor. 3: 12–15. But whatever others may do, may we through grace be found "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." And remember that the Lord's last words to us were, "Surely, I come quickly." Then may our hearts reply, "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. 22: 20.

"BE YE ALSO READY."

Supposing a messenger, sent by the highest authority in the land, should go through our villages and towns proclaiming that all who should on a coming day be found fitted according to instructions given, should receive some high office, a position at once delightful to occupy, and every way calculated to promote the highest interests of the individual concerned; and that also, not only were provisions made that all the real sacrifices incurred by the necessary neglect of ordinary business, in securing the required fitness, should be made up manifold, but a heavy penalty should be incurred in case of a refusal, or neglect to comply with the conditions. What would be thought of the individual that would treat with indifference the whole matter, or that should defer the work of preparation until the very day they were to start for the place of examination?

Well, a proclamation has come to us from the King of Kings, the God of the universe, saying, that whosoever shall be found ready, according to his expressly recorded instructions, shall on the day in which he shall crown his only Son King of the whole world, be made co-heirs with him in that kingdom. And that all the sacrifices that shall be made in consequence of opposition from the present ruler of this world, shall be made up a hundred fold here, and eternal life added, in the kingdom coming.

Now the time being just at hand for that coming of the King, in what case does it find the world? Many, who profess, nevertheless, an attachment to the King, and his Son, still prefer to have them at a distance, and are so well pleased with Cæser and his rule, who gave Cæser his seat and power, that they see no necessity for the coming of the Son of God, to take the kingdom, and conclude that it is all a mistake, that he never will come.

Others, just as good, profess to think that he may come sometime, but, shutting their eyes to the signs given to encourage and cheer the hearts truly waiting for him, inquire, "Where are these signs of his coming? These things were just so in the days of our fathers."

Still, by the order of the King sounds out the word, "Behold, he cometh," and with it there comes to the ears of the world a lingering remembrance of having heard, in some former time, perhaps, "In such an hour as ye think not, I come;" and turning to these popular teachers they inquire, "Is it indeed so? does the end draw nigh? the fearful Judgment come?" And the answer comes, "Nay, ye know not the time; look not for his coming, it is a delusion. Ages of peace and safety succeed these times. We have preached and prayed for it, and shall we not have it? We have persuaded tens of thousands of our fellows to shed their blood, cutting off their chance of a future salvation, and they now wail in unending torments for it, and SHALL WE NOT HAVE IT? Besides, it is written, 'My kingdom is not of this world:' this is for us and Cæser, and by and by, when we can possibly stay here no longer, we expect our spirits to go away beyond the bounds of time and space, where it must be more favorable for the Lord to reign than it can possibly be for him here."

Thus the fear of impending judgment is driven from the hearts of both professor and unprofessor; and the eye is seen to sparkle anew as they go about, trusting for a longer time in which to indulge the lusts of the flesh, ere they are summoned to take a reluctant leave of all, and go, as they think, through the gates of death into the presence of Him whom they could not endure to have to come to them.

In this manner, then, do we find the "many" treating this wonderful proclamation of an offended, yet gracious Being, to his erring, lost creatures, while the "few," here and there a traveler, are fleeing worldly lusts, keeping their garments unspotted, forsaking all that they may be accounted worthy to be crowned joint heirs with Christ in the kingdom of God.

Reader, to which of these classes do you belong? Are you, too, hoping that the "time is prolonged"? Then read in that very desire your unfitness for the event. What if, while reading this, the Son of God should come, "like a thief" indeed, to you, because you trusted to false teachers? how could you meet him? What a position, then, do you occupy? There is nothing to which you can liken it, for your risks are the greatest possible. Eternity cannot all reveal them, for that will never end. What are you to do, then? Let me tell you what I truly believe. The call is as imperative to you as to Lot in Sodom,—"Up! get you out of this place, flee for your life. Look not behind you." Cast not a lingering look to the fashions, habits and associations that consume your time, engross your mind, and involve you in eternal ruin. Your name may be enrolled on church records; that cannot save you. You may be living as well as very many; that cannot save you.

With all diligence, then, seek a knowledge of God's requirements of you, obey him, secure an application of that blood that cleanseth from all sin, then shall you in truth "love" the appearing of the great King, and thus shall an abundant entrance be administered unto you, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

ESPECIAL PROVIDENCE OF GOD MANIFEST IN HIS CHURCH.

While it is generally admitted that the providence of God is manifest in the ordering and overruling of events in relation to the world, few, comparatively, see his especial providence in the events connected with his church. Now while it is a fact that Christ taught the direct providence of his Father in both cases (Matt. 5: 45; Luke 12: 24–27), yet on account of the union and oneness of believers with Christ, as the bridegroom and the bride, his especial care and providence should be seen. Thus he has taught us to recognize it. Luke 12: 7,—"But the very hairs of your head are all numbered." Matt. 28: 20,—"And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Now if the providence of God extends to the minutiæ or life, in reference to his people, surely the more prominent events of our history are under his direction. While I would not inculcate the idea that all which even good men may teach is in accordance with the will of God, or by the influence of the Holy Spirit (yet even that may be overruled to accomplish some of God's purposes in a way that we may not understand), yet I do inculcate the idea, and defend the position, that God does and has directed his people to teach and occupy positions that may appear paradoxical. Proof. The case of Abraham called to offer up his son Isaac as a burnt offering; and Jonah sent to preach to the Ninevites that in forty days Nineveh should be overthrown. Now worldly and unbelieving men might deny the direction of God in both these instances; because it might appear inconsistent and unreasonable to them. But God had a purpose to be accomplished which we may all understand.

Now let us apply the principle of the foregoing (i. e., the especial providence of God) in the history of the advent movement the past twenty-five or thirty years. Was it not by the especial providence of God that Bro. Miller, Bro. Himes, and a host of God's faithful ministers, were raised up to proclaim Christ's immediate coming, and by their instrumentality multitudes were converted and thousands of God's people made to rejoice in prospect of speedy redemption? Other circumstances and results, thus far, appear to be evidently by his direction. In the second chapter of the prophecy of Habakkuk, the prophet appears to occupy the position of a representative of those who would be called to perform a special and important work. As the apostle Peter has it, "Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister."—1 Pet. 1: 12. Thus when the time arrived indicated in the prophecy, the Holy Spirit stirred up Bro. Miller and other ministers to occupy this position on the watch tower, to receive the command from the Lord, "Write the vision and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." If this scripture has not had, at least, a partial fulfillment in the past history of the Advent movement, it would be difficult to discern the fulfillment of a large portion of the prophetic scriptures.

The apostle Paul, in Heb. 10: 35–38, evidently has his mind on the prophecy of Habakkuk, for his language is nearly the same; and he refers it to the coming of Christ. Therefore the vision refers to the coming of Christ. The prophet Isaiah evidently refers to the same subject in the twenty-ninth chapter tenth verse and onward, speaking of the treatment those will receive who seek for an understanding of the vision.

The large charts on which the vision of Daniel and St. John have been written, so that the subject might be presented to the eye at a glance, have fulfilled the command to "write the vision and make it plain upon tables." Then the prophet says, "For the vision is YET for an appointed time," evidently implying it will reach beyond the time that is specified on the tables. That little word yet has great significance in my mind, for it shows that God made provision for the failure in definite time that has been preached in the past. The parable of our Savior in Matt. 25 teaches a tarrying of the Bridegroom beyond the time in which he was expected to come. The same idea is taught by Paul in the tenth chapter of Heb., where we are exhorted not to cast away our "confidence, which has great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Paul's "little while," in which we shall need patience, corresponds to the prophet's "an appointed time" for the tarrying of the vision.

The above scriptures belong to God's tried and waiting church at the present time in a special manner; and I think we are to draw great consolation and encouragement from them.

We learn from the foregoing that the preaching of Christ's coming in A. D. 1843–4, that great movement, was by the especial providence of God; and his servants could not have done otherwise, and have been honest to their convictions of truth, to have refrained from preaching the coming of Christ at that time. God had a special purpose in causing the children of Israel to wander in that terrible wilderness for forty years; and it proved in the result that God intended the sifting out of the chaff from the wheat. But it was a terrible sifting. So before the church shall enter the heavenly Canaan, it may need a similar sifting, that the true may be made manifest from the false.

Then let us never murmur or complain of the way the Lord chooses for us to walk in. What if our good name and reputation must be laid aside? did not Moses esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt? Surely if we have no positions to take that bring reproach, would it not be well for us to examine our foundation and see if we are built on Christ.

Believing in and preaching a definite point of time for Christ to come, has been the head and front of our reproach in the past; yet I could not have done differently and been honest, with the light I supposed I had, without making it known. And I have a conscience void of offence in the matter. I now believe the church is about to emerge out of the wilderness of obscurity, and receive light that will shine brighter and brighter till we reach the heavenly Canaan. The Lord says he is going to make that proverb to cease, the saying "the days are prolonged and every vision faileth." Say unto them, "Thus saith the Lord, the days are at hand and the effect of every vision." Ezek. 12: 22, 23.

How plain it is that "in the first year of the reign of Cyrus king of Persia, ("That the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled." What word might be fulfilled? That recorded in Jer. 29: 10,—"For THUS SAITH THE LORD, that after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, IN CAUSING YOU TO RETURN TO THIS PLACE.") the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation"—for the return of the captive Jews from Babylon to Jerusalem, and the building of their city; thus fulfilling Dan. 9: 25. "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks," or 483 years. The Bible does not say from the going into effect of the commandment, but from the going forth, etc. Now who gave the commandment? Ans. THE LORD GOD OF HEAVEN. To whom? To Cyrus king of Persia. "That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built, and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid. . . . He shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the Lord of hosts." Did not the Lord give command to Artaxerxes to restore and build Jerusalem? If he did, where is the record of the facts? not in the Bible, surely. But we formerly supposed he did, because learned men said so, who dated it in the seventh year of his reign; and believing in that date for the going forth of the commandment, resulted in our disappointment in not seeing the Lord in '43 or '44.

But God has not left us in our trial and disappointment, but by his providence has brought us to see the true light for "the going forth of the commandment" to the birth of Christ, by his humble but honored instrument, Wm. C. Thurman. Therefore what has been dark and mysterious in reference to the passing of the time when we expected our Lord, is now made light and clear to our vision. Now, the dates appear to be all simple and harmonious, and we may surely "lift up our heads and look up, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh," and that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Yours in Christ,

A HINT TO TRACT DISTRIBUTORS.

Don't leave your tracts on door-steps, ring the bells, and walk off. If you do, in most cases your tracts will go into the house waste basket, possibly into the fire.

Don't give your tracts to servants and walk off. Most servants in these days are Romanists. They will only curse you and burn your tracts.

Don't leave tracts on profanity, drunkenness or other vices with families whose members you know to be eminently moral. They will be offended with your lack of discrimination, and throw the ill chosen tracts into the fire.

Don't leave awakening and warning tracts with christian families. They may not be angry with you, but they will feel that in bringing them such tracts you wasted your own time and somebody's money.

Select your tracts with discrimination. Learn by courteous inquiries all you can of the religious proclivities or prejudices of the families composing your district. Let your selections be appropriate, not so as to appear personal, but suited to the religious necessities of the parties. Before you start on your round pray for the divine blessing on yourself and on those whom you visit. Go into the houses of your district inquiring for the heads of the family. On your first call tell them what you are, what you intend doing, and ask permission to leave your tract weekly or monthly, as the case may be. Make a few inquiries respecting their place of worship. If they attend nowhere, tell them how pleasant a thing it is to be a regular attendant on a place of worship, and invite them to church. Don't reprove or say hard things. People are to be attracted, not whipped, to the cross.

In your subsequent calls talk about the tract previously left. Make it the starting point of a faithful but kind religious conversation. Follow up this plan with a clearly defined purpose to lead every soul in your district to Christ, and you will soon begin to reap the fruits of your labors.

I respectfully but earnestly desire all tract distributors when they see the results of their work to report the facts to the subscriber.

D. WISE, Cor. Sec. Tract Society.

TARES.

The enemy of all good is very cunning in his plans to introduce tares among the wheat. He watches for his opportunity. He knows man's weak points,—his natural tastes and appetites, and knows how to take advantage of these.

"Already do we see the old serpent the devil, here and there in these new settlements, in the light, fascinating, popular literature, the mixed publications. Harper, Godey, Peterson, Arthur, the Swedenborgian, and other satanic transformations. These serpents in the grass—sugar-coated poisons—are doing a death-work! Novel-readings, romances, sickly, sentimental love-stories, fashionable adornments in dress, foolish talking and jesting, go hand in hand. What next? 'On with the dance, let joy be unconfined!'

Books and papers have souls: they think, speak and act, for evil or for good. A bad book or paper is as dangerous as a bad man or a bad woman, a bad boy or a bad girl. Reading a bad book is keeping bad company, and reading a good book is keeping good company. Every book, paper, has a soul breathing a spirit good or bad. It is the soul of its author, and when spread over the pages of the book, that soul acts upon its reader as truly as when acting directly.

Several years ago, we were persuaded to examine (in an evil hour) the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg, George Bush, and several other apostles of the 'New Church'; and we fear that we shall never, while we live, be able to rid ourself entirely of their injurious effects. A more subtle mixture of truth and error was never concocted. We consider it far more dangerous than open infidelity. God be praised for leading us to see the falsity of their plausible but soul-stirring tenets, and to renounce them before it was too late to obtain mercy and forgiveness through the vicarious atonement of the Savior which they deny. In the Sabbath School library, and in the books purchased for children, we furnish them with the means of cultivating a taste for novel-reading, and so prepare them greedily to devour whatever fictitious trash may fall in their way, and then waste our breath in deploring their exposure to a corrupting literature. Parents and teachers seem not to know that the thirst for novel-reading is cultivated by novel-reading; or they seem not to know that reading fiction, with a little sprinkling of religion, prepares children to love and read fiction, though it may have a sprinkling of irreligion.

There is that in the character of fictitious writings, properly called novels, whether the subject be secular or religious, which forms a taste different from historical, didactic, or any of the other classes of writing; and this taste is as readily formed by indulging the child in religious novels in younger years, as if he were supplied with secular novels. By our religious machinery the child is piously trained to seek his gratifications of mind among elements of grossest corruption. If the enemy of all good should set himself to devise a scheme to take children out of religious families, and from them to rear a supply of victims of this form of ruin, he could, with all his cunning, hardly contrive a better way to avoid giving alarm and to secure the result. If it be agreed that religious novels are a source of mischief, we shall find ample work in clearing out the old leaven. Our Sabbath School libraries, and our book stores, are full of these introductions to the 'Mysteries of Paris,' and, even our editors should be called to use their puffing apparatus with a little more caution.

Parent, when you place novels or fictitious writings, in the form of a book or paper, in the hands of your child, for the purpose of cultivating a taste for reading, you do your child an irreparable injury—you peril the soul forever."

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—I thank you for your sympathy and prayers. I believe God will hear and answer your prayers, for I find the tide of persecution is turning, and I am finding friends among those who were enemies. The Lord is able to turn enemies to friends. I have foes, because I take up such unpopular views. First, I hold to the soon coming of Jesus, and will stick to it, when I ought to know better after twenty-three years' experience, and it is no nearer than it was before. But we don't look through the same glasses. I can see it is twenty-three years nearer; so this is the difference. Praise the Lord.

The next unpopular theme is, the rights of my own sex. I am told women ought to keep silent, and ask their husbands at home. How is it with those whose husbands are wicked and lie at home drunk while their wives go to church, and when they come home beat and kick them about like old shoes, and swear at them, and call them bad names? Did Paul mean these women too? Because if these women should ask their husbands, they would not learn much about the church. But then how about those who have no husbands? But they say Paul would not suffer a woman to speak; yet this same Paul said, "I commend unto you Phebe, a servant of the church." You see the argument is lame. So I will talk on till Paul tells me to stop.

But another unpopular theme is, the black man has brains as well as the white man. Now my experience has been this, that where a colored child can be taken young, and educated, he learns faster and is more apt than a white child, and can remember better. Being satisfied in my own mind of this, I labor among them, in preference to laboring among the Irish whites. But all this is unpopular.

I praise the Lord I have reached the place where I am willing to be anything or nothing, so I can honor my Master and do good to m fellow creatures. But there is some comfort in all this. The other day we were out visiting. We found an old colored woman a hundred and seven years old; and to hear this old saint tell how good the Lord had been to her in all those years, it made me think of the apostles and those ancient ones that the Lord had taken care of. When the riot was here, the mob had the rope around her neck three times to hang her, and she begged of them not to take her life. Then they gave her so many minutes to get out of the way, and she was very lame, and could hardly walk. But the Lord helped her, and she made her escape, but had to leave all behind. She had her room furnished quite comfortably, but now has nothing but what her christian friends choose to give her. She is happy, and so thankful for our visit. She kissed our hands and cried tears of joy, and thanked God that the white ladies had called to see her. I intend the next time I call on her to see if she remembers the dark day of 1780. She remembers General Washington, and many things about the Revolutionary war, which were very interesting to us.

So we go among the old and the young, trying to do something in the name of our Master. Pray for me. ANNIE E. SMITH.

No. 128 East 27th St., New York.

From Sr. C. A. Hicks.

BRO. GRANT:—What a blessed hope is ours! so soon to see Jesus, that dear loving One who has gently led us through all these years of affliction, to meet our friends whom we have laid in the grave to rest, to be freed from disease and the long train of ills inherited by frail mortality, and to celebrate the great jubilee of jubilees in the promised land.

I believe the last message has begun to sound, and it will wax louder and louder, until a people have been called out to meet the Bridegroom. Then, watchman, haste with it o'er hill and dale, to the comfort of God's little ones and the conversion of sinners; for "blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." And, ye stewards of the Lord's money, put forth an earnest effort to help roll on the car of salvation. Lay aside those meats and drinks which only injure your bodies, and all needless adornments, and bring all into the treasury of the Lord, and you shall receive in return for your perishable gold a thousand fold of glory in this life, and in the world to come a treasure that is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

And, ye little ones, despise not your mission because it is small. All can do something. You have a work that no other can do. And all alike shall hear the sweet "well done" from Jesus' lips; the high and low, the rich and poor, the bond and free. Praise God for the gospel plan, which brings all on a level, a level of purity and holiness. "The vulture's eye hath not seen it, nor the lion's whelp trodden it." Yours looking for the return of Jesus in '68. CELIA A. HICKS.

BRO. GRANT:—The Crisis is all the Bible preaching we have, and we cannot well do without it. We have various denominations around us, but only a very few who are looking for the soon coming of the Just One. I believe there is but one outside of our family who believes in the doctrines of the Crisis. We are poor in this world's goods, and not able to hire any one to preach to us; but if any of the preaching brethren are coming this way, we should be glad to have them stop and give us a few words of encouragement. Call on E. D. Fowler, only a few rods from the Liberty Post Office and Stage house. Yours in hope, L. K. FOWLER.

WESTON. Died, suddenly, in Yarmouth, Me., Nov. 24th, 1865, after a few hours of extreme suffering, caused by a fall, Bro. Frank N. Weston, aged twenty-one years, five months.

Although so unexpectedly called to leave us, Bro. Frank was fully prepared for this afflictive event. He was naturally one of the most amiable, but grace had made him a christian. His character and walk were blameless, and now he sweetly sleeps in Jesus, leaving his heart-stricken father and mother to weep over the loss of their last child. But they weep not alone. All who knew him mourn; for none knew him but to love him. May this deep affliction work for our good.

With sad heart, dear Frank, we lay thee
In the grave so dark and drear;
But we hope ere long to greet thee,
When the Savior shall appear.

That will be a blessed meeting,
Over on the other shore;
No more sudden death nor weeping,—
God be praised forevermore.

HUTCHINS. Fell asleep in hope of eternal life, Nov. 15th, 1865, Sister Cynthia Hutchins, wife of Bro. James Hutchins, of Portland, Me., aged sixty-eight years.

Sister H. was a lover of the Lord, and for many years maintained a christian walk. She was a kind and faithful wife, an affectionate mother, and a bright ornament in the church of Christ. Her end was peace, and she rests in hope. Much shall we all miss her. May great grace rest upon her aged companion, and upon the children, to sustain and comfort them in this hour of deep distress and affliction. Lord, hasten the day when in Eden's fair clime we shall meet the good of all ages, and sing the song of victory. R. R. YORK.

HITCHCOCK. Died in Palmer, Mass., Sept. 29th, 1865, Mrs. Abigail B. Hitchcock, aged seventy-eight years.

She was a believer in Christ formerly, but the last twenty years enjoyed the Advent faith, and looked for the glorious appearing of Christ's soon coming. She left an aged husband and six children to mourn her loss. CHARLES MERRIAM.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 29. Richmond correspondence of the 28th says Gen. Grant was heartily welcomed to that city by the military authorities. He freely expressed his opinion while there regarding Mexican affairs. He said emphatically that the advent of Maximilian to the pretended throne of Mexico was a part of the rebellion, and his immediate expulsion should be a part of its history. France did not ask our consent to establish a throne in Mexico, and we should not consult that power in re-establishing the Republic. He said France had no right to interfere in the question, but if she would involve herself in a war with us on this point, now is the time to have it, while our army and navy are yet organized.

A Havana letter says news from Venezuela states that a party headed by Gen. Miranda in Truxillo was entirely destroyed in a battle. The General was left dead on the field.

The Ex-Emperor Soulouque, of Hayti, had arrived at Santiago De Cuba, en route to St. Thomas, having been expelled from Jamaica.

Cape Haytien had been bombarded by two English war vessels and reduced to ashes. Geffrard's troops are in possession of the ruins. Many of the rebels perished and the rest fled. The insurrection in Hayti has terminated.

Under orders from Spain all negroes landed from slavers are to be returned to Africa.

Official news from El Paso has been received this evening by Mr. Romero, the Mexican Minister, that the recent movements of the National forces in Mexico have compelled the French forces at Chihuahua to evacuate that city and State and withdraw to Durango.

On the 25th of October the evacuation began, and four days later there was not a single French soldier left in Chihuahua. President Juarez writes on the 31 inst. that he is about leaving El Paso for the city of Chihuahua to reconstruct the National Government. This is thought to be a great success for the Republican cause of Mexico, since the French admit their inability to hold their conquered ground.

An official telegram from Nevada says that on the 17th inst. Lieut. Osmar, with sixty California volunteers and a howitzer, attacked a large band of Indians who had fortified themselves in the black mountains, about 100 miles northwest of Dungeler, in the northerly part of the State of Nevada. During the engagement one volunteer was killed and two wounded. Of the Indians 120 were killed, but few escaping. All their horses, arms and ammunition were captured. This was the band which, three weeks ago, robbed a train and killed six teamsters, and afterward obliged thirty armed men who were scouting after them to retire after an unsuccessful engagement.

A letter from London has the following concerning the prospects of Fenianism in Ireland:

"It may be easy to take Canada, though it did not seem so in 1837–8. It may be easy to sell bonds of the Irish Republic. It may not be difficult, when two or three other things have been done, to fit out privateers to prey on British commerce; but to wrest Ireland from the grasp of England is quite another affair, and a much more serious one than some people seem to imagine. Here, in London, it seems nothing short of madness to attempt, or even to propose to attempt it."

New York, Dec. 2. A fire early this morning, on State and Bridge streets, destroyed three large bonded warehouses, together with 7000 bales of cotton and other merchandise. The buildings were six stories, and are in complete ruins. It is reported that seven or eight firemen were killed by the falling walls. Loss estimated at nearly $2,000,000.

THE JERSEY FLYING MACHINE.—A work is now proceeding at Hoboken, New Jersey, under directions of the government, which excites attention from its curiosity as well as scientific interest. It is the construction of a flying machine, which is intended to be independent of the wind for its propulsion. The propelling power, says the Army Journal, is gained by the rapid revolution of large, spiral fans, just as a propelling steamship is urged through the waters by the screw. The idea is not by any means new, but has many times been proposed, though we do not know that it has been put in practice on a large scale. The working principle is already exhibited in the form of a little toy, simple in construction, and of which there are thousands in use.

The government was induced to enter a field which has hitherto been occupied chiefly by enthusiasts, through the representations of the late lamented Gen. O. M. Mitchell. He mounted a fan upon a vertical pole, and experimentally determined what size of blad[illegible] and what speed of revolution [illegible] necessary to raise a six-ton load, which is to be the weight of the projected machine. It is canoe-shaped, and built of copper, with iron ribs. An engine is placed in the centre, with sufficient power to work a screw fan with twenty foot blades. There are four of these fans connected with the engine—one below, one above the canoe, and one at each end. The upper and lower fans are worked together to produce an ascent, and the terminal fans are made to revolve together, or separately, in the same directions, for the purpose of propelling the craft horizontally. The officer in superintendence hopes to have his task completed in a month.

☞ Last year nine thousand new buildings were put up in Chicago. Six of them cost $100,000 each; forty others cost $30,000 each; and eight hundred were worth $1000 each. The total amount of capital employed in building during the year was $6,000,000. The number of new churches was seven; of schools, two; of public halls, four.

☞ Van Amburgh, the celebrated lion tamer, died in Philadelphia last Wednesday very suddenly. He was a native of New York State.

Help, Brethren!

The church in Biddeford, Me., believing in the speedy advent of our Savior, and having struggled hard to sustain a meeting, so that the people shall hear the doctrine of Jesus' second advent, have decided to build them a house for that purpose, as they cannot sustain their meetings and pay the amount of rent which they will have to pay the coming year, all of them being poor, and would thankfully receive any assistance which any one would feel a privilege to render. Now, dear brethren, you who can, help this church, for they are worthy of your assistance.

For the World's Crisis.

ESPECIAL PROVIDENCE OF GOD MANIFEST IN HIS CHURCH.

While it is generally admitted that the providence of God is manifest in the ordering and overruling of events in relation to the world, few, comparatively, see his especial providence in the events connected with his church. Now while it is a fact that Christ taught the direct providence of his Father in both cases (Matt. 5 : 45 ; Luke 12 : 24–27), yet on account of the union and oneness of believers with Christ, as the bridegroom and the bride, his especial care and providence should be seen. Thus he has taught us to recognize it. Luke 12 : 7,—"But the very hairs of your head are all numbered." Matt. 28 : 20,—"And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Now if the providence of God extends to the minutiæ or life, in reference to his people, surely the more prominent events of our history are under his direction. While I would not inculcate the idea that all which even good men may teach is in accordance with the will of God, or by the influence of the Holy Spirit (yet even that may be overruled to accomplish some of God's purposes in a way that we may not understand), yet I do inculcate the idea, and defend the position, that God does and has directed his people to teach and occupy positions that may appear paradoxical. Proof. The case of Abraham called to offer up his son Isaac as a burnt offering; and Jonah sent to preach to the Ninevites that in forty days Nineveh should be overthrown. Now worldly and unbelieving men might deny the direction of God in both these instances; because it might appear inconsistent and unreasonable to them. But God had a purpose to be accomplished which we may all understand.

Now let us apply the principle of the foregoing (i. e., the especial providence of God) in the history of the advent movement the past twenty-five or thirty years. Was it not by the especial providence of God that Bro. Miller, Bro. Himes, and a host of God's faithful ministers, were raised up to proclaim Christ's immediate coming, and by their instrumentality multitudes were converted and thousands of God's people made to rejoice in prospect of speedy redemption? Other circumstances and results, thus far, appear to be evidently by his direction. In the second chapter of the prophecy of Habakkuk, the prophet appears to occupy the position of a representative of those who would be called to perform a special and important work. As the apostle Peter has it, "Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister."—1 Pet. 1 : 12. Thus when the time arrived indicated in the prophecy, the Holy Spirit stirred up Bro. Miller and other ministers to occupy this position on the watch tower, to receive the command from the Lord, "Write the vision and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." If this scripture has not had, at least, a partial fulfillment in the past history of the Advent movement, it would be difficult to discern the fulfillment of a large portion of the prophetic scriptures.

The apostle Paul, in Heb. 10 : 35–38, evidently has his mind on the prophecy of Habakkuk, for his language is nearly the same; and he refers it to the coming of Christ. Therefore the vision refers to the coming of Christ. The prophet Isaiah evidently refers to the same subject in the twenty-ninth chapter tenth verse and onward, speaking of the treatment those will receive who seek for an understanding of the vision.

The large charts on which the vision of Daniel and St. John have been written, so that the subject might be presented to the eye at a glance, have fulfilled the command to "write the vision and make it plain upon tables." Then the prophet says, "For the vision is YET for an appointed time," evidently implying it will reach beyond the time that is specified on the tables. That little word yet has great significance in my mind, for it shows that God made provision for the failure in definite time that has been preached in the past. The parable of our Savior in Matt. 25 teaches a tarrying of the Bridegroom beyond the time in which he was expected to come. The same idea is taught by Paul in the tenth chapter of Heb., where we are exhorted not to cast away our "confidence, which has great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Paul's "little while," in which we shall need patience, corresponds to the prophet's "an appointed time" for the tarrying of the vision.

The above scriptures belong to God's tried and waiting church at the present time in a special manner; and I think we are to draw great consolation and encouragement from them.

We learn from the foregoing that the preaching of Christ's coming in A. D. 1843–4, that great movement, was by the especial providence of God; and his servants could not have done otherwise, and have been honest to their convictions of truth, to have refrained from preaching the coming of Christ at that time. God had a special purpose in causing the children of Israel to wander in that terrible wilderness for forty years; and it proved in the result that God intended the sifting out of the chaff from the wheat. But it was a terrible sifting. So before the church shall enter the heavenly Canaan, it may need a similar sifting, that the true may be made manifest from the false.

Then let us never murmur or complain of the way the Lord chooses for us to walk in. What if our good name and reputation must be laid aside? did not Moses esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt? Surely if we have no positions to take that bring reproach, would it not be well for us to examine our foundation and see if we are built on Christ.

Believing in and preaching a definite point of time for Christ to come, has been the head and front of our reproach in the past; yet I could not have done differently and been honest, with the light I supposed I had, without making it known. And I have a conscience void of offence in the matter. I now believe the church is about to emerge out of the wilderness of obscurity, and receive light that will shine brighter and brighter till we reach the heavenly Canaan. The Lord says he is going to make that proverb to cease, the saying "the days are prolonged and every vision faileth." Say unto them, "Thus saith the Lord, the days are at hand and the effect of every vision." Ezek. 12 : 22, 23.

How plain it is that "in the first year of the reign of Cyrus king of Persia, ("That the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled." What word might be fulfilled? That recorded in Jer. 29 : 10,—"For THUS SAITH THE LORD, that after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, IN CAUSING YOU TO RETURN TO THIS PLACE.") the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation"—for the return of the captive Jews from Babylon to Jerusalem, and the building of their city; thus fulfilling Dan. 9 : 25. "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks," or 483 years. The Bible does not say from the going into effect of the commandment, but from the going forth, etc. Now who gave the commandment? Ans. THE LORD GOD OF HEAVEN. To whom? To Cyrus king of Persia. "That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built, and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid. . . . He shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the Lord of hosts." Did not the Lord give command to Artaxerxes to restore and build Jerusalem? If he did, where is the record of the facts? not in the Bible, surely. But we formerly supposed he did, because learned men said so, who dated it in the seventh year of his reign; and believing in that date for the going forth of the commandment, resulted in our disappointment in not seeing the Lord in '43 or '44.

But God has not left us in our trial and disappointment, but by his providence has brought us to see the true light for "the going forth of the commandment" to the birth of Christ, by his humble but honored instrument, Wm. C. Thurman. Therefore what has been dark and mysterious in reference to the passing of the time when we expected our Lord, is now made light and clear to our vision. Now, the dates appear to be all simple and harmonious, and we may surely "lift up our heads and look up, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh," and that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Yours in Christ,

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

A HINT TO TRACT DISTRIBUTORS.

Don't leave your tracts on door-steps, ring the bells, and walk off. If you do, in most cases your tracts will go into the house waste basket, possibly into the fire.

Don't give your tracts to servants and walk off. Most servants in these days are Romanists. They will only curse you and burn your tracts.

Don't leave tracts on profanity, drunkenness or other vices with families whose members you know to be eminently moral. They will be offended with your lack of discrimination, and throw the ill chosen tracts into the fire.

Don't leave awakening and warning tracts with christian families. They may not be angry with you, but they will feel that in bringing them such tracts you wasted your own time and somebody's money.

Select your tracts with discrimination. Learn by courteous inquiries all you can of the religious proclivities or prejudices of the families composing your district. Let your selections be appropriate, not so as to appear personal, but suited to the religious necessities of the parties. Before you start on your round pray for the divine blessing on yourself and on those whom you visit. Go into the houses of your district inquiring for the heads of the family. On your first call tell them what you are, what you intend doing, and ask permission to leave your tract weekly or monthly, as the case may be. Make a few inquiries respecting their place of worship. If they attend nowhere, tell them how pleasant a thing it is to be a regular attendant on a place of worship, and invite them to church. Don't reprove or say hard things. People are to be attracted, not whipped, to the cross.

In your subsequent calls talk about the tract previously left. Make it the starting point of a faithful but kind religious conversation. Follow up this plan with a clearly defined purpose to lead every soul in your district to Christ, and you will soon begin to reap the fruits of your labors.

I respectfully but earnestly desire all tract distributors when they see the results of their work to report the facts to the subscriber.

D. WISE, Cor. Sec. Tract Society.

TARES.

The enemy of all good is very cunning in his plans to introduce tares among the wheat. He watches for his opportunity. He knows man's weak points,—his natural tastes and appetites, and knows how to take advantage of these.

"Already do we see the old serpent the devil, here and there in these new settlements, in the light, fascinating, popular literature, the mixed publications. Harper, Godey, Peterson, Arthur, the Swedenborgian, and other satanic transformations. These serpents in the grass—sugar-coated poisons—are doing a death-work! Novel-readings, romances, sickly, sentimental love-stories, fashionable adornments in dress, foolish talking and jesting, go hand in hand. What next? 'On with the dance, let joy be unconfined!'

Books and papers have souls: they think, speak and act, for evil or for good. A bad book or paper is as dangerous as a bad man or a bad woman, a bad boy or a bad girl. Reading a bad book is keeping bad company, and reading a good book is keeping good company. Every book, paper, has a soul breathing a spirit good or bad. It is the soul of its author, and when spread over the pages of the book, that soul acts upon its reader as truly as when acting directly.

Several years ago, we were persuaded to examine (in an evil hour) the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg, George Bush, and several other apostles of the 'New Church'; and we fear that we shall never, while we live, be able to rid ourself entirely of their injurious effects. A more subtle mixture of truth and error was never concocted. We consider it far more dangerous than open infidelity. God be praised for leading us to see the falsity of their plausible but soul-stirring tenets, and to renounce them before it was too late to obtain mercy and forgiveness through the vicarious atonement of the Savior which they deny. In the Sabbath School library, and in the books purchased for children, we furnish them with the means of cultivating a taste for novel-reading, and so prepare them greedily to devour whatever fictitious trash may fall in their way, and then waste our breath in deploring their exposure to a corrupting literature. Parents and teachers seem not to know that the thirst for novel-reading is cultivated by novel-reading; or they seem not to know that reading fiction, with a little sprinkling of religion, prepares children to love and read fiction, though it may have a sprinkling of irreligion.

There is that in the character of fictitious writings, properly called novels, whether the subject be secular or religious, which forms a taste different from historical, didactic, or any of the other classes of writing; and this taste is as readily formed by indulging the child in religious novels in younger years, as if he were supplied with secular novels. By our religious machinery the child is piously trained to seek his gratifications of mind among elements of grossest corruption. If the enemy of all good should set himself to devise a scheme to take children out of religious families, and from them to rear a supply of victims of this form of ruin, he could, with all his cunning, hardly contrive a better way to avoid giving alarm and to secure the result. If it be agreed that religious novels are a source of mischief, we shall find ample work in clearing out the old leaven. Our Sabbath School libraries, and our book stores, are full of these introductions to the 'Mysteries of Paris,' and, even our editors should be called to use their puffing apparatus with a little more caution.

Parent, when you place novels or fictitious writings, in the form of a book or paper, in the hands of your child, for the purpose of cultivating a taste for reading, you do your child an irreparable injury—you peril the soul forever."

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—I thank you for your sympathy and prayers. I believe God will hear and answer your prayers, for I find the tide of persecution is turning, and I am finding friends among those who were enemies. The Lord is able to turn enemies to friends. I have foes, because I take up such unpopular views. First, I hold to the soon coming of Jesus, and will stick to it, when I ought to know better after twenty-three years' experience, and it is no nearer than it was before. But we don't look through the same glasses. I can see it is twenty-three years nearer; so this is the difference. Praise the Lord.

The next unpopular theme is, the rights of my own sex. I am told women ought to keep silent, and ask their husbands at home. How is it with those whose husbands are wicked and lie at home drunk while their wives go to church, and when they come home beat and kick them about like old shoes, and swear at them, and call them bad names? Did Paul mean these women too? Because if these women should ask their husbands, they would not learn much about the church. But then how about those who have no husbands? But they say Paul would not suffer a woman to speak; yet this same Paul said, "I commend unto you Phebe, a servant of the church." You see the argument is lame. So I will talk on till Paul tells me to stop.

But another unpopular theme is, the black man has brains as well as the white man. Now my experience has been this, that where a colored child can be taken young, and educated, he learns faster and is more apt than a white child, and can remember better. Being satisfied in my own mind of this, I labor among them, in preference to laboring among the Irish whites. But all this is unpopular.

I praise the Lord I have reached the place where I am willing to be anything or nothing, so I can honor my Master and do good to my fellow creatures. But there is some comfort in all this. The other day we were out visiting. We found an old colored woman a hundred and seven years old; and to hear this old saint tell how good the Lord had been to her in all those years, it made me think of the apostles and those ancient ones that the Lord had taken care of. When the riot was here, the mob had the rope around her neck three times to hang her, and she begged of them not to take her life. Then they gave her so many minutes to get out of the way, and she was very lame, and could hardly walk. But the Lord helped her, and she made her escape, but had to leave all behind. She had her room furnished quite comfortably, but now has nothing but what her christian friends choose to give her. She is happy, and so thankful for our visit. She kissed our hands and cried tears of joy, and thanked God that the white ladies had called to see her. I intend the next time I call on her to see if she remembers the dark day of 1780. She remembers General Washington, and many things about the Revolutionary war, which were very interesting to us.

So we go among the old and the young, trying to do something in the name of our Master. Pray for me. ANNIE E. SMITH.

No. 128 East 27th St., New York.

From Sr. C. A. Hicks.

BRO. GRANT:—What a blessed hope is ours! so soon to see Jesus, that dear loving One who has gently led us through all these years of affliction, to meet our friends whom we have laid in the grave to rest, to be freed from disease and the long train of ills inherited by frail mortality, and to celebrate the great jubilee of jubilees in the promised land.

I believe the last message has begun to sound, and it will wax louder and louder, until a people have been called out to meet the Bridegroom. Then, watchman, haste with it o'er hill and dale, to the comfort of God's little ones and the conversion of sinners; for "blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." And, ye stewards of the Lord's money, put forth an earnest effort to help roll on the car of salvation. Lay aside those meats and drinks which only injure your bodies, and all needless adornments, and bring all into the treasury of the Lord, and you shall receive in return for your perishable gold a thousand fold of glory in this life, and in the world to come a treasure that is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

And, ye little ones, despise not your mission because it is small. All can do something. You have a work that no other can do. And all alike shall hear the sweet "well done" from Jesus' lips; the high and low, the rich and poor, the bond and free. Praise God for the gospel plan, which brings all on a level, a level of purity and holiness. "The vulture's eye hath not seen it, nor the lion's whelp trodden it." Yours looking for the return of Jesus in '68. CELIA A. HICKS.

BRO. GRANT:—The Crisis is all the Bible preaching we have, and we cannot well do without it. We have various denominations around us, but only a very few who are looking for the soon coming of the Just One. I believe there is but one outside of our family who believes in the doctrines of the Crisis. We are poor in this world's goods, and not able to hire any one to preach to us; but if any of the preaching brethren are coming this way, we should be glad to have them stop and give us a few words of encouragement. Call on E. D. Fowler, only a few rods from the Liberty Post Office and Stage house. Yours in hope, L. K. FOWLER.

WESTON. Died, suddenly, in Yarmouth, Me., Nov. 24th, 1865, after a few hours of extreme suffering, caused by a fall, Bro. Frank N. Weston, aged twenty-one years, five months.

Although so unexpectedly called to leave us, Bro. Frank was fully prepared for this afflictive event. He was naturally one of the most amiable, but grace had made him a christian. His character and walk were blameless, and now he sweetly sleeps in Jesus, leaving his heart-stricken father and mother to weep over the loss of their last child. But they weep not alone. All who knew him mourn; for none knew him but to love him. May this deep affliction work for our good.

> With sad heart, dear Frank, we lay thee
> In the grave so dark and drear;
> But we hope ere long to greet thee,
> When the Savior shall appear.
>
> That will be a blessed meeting,
> Over on the other shore;
> No more sudden death nor weeping,—
> God be praised forevermore.

HUTCHINS. Fell asleep in hope of eternal life, Nov. 15th, 1865, Sister Cynthia Hutchins, wife of Bro. James Hutchins, of Portland, Me., aged sixty-eight years.

Sister H. was a lover of the Lord, and for many years maintained a christian walk. She was a kind and faithful wife, an affectionate mother, and a bright ornament in the church of Christ. Her end was peace, and she rests in hope. Much shall we all miss her. May great grace rest upon her aged companion, and upon the children, to sustain and comfort them in this hour of deep distress and affliction. Lord, hasten the day when in Eden's fair clime we shall meet the good of all ages, and sing the song of victory. R. R. YORK.

HITCHCOCK. Died in Palmer, Mass. Sept. 29th, 1865, Mrs. Abigail B. Hitchcock, aged seventy-eight years.

She was a believer in Christ formerly, but the last twenty years enjoyed the Advent faith, and looked for the glorious appearing of Christ's soon coming. She left an aged husband and six children to mourn her loss. CHARLES MERRIAM.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 29. Richmond correspondence of the 28th says Gen. Grant was heartily welcomed to that city by the military authorities. He freely expressed his opinion while there regarding Mexican affairs. He said emphatically that the advent of Maximilian to the pretended throne of Mexico was a part of the rebellion, and his immediate expulsion should be a part of its history. France did not ask our consent to establish a throne in Mexico, and we should not consult that power in re-establishing the Republic. He said France had no right to interfere in the question, but if she would involve herself in a war with us on this point, now is the time to have it, while our army and navy are yet organized.

A Havana letter says news from Venezuela states that a party headed by Gen. Miranda in Truxillo was entirely destroyed in a battle. The General was left dead on the field.

The Ex-Emperor Soulouque, of Hayti, had arrived at Santiago De Cuba, en route to St. Thomas, having been expelled from Jamaica.

Cape Haytien had been bombarded by two English war vessels and reduced to ashes. Geffrard's troops are in possession of the ruins. Many of the rebels perished and the rest fled. The insurrection in Hayti has terminated.

Under orders from Spain all negroes landed as slavers are to be returned to Africa.

Official news from El Paso has been received this evening by Mr. Romero, the Mexican Minister, that the recent movements of the National forces in Mexico have compelled the French forces at Chihuahua to evacuate that city and State and withdraw to Durango.

On the 25th of October the evacuation began, and four days later there was not a single French soldier left in Chihuahua. President Juarez writes on the 31 inst. that he is about leaving El Paso for the city of Chihuahua to reconstruct the National Government. This is thought to be a great success for the Republican cause of Mexico, since the French admit their inability to hold their conquered ground.

An official telegram from Nevada says that on the 17th inst. Lieut. Osmar, with sixty California volunteers and a howitzer, attacked a large band of Indians who had fortified themselves in the black mountains, about 100 miles northwest of Dungeler, in the northerly part of the State of Nevada. During the engagement one volunteer was killed and two wounded. Of the Indians 120 were killed, but few escaping. All their horses, arms and ammunition were captured. This was the band which, three weeks ago, robbed a train and killed six teamsters, and afterward obliged thirty armed men who were scouting after them to retire after an unsuccessful engagement.

A letter from London has the following concerning the prospects of Fenianism in Ireland:

"It may be easy to take Canada, though it did not seem so in 1837–8. It may be easy to sell bonds of the Irish Republic. It may not be difficult, when two or three other things have been done, to fit out privateers to prey on British commerce; but to wrest Ireland from the grasp of England is quite another affair, and a much more serious one than some people seem to imagine. Here, in London, it seems nothing short of madness to attempt, or even to propose to attempt it."

New York, Dec. 2. A fire early this morning, on State and Bridge streets, destroyed three large bonded warehouses, together with 7000 bales of cotton and other merchandise. The buildings were six stories, and are in complete ruins. It is reported that seven or eight firemen were killed by the falling walls. Loss estimated at nearly $2,000,000.

THE JERSEY FLYING MACHINE.—A work is now proceeding at Hoboken, New Jersey, under directions of the government, which excites attention from its curiosity as well as scientific interest. It is the construction of a flying machine, which is intended to be independent of the wind for its propulsion. The propelling power, says the Army Journal, is gained by the rapid revolution of large, spiral fans, just as a propelling steamship is urged through the waters by the screw. The idea is not by any means new, but has many times been proposed, though we do not know that it has been put in practice on a large scale. The working principle is already exhibited in the form of a little toy, simple in construction, and of which there are thousands in use.

The government was induced to enter a field which has hitherto been occupied chiefly by enthusiasts, through the representations of the late lamented Gen. O. M. Mitchell. He mounted a fan upon a vertical pole, and experimentally determined what size of blade, and what speed of revolution were necessary to raise a six-ton load, which is to be the weight of the projected machine. It is canoe-shaped, and built of copper, with iron ribs. An engine is placed in the centre, with sufficient power to work a screw fan with twenty foot blades. There are four of these fans connected with the engine—one below, one above the canoe, and one at each end. The upper and lower fans are worked together to produce an ascent, and the terminal fans are made to revolve together, or separately, in the same directions, for the purpose of propelling the craft horizontally. The officer in superintendence hopes to have his task completed in a month.

☞ Last year nine thousand new buildings were put up in Chicago. Six of them cost $100,000 each; forty others cost $30,000 each; and eight hundred were worth $1000 each. The total amount of capital employed in building during the year was $6,000,000. The number of new churches was seven; of schools, two; of public halls, four.

☞ Van Amburgh, the celebrated lion tamer, died in Philadelphia last Wednesday very suddenly. He was a native of New York State.

Help, Brethren!

The church in Biddeford, Me., believing in the speedy advent of our Savior, and having struggled hard to sustain a meeting, so that the people shall hear the doctrine of Jesus' second advent, have decided to build them a house for that purpose, as they cannot sustain their meetings and pay the amount of rent which they will have to pay the coming year, all of them being poor, and would thankfully receive any assistance which any one would feel a privilege to render. Now, dear brethren, you who can, help this church, for they are worthy of your assistance.

For the World's Crisis.

WHEN JESUS COMES.

AIR.—"Love at Home."

There's a home for all the blest
When Jesus comes;
Where the weary ones shall rest,
When Jesus comes.
In that land of glory bright,
Saints shall walk with him in white,
When Jesus comes.

Signs are seen on every hand,
Jesus soon will come;
Signs in heaven, on sea and land,
Jesus soon will come.
Nations angry now appear,
Men's hearts failing them for fear,
For the things they see and hear;
Jesus soon will come.

All that sleep beneath the sod,
When Jesus comes,
Will awake to meet their God
When Jesus comes.
All our friends we then shall meet,
All the faithful ones we'll greet,
At the lowly Savior's feet,
When Jesus comes.

Then with all the ransomed throng,
When Jesus comes,
We will sing redemption's song,
When Jesus comes.
Glory be to Jesus' name!
Glory to the Lamb once slain!
He has come on earth to reign,
Glory to the Lamb!

Concord, N. H. MARY V. SALTMARSH.

For the World's Crisis.

A TREASURE TO BE DESIRED.

"Thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an HEIR OF GOD THROUGH CHRIST."—GAL. 4: 7.

Come, my friend, and let us sit down together, and talk quietly and lovingly of the glorious inheritance of the saints.

There is much more revealed in the Scriptures of truth concerning this inheritance, than many are aware of. When we say that "eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive" the things prepared for us, we are too apt to stop there. But it would be for our edification to read what follows, viz: "But the SPIRIT searcheth all things—yea, the deep things of GOD." "They are revealed to us by the Spirit."

If we read the good Book without the aid of the Spirit, we may see and not perceive; hear and not understand. But when the power of the Spirit rests upon us, and the light shines brightly upon the sacred page; when our heart is opened to receive the truth, and the INTERPRETER makes it all plain to us, then we find there is a great deal revealed that we had before considered "sealed" or hidden.

One of the treasures to be desired, the first and most prominent, is ETERNAL LIFE. This is very plainly brought to light in the Bible.

Another treasure of which we read, is WISDOM. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. She is more precious than rubies, and all the things that thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her. Length of days is in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. She is as a TREE OF LIFE to them that lay hold upon her; and happy is every one that retaineth her." "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom, and with all thy getting get understanding. Exalt her and she shall promote thee; she shall bring thee to honor when thou dost embrace her. She shall give to thy head an ornament of grace. A CROWN OF GLORY shall she deliver to thee."

There is no reason to doubt that all the saints will possess this treasure. We read that the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. And the saints will see, when they have entered the new earth, and have seen the face of HIM in whom "are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge;" they will see how small are all the boasted attainments of the wise men of this world.

LOVE is another part of the treasure to be desired. One of the most highly gifted of the bards of earth thus sings of love:

"Hail, holy love! thou word that sums all bliss!
The sparkling cream of all life's blessedness;
The silken down of happiness complete!
Discerner of the ripest grapes of joy,
She gathered, and selected with her hand
All finest relishes, all fairest sights,
All rarest odors, all divinest sounds,
All thoughts, all feelings dearest to the soul,
And brought the holy mixture home and filled
The heart with all superlatives of bliss.
Mysterious, infinite, exhaustless love!
On earth mysterious, and mysterious still
In heaven! sweet chord that harmonizes all
The harps of Paradise! the spring, the well
That fills the bowl and banquet of the feast."

Dear reader, have you this treasure in your heart? Without this all else is vain. We may say with Paul, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity (love), I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith so that I could REMOVE MOUNTAINS, and have not love, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing." Who can say that love is not one of the choicest and best of the "treasures in heaven?"

POWER is another part of the treasure laid up for us. How cheering to the poor weak ones, the helpless invalid and those who are ready to perish or faint by the way, to know that "they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint." "They shall mount up with wings as eagles." "Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing." "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength."

PEACE is another part of the saint's inheritance. "Great peace have all they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." We shall be kept in perfect peace. Truly we find that much is revealed to us of the treasure in store for us. Immortality, wisdom, love, power, peace, in a word, all the fruits of the Spirit will be our portion. There is another view plainly revealed by the Spirit and the Word, which theologians of this refined age call "sensual." These refined and professedly "spiritual" modern guides would fain strip the inheritance of every thing tangible, and carry us away "beyond the bounds of time and space," and leave us in a state "without body or parts": but unless this is according to Scripture, we object to such a plan.

We love to think upon a solid and enduring substance. We look by faith upon the new heaven and the new earth. We see the holy city, the New Jerusalem, coming down, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. We love to think of those solid foundations garnished with all manner of precious stones. The golden streets, the pearly gates, these are all solid and enduring substances. And we love to think of the "pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal," and the "tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations."

Are these sensual delights? They are truly scriptural. It is revealed to us that we shall be "like the angels in heaven." We shall be entirely free from sin and all its evil consequences. We shall have no base passions, no such desires as are called in Scripture "earthly, sensual, devilish." No. We are assured that all who have such desires shall be destroyed. We do not find revealed in Scripture either the heaven or hell of modern theology. We look upon these as among the "inventions," or traditions, not founded upon the Word. "We look for a city that hath foundations whose builder and maker is GOD." We expect, according to the word of truth, to "live and reign with Christ on the earth." And as for the wicked, we read that they will be destroyed, and be as though they had not been. According to the Bible, the everlasting fire devours the adversaries. They "shall be as stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the LORD of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." "But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the LORD of hosts.

The Spirit and the Word set forth clearly the "treasure to be desired," and the evil to be feared. We protest against "spiritualizing" away the one, and extending the other without authority through all eternity. We seek the pure truth of GOD, and desire earnestly to be delivered from the fables of cunning men or evil spirits. We expect soon to see JESUS coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. We love his appearing. We desire it. We wait for our LORD, and watch for him; for he will come and save us.

In conclusion, let me invite all who read or hear this to come to the fountain of living waters. Come to JESUS, and he will give you a place and an inheritance with the saints. "The Spirit and the Bride say come; and let him that heareth say come; and WHOSOEVER will, let him come, and take of the water of life freely."

Do you say that you are a sinner, and have no right to come? Like our Master, we call not the righteous, but sinners to repentance. Then come; confess and forsake your sins and you shall find mercy. O, sinner, come now. This may be your last call. You have no promise for to-morrow. It is TO-DAY if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. There will be joy in heaven over you if you will come and be saved. Saints on earth will rejoice, and welcome you with such love as you have never yet known. The heart of the Good Shepherd is moved with love and pity for you. You will never know what true joy is unless you come to his arms. Do you resolve to seek JESUS now? "Seek, and ye shall find," ask and ye shall receive, "knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

MAN'S FUTURE DESTINY.

BY J. P. BELT.

"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—GEN. 3: 19.

(Concluded.)

Of the different properties of the natural and spiritual bodies we can have but a faint conception till an actual resurrection takes place. One thing however is positively stated; that is, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." Therefore the essential properties of the celestial body, doubtless, are different from that which composed the terrestrial body. The only case that gives us any light upon this mysterious subject is the resurrection of Jesus Christ; and even he had not been glorified when he appeared to his disciples. And inasmuch as he said, "For I am not yet ascended to my Father," that fact strongly indicates that in his case the essential change did not take place till he ascended. Yet his body was raised incorruptible, for he said, "I am alive forevermore." And that his body was changed when he was glorified with the glory he had with the Father "before the world was," is evident from the fact that he had previously said, "I will give . . . my flesh . . . for the life of the world."

Another evidence that the essential properties of his body were not changed before his ascension, is the wounds in his hands, feet and side, which he told doubting Thomas to behold. Hence the apostle says, this "vile body" shall "be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Says the objector to this view, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." But instead of militating against it, this assurance establishes the correctness of that idea; for while they beheld him, after he had spoken the things which he had commanded them to observe, "he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight." Hence it is said, "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him." The transfiguration on the mount presents the glorified body in which he is to appear, when he comes to gather his elect from the four quarters of the earth. And the vision of the appearance of "Moses and Elias talking with him" on that occasion, prefigured the resurrection of the dead in Christ, and the change of the righteous living when he descends from heaven in the cloud in which he ascended. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." "For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we shall live together with him." On the mysterious change that is to pass upon the saints, it is added, "Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; afterward that which is spiritual." The mystery which pertains to the subject is, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." This is the scriptural account of the resurrection of those who are to "bear the image of the heavenly." Then, inasmuch as the natural body is that which is "first," the dead must be raised before they can be changed. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption." And inasmuch as the natural body that was sown was corruptible and saw corruption, the body must be reproduced before it is made incorruptible. And as Christ's body was not glorified till he ascended up into the cloud, which received him from the sight of those who beheld the ascension, so will not the bodies of his saints be glorified till they ascend up into the clouds to meet him in the air. Then, when this mortal state shall have passed away, the immortal state succeeds. For "this mortal must put on immortality." When this takes place, "then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

But far different will it be in the case of the wicked. Neither they, nor the generation of those who are alive "when the thousand years are expired," will be changed to incorruptibility. For, instead of being caught up into the clouds of glory, "the wrath of God abideth on them." In the case of the saints the change was preparatory to their final reward after the judgment of the last day. But the doom of the wicked is the perdition that awaits them in "the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." The "tares" are then burned up, root and branch; and the wheat shall be gathered into the garner.

The doctrine that all the dead would be raised up again, was with Paul a point on which the whole gospel plan was suspended. Reject the doctrine that all the dead in Adam are to be made alive by Christ; and, to be consistent, the whole book of divine revelation is to be also rejected upon the same principle. For if it is false in one position, it can not be relied upon in any other portion of it. But the doctrine is clearly a divine revelation, and all the theories of men and demons combined can not overthrow the divine decree. For the resurrection of Christ, which is the first-fruits of the harvest, gives "assurance unto all men" that the remainder of the crop will be gathered. That Christ is the appointed Lord of the harvest, was shown to Moses at "the bush" which "burned with fire and . . . was not consumed. By this unconsuming fire, it was intimated that the wrath of God abideth on man so long as he remained in the grave, to which he had been consigned by reason of sin; yet they were not to be consumed eternally there. For when the wicked are destroyed, it will not be in the grave by a dissolution to dust, their native element. It was here that Moses was instructed that God would raise up Christ, whom the people should hear in all things. And if they did not obey him (the "prophet like unto Moses"), they were by him to be destroyed. Hence "the voice out . . . of the midst of the fire" assured Moses that Christ was the appointed Lord and Judge of the "quick and dead." And hence he said, "I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." Ex. 3: 6. God was not the God of the dead. And this was the ground upon which Jesus Christ confuted the Sadducees. And "David himself saith in the book of Psalms, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool." And the apostle Paul declares that "when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all and in all." 1 Cor. 15: 28.

The promise of an everlasting possession of the earth was made to Abraham and his seed, which was also renewed to Isaac and Jacob and their seed. But inasmuch as they and all the children of the promise "died in faith, not having received the promises," it will be fulfilled to them "when the kingdom under the whole heaven" is "given to the people of the saints," who are to inherit it for ever. That class compose those who are "accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection." They are the children and heirs of God, jointly with Christ. Consequently, they are "the children of the resurrection," being the only recognized "children of God." And they cannot "die any more, for they are equal unto the angels." This is the class whose hearts had been renewed by the work of the Holy Ghost, and thereby were prepared for an inheritance in the everlasting kingdom of God. Hence the gathering of the harvest crop places every man in his own order. 1st. "Christ the first-fruits." 2nd. "They that are Christ's at his coming." 3d. "Then the end," when the kingdom is delivered up to God, even the Father, and the last enemy, which is death, is destroyed. Therefore, death cannot be destroyed while the wicked dead are under its power; and so long as they are in the graves, the last enemy is unmolested, which proves that the reign of Christ still continues, and that all things have not yet been subdued.

It was revealed to John that, when "the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened, . . . one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials, full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever. And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled." And then inasmuch as these are called the last plagues, the objects upon which they are to be fulfilled must have been visited by the wrath of God at some previous time. And as the saints are standing on the sea of glass while the plagues were being poured out, this must be the time when the prophecy of Isaiah begins to be fulfilled concerning "the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited."—Isa. 24: 21, 22. For there is to be a time when the great image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, which the prophet Daniel interpreted to represent the powers of earth that were to oppress the people of God, will be "broken to pieces together, and, . . . like the chaff of the summer threshing floors," be carried "away, that no place was found for them." And then the beast and false prophet are consigned to the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, into which the devil was cast at the end of the thousand years.

Now, inasmuch as the kingdoms of Babylon, Medo Persia and Grecia were separately destroyed, by each having succeeded the other, before the time of Christ's first advent; and since the Roman power, in its various forms of government, was to oppress the saints of Christ till the time of his second advent, it is evident that the stone, cut out of the mountain "without hands," has not yet struck the image and destroyed the four great powers of the earth together. For when this is done, they must all be assembled together, and this cannot take place without a resurrection of the ruling lords who had oppressed the church of God. At that time the oppressive lords will be "like the chaff of the summer threshing floors," which the wind carries away, and no place shall be found for them after they are all consumed. "Thus "the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter; and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure." In that day, "he will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces, and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it." In that day, "the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Then the Lord will ordain peace for the people who had been oppressed by wicked rulers "and the kings of the earth upon the earth." And then the saints will sing, "O Lord our God, other lords beside thee have had dominion over us; but by thee only will we make mention of thy name. They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish."—Isa. 26: 13, 14.

Now bear in mind that the reign of Christ was to continue till death was destroyed. Consequently this song cannot be sung before "death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them." When this last enemy is destroyed, all the memory of the wicked oppressors will be made to perish in the lake of fire. And this by "the second death." For then the wicked "shall be as though they had not been." Like "the fat of lambs, . . . into smoke shall they consume away." Their first death was only a return of the dust to dust, but "the spirit . . . to God who gave it." And since "the Lord knoweth how to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment, to be punished," the bodies of all the dead must again be animated by that Spirit, in order that they may receive the things in the body, according to that which they have done. Then both the soul and body will be destroyed in hell.

But an objection to this hypothesis is raised on the ground that it is said, the wicked "shall not see life." But this is only a portion of a text which reads as follows: "The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John 3: 35, 36. Now let us try another text by the new interpretation which is given to the above, and see the result. "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death."—John 8: 51. According to the new theory, this language implies that he who believes in Christ is not dead, although his body is consigned to the grave. But this contradicts the position that death is a negative of life. Then, inasmuch as the life that Christ refers to in the text is everlasting in its duration, and therefore future and eternal in its nature; so must the death be in the future and eternal. For in both cases the life and the death spoken of are to be abiding. But, says the objector, there is no life out of Christ, and without a person is in him, how is he to get any sort of life? Now, according to this hypothesis, when Adam violated the commandment of God, his life was forfeited to the demands of the law. And as there is no evidence, according to this theory, that he ever repented and obtained forgiveness for his sin, he was never in Christ; yet he did see some sort of life, for he lived nine hundred and thirty years after his fall. Also in the case of Satan and his fallen angels; they were never in Christ, yet they are reserved unto the judgment of the last day to be punished; and they have all along given unmistakable evidence that they are living some sort of life; and so far as his demoniac majesty is concerned, life and death is a subject that engrosses his special attention just now. But before our first parents had fallen by listening to his insidious wiles, his plausible construction of the divine prohibition was urged in a direction that was calculated to excite their minds, and induce them to believe that they would not die. Now, since "the living know that they must die," his effort is cunningly put forth to induce the human race to believe that death is an endless sleep to all the wicked dead; and his plan is laid accordingly. And that his plan may appear more plausible to the minds of the unsuspecting of his evil design, instead of a talking serpent, he uses the professed christian, and some of the most acute scholars of the day for his mediums, through whom he now proposes the temptation. And when a positive text of Scripture stands in the way of a theory that he wants men to believe, the idea which he causes to first flash in the mind of those he strives to mislead into error is, that the text was improperly added to the original matter; and therefore is an "interpolation." But when he fails in this direction, he artfully insinuates that the text was designed to be understood in a figurative and symbolical sense, representing by a mere figure of speech something different from what the literal meaning conveys. And if he does not succeed in this direction, his policy is to induce men to believe that the text was wrongly translated from the original manuscript. But "the scripture cannot be broken," and God will bring to naught the wisdom of this world.

He inspired holy men of old to write the Scriptures; and in every age he has taken care of the Bible, and consequently he takes care of its translations. That he has done so is clearly demonstrated by King James' translation. For although God's two witnesses were clothed in sackcloth during the dark ages of human tradition and misrule, the word of God was a light to guide the steps of the saints through their wilderness sojourn. And when the 1260 years expired, the two witnesses (which are the word and people of God) emerged from their obscurity, and light has been diffused throughout the world by translating the Bible into the Anglo Saxon tongue. For, from the English translation the Bible has been translated into every language throughout the world, and missionaries have been raised up to publish the glad tidings to a dying world. And it is a remarkable fact, that every attempt to destroy the force of that translation has been abortive. God has set his seal to the testimony of his two witnesses, and fear has fallen upon the nations that beheld their ascension. Then "let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. For God will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."—Eccl. 12: 13, 14.

AIR.—"America."

Great God, my refuge be,
Should sore adversity
Weigh down my heart,
Be thou my shield and guide,
For every want provide,
Let peace with me abide,
And fears depart.

Should worldly gain be mine,
Teach me all things are thine,
Lent of the Lord.
Give me a kindly heart,
That I may good impart,
Looking to Christ, my chart,
For the reward.

I know this world is vain,
It has no real gain,
Nor joy nor rest.
And yet it has a day
When tears shall pass away,
For which we wait and pray,
Supremely blest.

Oh! then, may I be there,
With Christ and his to share
That bliss that nears:
A day of peace and joy,
An age of sweet employ,
Where sin will ne'er annoy
Through endless years.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL AS A MEDICINE.

The united and persevering efforts of all earnest friends of the Temperance Reform will fail to secure to it any considerable advance while alcoholic liquors of almost all known varieties are daily prescribed by three fourths of the medical faculty in all sections of our country, not in rare and exceptional cases of disease, but in a vast majority of the cases they are called to treat where there is evidence of diminished vitality in the system, as a whole, or in important organs whose functional activity cannot be long impaired without producing general prostration. No one at all familiar with the vagaries of the profession will assume that because the mass of its members just now favor a stimulating practice, that therefore it must necessarily be needful or right, for thirty years since a practice directly the opposite was almost universal, and depletion by the lancet and all other available means was resorted to quite as generally as is now the resort to the use of stimulants. The lancet has, however, given place to Bourbon whiskey, drastic purgatives to ale or lager beer, and antimonials to wines, quinine, and beef tea. As an apology for this complete revolution in medical practice we are often told that diseases have changed. The laws of God, which govern in the wonderful phenomena of life, in the sustenance, growth, and healthful action of the various organs of the human body, and in the development and cure of disease, have not changed. They are now what they were in the days of the Patriarchs, and to attempt to reconcile the public to such a complete somersault in medical practice by such an explanation, is to insult the human understanding. The real facts we believe to be these: The pathology of many diseases is not well understood, the action of many drugs long in use an unexplained mystery, and the treatment of many forms of disease constantly multiplying through the united influence of hereditary taint and bad personal habits, is necessarily empirical or experimental. Medicine cannot yet be reckoned among the exact sciences, and the very respectable class of gentlemen who study, profess, and practice it, while feeling their way, not always with sufficient care, toward the truth or toward a true preventive or remedial system, are influenced like other men by popular opinion and fashion. They have their professional fashions or hobbies, and these follow each other in pretty regular succession. Almost every potent drug has, within the last two centuries, enjoyed its season of excessive popularity.

Even a fair and temperate statement of the extent to which alcoholic liquors are now prescribed by a majority of the medical men of the country, would severely tax the credulity of the public who may have taken no pains to learn the facts in the case. As a prophylactic, they are extensively employed, while there is not a particle of reliable evidence that they ever contribute in the smallest degree to prevent the injurious action of an impure atmosphere, bad water, or sudden and great changes of temperature. Scores of distinguished medical men who have practised for many years in tropical climates, have in their published works borne testimony to the truth I have just stated. Bad as alcoholic stimulation is in cold climates, it is infinitely worse in tropical ones.

Again, alcoholic liquors are extensively prescribed as adjuncts to tonics, and a generous diet in almost all cases of general debility, and as needful support in long-continued and exhausting fevers. If, happily, the patient live, in spite of the fever and the alcoholic poisons administered during its continuance, and convalescence be fairly established, he is again subjected by many practitioners to the influence of stimulants with a view to hasten recovery; and just here an amount of mischief is done which can scarcely be estimated, for, in thousands of instances all over the land, the patient thus treated contracts a fondness for the stimulant, and although comparative health returns, he goes right on in the use of alcoholics, and in many deplorable cases is soon numbered among the drunkards of that community.

As an aid to digestion in dyspepsia—as a stimulant in cases of shock, as by blows, falls, or severe wounds—as aids to the process of lactation in the cases of nursing women—to prevent the waste of tissue in consumptive cases—to excite the nerves of the phlegmatic, or, as a narcotic, to quiet the nerves of the irritable—for all these purposes alcoholic liquors are daily prescribed, with apparently in utter forgetfulness of the fact that our public charitable institutions and prisons are crowded with the wrecks of men ruined by the habitual use of these much lauded medicines, and that the hearts and homes of thousands and tens of thousands all over the land are filled with unutterable anguish as a direct result of their use.

Dr. Beaumont of England, has, in a few brief sentences, indicated what I am disposed to regard the chief cause of the delusion which prevails among medical men on this subject.

"The narcotic action of alcohol is the cause of its being misused. It is found in some cases to relieve pain for the time, and it is therefore often resorted to as a palliative when a more curative remedy should be employed. It may give temporary relief, however, but only for a time conceals the malady without removing it. On this account its action should be carefully watched by the physician when he prescribes it, lest the appearance of relief delude him into the supposition that the disease he is contending with is removed when it is only concealed. Many chronic diseases are thus 'glossed over' and run on to an ultimately fatal issue, when the discontinuance of alcoholic liquors would enable their latent operations to be read in their appropriate symptoms, and so admit of treatment and probable cure."

That an agent which can so act on the brain and nervous system of a healthy man, as to make him, for the time, forget his cares, sorrows, and obligations, and laugh, sing, and shout, while his mother, wife, or child is dying in the next room, should produce a feeling of relief or present comfort when administered to the sick, might be anticipated, but to conclude therefrom that brandy is the true remedy for the disease under treatment, would be as irrational as to conclude from the facts before stated, that brandy is the true and best source of consolation for the bereaved and the sorrowing. The character of a "mocker," a deceiver, adheres to alcoholic liquors when and wherever they come in contact with the brain and nerves of man, and that fact must be constantly borne in mind, or we shall continue to be misled by them as millions have been in the ages past.

The real value of alcoholic liquors as medicinal agents cannot be fairly estimated by considering their immediate effect distinct from later results which are sure to follow. The studious and thoughtful, both in and outside the medical profession, will be greatly aided in estimating the value of alcoholics for any and all purposes by considering the results of investigations, some of them quite recent, made in England and France, a knowledge of which have not yet reached the public generally this side the Atlantic through the ordinary channels of information.

Dr. Michel Levy, in a Treatise on Hygiene, published in Paris in 1857, says:

"The influence of alcohol upon the nervous system, and particularly upon the brain, is manifested by a progressive but constant series of symptoms, which, in different degrees of intensity, are reproduced in all individuals. These constitute a true poisoning, and this morbid state is exhibited under three phrases: 1, sub excitement; 2, perturbation; 3, abolition of the cerebro-spinal functions."

Dr. Edward Smith, F. R. S., performed in 1859 a series of experiments, recorded in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, illustrating the mode of action of alcohol. The following are among his conclusions:

"Alcohol is probably not transformed, and does not increase the production of animal heat by its own chemical action.

"It interferes with alimentation. It lessens the salivary secretion, and must therefore impede the due digestion of starch.

"It greatly lessens the muscular tone and power.

"There is no evidence that it increases nervous influence, while there is much evidence that it lessons the nervous power, as shown by its action on the mind and muscles.

"The dose only effects the degree, and not the direction, of its influence.

"Alcohol is not a true food, as it neither warms nor sustains the body by the elements of which it is composed."

The experiments of Dr. Smith just referred to, were followed by a most thorough investigation of the subject in France, set on foot through the action of the National Academy of Medicine, and conducted by Professors Lallemand and Perrin, assisted by the eminent chemist Duroy.

No investigation previously made has damaged the reputation of alcohol to an equal extent. Some idea of the importance of the report which embodies the results of their investigations may be formed from the following brief summing up of the matter by Perrin, one of the French committee. It occurs in a reply of his to the strictures of an English reviewer.

1st. "Alcohol, contrary to what happens with alimentary substances (food,) sojourns in the blood as a foreign body.

2d. "Unlike them, it is expelled from the system unaltered through the various channels of elimination, (lungs, skin and kidneys) This elimination commences almost immediately after the ingestion, is constant, whatever be the quantity absorbed, and continues as long as the blood and organs remain impregnated with alcohol.

3. "Alcohol undergoes no transformation within the economy (the body,) and furnishes no product of oxidation.

6th. "It betrays its presence by certain special effects, which are always of the same kind, and may acquire such an intensity as to become rapidly fatal.

5th. "It accumulates in certain organs (the brain and the liver) which for equal weights constantly contain more of it than does the blood."

From a resume of the argument in the French report on page 229, we add the following:

"Muscular power is always weakened by the presence of alcohol in the system, beginning with the extremities, and extending ultimately (where the dose has been sufficient) to the centers, the heart being the last to die."

"Death by alcoholic poisoning is due primarily to its special action on the nervous center."

"After the introduction into the stomach of a very small dose of brandy—only 360 grains—the blood continued to manifest its presence for many hours, being tested by chemical re-agents. Alcoholized blood contains during life and after death a great number of free fatty globules, visible even to the naked eye."

From a recent work, entitled "Life and its Renewal," by a distinguished English physician, Dr. T. K. Chambers, we make the following extract:

"What is a stimulant? It is usually held to be something which spurs on an animal to a more vigorous performance of its duties. It seems doubtful if on the healthy nervous system this is ever the effect of alcohol, even in the most moderate doses and for the shortest periods of time."

"Again: "It is clear that we must cease to regard alcohol as in any sense an aliment, inasmuch as it goes out of the system as it went in, and does not, so far as we know, leave any of its substance behind,"

He says: "To recapitulate—we think that the evidence, so far as it has gone, shows the action of alcohol upon life to be consistent and uniform in all its phases, and to be always exhibited as an arrest of vitality.

"The most special exhibition of disease from its use is in the special function of the nervous system, the life of relation, to perform the duties of which the devitalized nerve becomes inadequate."

It is certainly pertinent to inquire, just here, what alcoholic liquors can do for the human body in a state of disease, if the distinguished medical gentlemen whose opinions I have quoted do not greatly mislead us as to the relation of those agents to the human constitution in a state of health. They cannot afford it nutriment in a state of exhaustion; they cannot serve as an antidote to any known toxic or poisonous agent which may have been introduced from without in connection with the inbreathed atmosphere through the lungs, or received into the stomach with food or otherwise, or by absorption through a wound or an abraded surface. They cannot supply, as do mineral waters, important ingredients of the blood or solid structures which may be at the time wanting or deficient in the system, such as iron, phosphoric acid, sulphur, lime, and the like. They cannot neutralize in the system or aid in the elimination from it of waste or effete matters resulting from the disintegration of the tissues, and which may have accumulated through defective action of the excretory organs.

We may select from our materia medica articles capable of producing either of the results I have named, but alcohol is not one of them. What desirable result, then, can the physician promise himself and his patient, with any degree of confidence, from the administration of alcohol in any of those forms or mixtures in which it is or may be employed as medicines?

1st. In cases of extreme and sudden prostration, resulting from falls, blows, extensive scalds, profuse hemorrhages, or whatever cause, where there is present danger of a fatal faint or stoppage of the circulation, alcohol may—administered in small doses to those who have not been accustomed to its use—excite reaction or an increased movement of the vital machinery, and thus avail for good, while more permanent restoratives are applied to the support of the sufferer. A sudden dash of cold water in the face or the introduction of the sharp, acrid vapor of ammonia into the nostrils—both suggestive to the vital forces of suffocation—will often act in a similar way. The period during which alcohol can be made to serve any good purpose in the way suggested as a mere stimulant, it will be at once perceived, must be very brief, and the amount employed small in constitutions accustomed to its presence.

2d. It may afford temporary relief from pain and spasm in cases where from any cause the sensibilities have been unduly exalted. As a narcotic, or an anesthetic agent, closely akin to chloroform and ether, alcohol, carefully administered, can and often does produce desirable results of the character indicated. In spasmodic asthma, in cases of disturbances of the alimentary canal, caused either by exposures to cold, or, more frequently, by the passage of ill-digested or crude materials over the mucous surfaces—in these and other kindred cases alcohol may, as an anesthetic, render the condition of the patient more tolerable, while a return to the normal state is secured by time and the remedial efforts of the vital forces, or by the action of medicines more safe and permanent in their results than those which produce a partial destruction of the sensibilities. There are other agents with which the desirable results named may usually be accomplished with nearly as much certainty, if not so rapidly, as with alcohol. Warm baths, or local applications of heat; opium in some of its forms, or some kindred narcotic; or, in urgent cases, even the moderate and careful inhalation of ether; but apart from the tendency to the formation of intemperate habits [illegible] the use of alcohol, these have no advantage that I am acquainted with over that article, judiciously administered. The temporary relief which stimulants, so called, afford to dyspeptic patients; to those afflicted with organic disease of a very painful character, external or internal; in cases of severe external injuries inflicted by mechanical or chemical forces, and in the treatment of asthma, colic, and the like, is doubtless referable to the anesthetic character of acohol.

While it may be allowable for a cautious physician to secure for his patient immediate though temporary relief from suffering by the narcotic influence of alcohol or opium, it seems to us neither consistent with philosophy, experience, or common sense, to look to such agents for the permanent cure of any serious form of disease known to us.

The eminent surgeon and author, Professor Miller, of Edinburg, Scotland, is reported to have remarked, in a public discourse, a short time before his death, "Alcohol, gentlemen, cures nothing—it covers up a great deal."

The confirmed drunkard secures to himself with each returning day, temporary relief from suffering, by the use of alcohol, or, if that is not to be had, with opium; but so far from doing the work, in his case, of a real curative agent, it intensifies the real disease with which he is afflicted, of which it was, in fact, the primary cause.

Some very able men of the medical profession, of large experience, decline to avail themselves of the use of alcohol, even as a palliative, asserting that they have found reliable substitutes for it in all cases. Among the most distinguished of these are Drs. Mudge, of Bodmin, and Higginbottom, of Nottingham, England. If the result of further and careful observation shall lead to the general exclusion of it from the sick room, in this as well as other countries, the most serious obstacle to the advancement of the temperance cause will have been removed. We may not look for aid, while laboring in that direction, to men who make a mere trade of their profession, and who, reckless of the influence of their example, habitually indulge themselves in the use of narcotics—blunting their sensibilities, and saturating their tissues with opium, or the oil of tobacco, until they fumigate every sick room they enter ad nauseam, or who patronize drinking saloons and bar-rooms as regularly as any common loafer; but we may not hope from the well-educated, moral, christian, and progressive portion of the medical profession, a careful revision of the whole subject we have briefly considered, in the steadily increasing light of true science and experience, accompanied with an earnest zeal for the elevation, health, purity and happiness of the human race?

CURE FOR FISTULA.—One ounce sal ammoniac, one fourth pound of lard. Pound the root fine. Put all together, and fry on a slow fire about half an hour. Rub on the sore, and heat with an iron. Two or three applications will effect a cure.

REMEDY FOR A FELON.—Take a pint of common soft soap and stir in air-slacked lime till it is of the consistency of glazier's putty. Make a leathern thimble, fill it with this composition, and insert the finger therein.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

O for the peace which floweth as a river!
Making life's desert places bloom and smile;
O for a faith to grasp heaven's bright "forever,"
Amid the shadows of earth's "little while."

"A little while" for patient vigil keeping,
To face the storm, to wrestle with the strong;
"A little while" to sow the seed with weeping,
Then bind the sheaves and sing the harvest song.

"A little while" to wear the robe of sadness,
To toil with weary steps through erring ways;
Then to pour forth the fragrant oil of gladness,
And clasp the girdle of the robe of praise.

"A little while" 'mid shadow and delusion,
To strive by faith love's mysteries to spell;
Then read each dark enigma's clear solution;
Then hail light's verdict, "He doth all things well."

"A little while" the earthen pitcher taking
To wayside brooks from far-off fountains fed;
Then the parched lip its thirst forever slaking
Beside the fullness of the Fountain-Head.

"A little while" to keep the oil from failing,
"A little while" faith's flickering lamp to trim,
And then the Bridegroom's coming footsteps hailing,
To haste to meet him with the bridal hymn.

And he who is at once both Gift and Giver,
The future glory and the present smile,
With the bright promise of the glad "forever"
Will light the shadows of the "little while."

JESUS LOVES YOU.

"I would that this thought might be impressed upon every mind: Jesus loves you." These words fell from the lips of a faithful servant of God at the close of a most excellent sermon delivered to the little flock in Addison, Vermont, nearly two years ago. Jesus loves you! How this simple sentence thrilled my heart. Three years I had been seeking the Lord, had been forward in baptism, and to me was extended the right hand of fellowship by the church. I had taken delight in listening to the preaching of the word, and notwithstanding several miles intervened, Sunday after Sunday found me seated in the chapel, and I eagerly drank in each word as it fell from the lips of our beloved pastor.

Yet my hungry soul had not been satisfied; it was not enough that man looked upon me as a christian. My heart yearned for the approving smile of God. He alone could fill the void within, and there I felt that he was not. I looked upon those around me; none seemed to have or to desire that which I so earnestly sought. The solemnity which prevailed during the service was quickly dispelled by the light and trifling conversation that followed. If any possessed the light I sought, it was hid under a bushel, I saw it not.

Thus groping so long in darkness I had become settled in the conviction that inasmuch as I had yielded obedience to the requirements, baptism, fellowship, and breaking of bread, I could do no more, and was prepared to drift with the current. But suddenly I found myself in the midst of troubled waters. The flock seemed to have been forsaken of its shepherd, and though no wolves were visible, the sheep were scattered, some of the lambs missing, while those who remained were chilled and evidently famished for the sincere milk of the word. Evident tokens that the enemy had entered.

My heart was troubled; my confidence in professors of religion shaken; I doubted if any professed it, except in the imaginations of a fevered brain. Where, then, is my hope? what awaits me beyond the tomb? I could not solve these questions nor rid my mind of them. Oh, for a friend to guide me, to teach me the way of truth! In all the circle of my acquaintance I knew of none; to those on whom I had hitherto relied so implicitly, I could no longer look with confidence. As for friends, I felt for a time that such did not exist. Then how sweet to my soul these words, as they fell from the lips of the man of God: "Jesus loves you." I had often heard them before, and had read their truth in the word of God, but the manner in which they were uttered forcibly impressed it upon my heart, and to my mind conveyed a deeper meaning. I saw that God's love was not love in the abstract. That Jesus loves me, was the cheering thought that encouraged me to hold fast that I had, a desire to serve him, and earnestly pray for light to illumine the way.

Months rolled on. Far from home and friends, surrounded by sinners and worldly-minded professors, both alike ungodly, still walking in darkness, harassed by doubts and anxious fears, my trials were severe, and numerous the temptations that beset me. But that voice, in tones so meek and deeply touching, was still ringing in my ear: Jesus loves you. I could not wilfully sin against him, and though deep in the "Slough of Despond," and grievously bedaubed, I had no inclination to get out on the side whence I came, but, reencouraged by a Savior's love, struggled on to the "wicket gate."

Sometimes I would enter the house of God; cold and lifeless was the aspect of both church and congregation, but still more cold the measured tones of the Orthodox preacher in his address to the people. The house was but thinly filled, and yet there was no room for the poor; the pews were rented. I was glad to get out where I could breathe free air, and feel the genial warmth of God's impartial sun.

Oh, christian, where art thou? Religion; it is all in vain I seek it. Are not those who profess it not as good, yea better than most of those who claim it theirs? Why am I troubled thus for naught?

Then again those thrilling words, Jesus loves you, inspired me with new hope, and most earnestly did I beseech this ever-loving Jesus to lead me in the way I should go; and he who pitieth the sparrows as they fall, was not unmindful of my feeble cry, but graciously led me to see that it is not my own righteousness, nor the good works I might do, that could atone for sin, or win one smile from God. But Jesus loved me, and with his own blood had cancelled the debt long ago, and now if I would look up and believe on the Son of God, I should be healed. I looked, and oh, what rapture filled my soul! And could it be, it was for me that Jesus died? Yes, it was me that Jesus loved, and now was manifest, the depth of that love. He gave his life for me.

How easy now to serve the Lord. My heart overflows with gratitude. Let scoffers scoff and scorners boast, yet I will cheerfully bear the cross, and boldly speak our Savior's praise; for, lo, "Jesus loves me!" and if God be for us, who can be against us?

Dear reader, are you seeking the Lord, yet look in vain for one to teach and guide you? Are you ofttimes discouraged and ready to give up in despair because of the coldness and inconsistency of professed christians around you? Turn your eyes from these and look to God for guidance; and let not a sense of your unworthiness keep you from the mercy seat, but remember that "Jesus loves you," and with hands extended, says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Poor sinner, you who are in open rebellion against God, presuming on his forbearance and long-suffering; come with me to Calvary; see on yonder tree the pierced and bleeding body of our Lord; hear him, even in the agonies of death, still pleading,—"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." Jesus loves YOU, and to-day he pleads for you, "Father, forgive." Can you still persist in the course of sin? Will you pierce him still again? Will you not rather cast yourself at his feet? Oh, come to Jesus.

"Come, freely come, by sin oppressed,
Unburden here the weighty load;
Here find thy refuge and thy rest,
And trust the mercy of thy God:
Thy God's thy Father—glorious word!
Forever love and praise the Lord."

Fellow pilgrim, tried and tempted, called to suffer on the bed of pain, Jesus loves you. Let this cheer our hearts and encourage us to be faithful unto the end, and "He who spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things." ABOUT SCATTERING.

"From that time many of his disciple went back, and walked no more with him."—JOHN vi. 66.

We hear much about the spirit of Christ being a gathering spirit; we think it is, but whom will it gather? We answer, it will not gather those who are not willing to hear some of his sayings, and do them. Look, for example, to the sixth chapter of John, speaking of His flesh and blood,—"Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Many therefore of his disciples, when they had heard this, said, this is an hard saying; who can hear it?" You will notice that he then turned to the twelve, and said, "Will ye also go away?" You will find that there was a class that walked with him then, but when he came to talk plainly to them they thought it hard. Are there not some in our day like them?

But some will say the Spirit will not scatter. Whom did it scatter in this case? You will notice it was those who said they were "hard sayings." We think it will not scatter them that are willing to keep his commandments.

How is it that there are so many of those who are looking for the Lord scattered out here? Where did they come from? From most of the so-called churches. But why are they thus scattered? Did those that proclaimed the coming of the Lord near have the spirit of God? We think God must have been in the move, yet they were scattered. Parhaps if we should enter one of those churches they could tell us something of the work that this sort of preaching, the coming of the Lord, and other truths, made. Perhaps they would say it could not have been of God, for it divided and scattered. Am I to believe it was not of God because it caused such a commotion? I think not.

In regard to some of the preaching in these days, once in a while there is one of God's servants who is not afraid to preach the plain truth, just as we find it in the Book; yet it makes quite a stir among some. But had they better dodge these things because they disturb some? I think not. But some may say, Give us something that will keep us all together. In the first place, who do we want kept together? If saint and sinner, they had better be scattered, unless something can be said that pricks the heart, and I am inclined to think that will be the plain truth. We have heard about this lullaby preaching, trying to make all, saint and sinner, think they are good. We look back into the past. We think if the pure gospel had been preached in power, perhaps more would have been made to see their sins. We think we should see quite a difference in the professed followers of Christ. But perhaps the cry has been, Give us something that will keep us together, and so they have been kept together; but there is a day coming when they will be divided. Give us the pure word, that we are to be judged by in the last day.

Christ came to make a division between two classes. Perhaps his truth will not always drive out, or cause to come out, but it will make a stir. Let it come; if it is too straight for me, I will, by the help of the Lord, get where I can sit and bear it. I may have said quite enough on this, but hope it may remind those that are scattered, if it is God's word that scattered you, hold on to the truth; it will stand in the coming day, when all else shall fail. His word will stand at last, and so will you, if you keep it in your heart, and live as it teaches; and when you come to stand before him who is to judge the world, you will stand acquitted.

Dear one, do you want to be there? Then be faithful a little longer. Here we are, amid all this commotion, but the grace of God is sufficient. Hold fast whereunto you have attained, that no one take your crown. My heart's desire is, that I, with you, may overcome, and at last have a right to the tree of life. May God help us all, that we may be gathered home in that day when God makes up his jewels. JOHN T. KIMBALL.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, and the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In our previous article, at the closing remarks, we began the subject of the unconscious state of the dead, and referred to the account of the spirit, as given in Eccl. 3: 19, 20, 21. In the passage here referred to, it is evident that the spirit alluded to was nothing more nor less than the breath, which God takes away when the man dies. As inspiration plainly teaches us that there was nothing given to man after he was formed from the dust, but his breath; and also informs us that when his breath is taken away he dies.

The words spirit and soul are two different words in Hebrew and Greek, and have two different meanings; therefore, the spirit is not the soul, nor the soul the spirit. The word that is translated spirit, in Hebrew and Greek sometimes means breath, and sometime means the mind; and the word from which soul is translated, both Hebrew and Greek, means life, person, or desire.

We will now continue our subject of the unconscious state of the dead, and refer to the 88th Psalm, where we began it in our last article, at the 10th verse, and ask the reader to consider the 11th and 12th verses, which read as follows:—"Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" Psalm 115: 17:—"The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Psalm 146: 4:—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

Are not the thoughts the greatest and most important part of the soul? Certainly, if the soul is a separate, living entity, after the death of the body; for, say our orthodox friends, "when a person is dead, he knows more than all the living!" and, as we have heard stated from the pulpit, that "our friends look down from heaven, and see and know all that is going on here on earth." But, dear reader, what means this passage in the Bible (Eccl. 9: 6), where it is recorded,—"Neither have they any more a portion forever in any thing that is done under the sun." I would ask the candid question, how can Job say by inspiration (Job 14: 20, 21), that (when a man is sent away by his Creator to the region of death,) "his sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not?" I say, how can it be so, if the soul is immortal, and lives in heaven, when the body is dead? for, if he knows more than all the living, when he is dead, surely he knows all about his son's affairs.

But let us turn to 1 Thess. 4: 13–15,—"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep; that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." What are we to hope for? Shall we hope that our friends are already in heaven, and are wide awake praising God, and do not sleep in Jesus at all, and need no resurrection? or shall we embrace the plain and simple truth of the gospel, and say that our friends are dead, or that they sleep in Jesus, and need a resurrection in order to have eternal life? How much better it is for us to believe that God says what he means, and means what he says, and not twist the Scriptures all out of joint in order to maintain our position.

Let us examine a few more passages of Scripture, in order to understand more clearly what the soul is, and where the whole man is between death and the resurrection, that we may come at the idea of what the real punishment of the wicked will be, when the great day of accounts arrives. We will now look Psalms 33: 22,—"Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the destroyers." Please read Psa. 88: 3, also Psa. 107: 18; and a plenty more of similar passages can be found. When a man dies and is put into the grave, his life becomes extinct; the whole man dies and goes into the grave.

We will look at Eccl. 9: 5. The wise man says, "the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not any thing; neither have they any more a reward, for the memory of them is forgotten." In the sixth verse we are informed that "their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished." Please turn to the 18th chapter of Ezekiel, and read it through, and you will plainly see that God declares that the souls of the wicked, who continue in sin, shall [illegible]ie, and die, eternally, and become extinct.

We will notice one more idea about the resurrection of the saints from their graves. How was it in relation to the saints which rose and came into the holy city, at the time of our dear Savior's resurrection? Does it not plainly say, "the saints who slept"? What part of the saints was it that woke up and rose from the dead? Was it the bodies of the saints that woke up, while the souls were wide awake in heaven praising God? and did their souls come down from heaven, and enter those bodies? What constitutes the saints which rose? Was it not their souls and bodies together? B. PERHAM.

A WORD OF EXHORTATION
TO THOSE WHO PROFESS TO BE LOOKING FOR THE LORD.

There is one subject which I have been led to think upon a great deal, and I confess I am not able to solve the mystery, for such it looks to be to my mind. I allude to the neglect of the Sabbath School, and to the apparent neglect in home training and home example among our people. How is it that we see so many who are so constant at meeting, so earnest in exhortation to others, while their own children seldom or never are seen to darken the door of the Lord's house? Can it be that such parents live at home the pure principles which they are so zealous in teaching when away from home? Can it be that it is possible that children are trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and still show their training so little? or, is the legitimate fruits of such training, such fruits as we see constantly around us? We are a people who are notorious for sticking to the word of the Lord. We believe that it is all true, and that all Scripture is profitable. Let us remember, then, that there is a place in that word which reads like this:—"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." I am aware that in fulfillment of the word of God we are to look for such things as we see around us; but are they not the legitimate fruits of a cause, and is not by far the greater part, if not all, of that cause, the loose example which they receive at home? Are they trained up in the way they should go, and do they depart from it? I think not. For the word says they will not. Let us believe God, if it make every man a liar.

I am aware that we are amid the perils of the last days; but have these perils come upon us without a cause? Has human nature changed, or have these perils come upon us because man loves sin, and by a long continued looseness of morals, has come to wink at many things, until the doors seem now to be thrown wide open to all manner of sin? Shall we look for these signs of the last days among our own children? if so, have they been trained up in the way they should go? Let us look around us, and see if our skirts are clear from the blood of all men, and when we look, be sure and not overlook those with whom we are the most intimately connected, and let us all inquire the next time we go to meeting where the young seldem are seen, and where there are many who take an active part in meeting, who it is well known have children who should be taught to reverence the Lord and his house, let us, I say, inquire if we are standing clear of the blood of all men in this matter. We see Sabbath schools flourish in other churches, why do we not have them? We see the Sabbath school papers of other denominations in a flourishing condition—we see our "Young Pilgrim" is not flourishing as it should; but, on the contrary, the editor has to record the sad tale of a falling of two thousand names from its subscription list. Why is this? Whatever the answer may be, I am sure it cannot be that the paper has not been ably conducted, or that it does not fill the place that it was designed to fill. Have we in the eager haste to get knowledge ourselves, forgotten that there are those who surround us who are famishing for the teachings of that same Bible, and who, not being able to digest strong meat, must be fed with the "sincere milk of the word"? Have we, as Advent people waiting for our Lord from heaven, nothing to do towards the training of the rising generation? Are we occupying the position which God would have us in this matter? May God grant us wisdom, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

M. G. DAY.

A LETTER.

MY DEAR SISTER:—Your experience in regard to holding fast the blessing, is like that of many others, and desiring to benefit as many as possible, I take this public way of replying to your very kind and welcome letter. I will begin by saying something about backsliding.

I have usually divided backsliders into two classes. One class consists of hopeless reprobates, who are among the most desperate enemies of the religion they once professed. These are they who "crucify the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame," that is, so far as it is in their power. In regard to these the Spirit says, "It is impossible to renew them again to repentance." They have sinned "wilfully," after receiving knowledge of the truth. We would hope that this class is small.

The other class of backsliders, as I view the case, embraces almost the whole body of professors. But few, comparatively, can say they never knew from experience the feelings of a backslider. In some cases the young convert sinks into a state of spiritual slumber soon after his conversion, and remains for years in so stupid a state that he cannot tell whether he is on the side of truth or in the ranks of the enemy. Ask him if he is a christian, and he says, "I hope I am, but I am not sure." Press him more closely, and ask him to "examine himself," whether he be in the faith, and he cries out, "Alas, I bear no fruit. I have done absolutely nothing in the service of him who gave himself for me." Almost countless multitudes are in that condition, or a worse one, if they would but testify.

Here we see the two classes of backsliders. One class mourn over their shortcomings, and occasionally resolve to awake, and live up to their high calling; while the other class deny that there is any thing in religion. One who I much fear belongs to this class, said to me a few days after I set out to serve the Lord,—"I have been through the mill, and I know there is nothing in it; and you will find it so." If any young convert who reads this should meet with such a one, bear in mind it is the language of the old serpent, and his followers.

But I wish to protest against the view of these who say it is impossible to hold fast to the "first love." There is no imperative necessity for you to backslide. But unless you grow in grace, doubtless you will do so. You are not required to backslide, but you are required to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of the truth." And so in the case of higher attainments. The soul that is made "perfect in love" may not only continue in that blessed state, but it is evidently the duty of such a one to walk in the path of the just, that "grows brighter and brighter unto the perfect day."

But in an unguarded moment the adversary may have led you astray, or a spirit of slumber may have stolen upon you unawares, and all at once you feel the sting of death, which is sin, or a consciousness of guilt. Now you must confess your faults, and return with all your heart to your "first love." "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, and call ye upon him while he is near."

If you will do this without delay, then there is hope in your case. The Lord is gracious and merciful, and ready to forgive. Pray earnestly that you may not only be restored to the blessed state you enjoyed in "months past," but that you may go on, till the glory of the Lord is revealed, and you see that glory "face to face."

With true sympathy and love, your brother,

Sutton, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

SHALL YOU I BE THERE?

In my Father's mansion,
A palace rich and fair,
He's preparing a supper,—
Shall you and I be there?

A feast of wine upon the lees,
Refined and very rare,
Of rich things full of marrow,—
Shall you and I be there?

The King in all his splendor—
His bride white robes shall wear;
Both will be at the supper,—
Shall you and I be there?

Now all are invited,—
And let us have a care
How we reject this offer,—
Shall you and I be there?

FOR THE CHURCH OF EVERY NAME.

The word of inspiration says: "Let women professing godliness adorn themselves in modest apparel." Is this command obeyed by the church at the present time, or is it not? There is no neutral ground here,—God is either obeyed or disobeyed. If the latter, then sin lies at the door; and as without repentance there is no remission, how can there be prosperity till it is put away, and the church shows by her obedience that she delights to be led by the Spirit of Christ, to do as he bids her. He is not the minister of sin. Unblushing transgression against his sacred word must be repented of, and all our works must be wrought of God through the Spirit, or they will pass for naught at the day of final reckoning. Either the soul is bowed in humility to bear the cross that God's word imposes—or else it is lifted up, and goes after an idol god, that quiets the conscience in sin, and gives liberty to gratify the lust of the eye and the pride of life. When the last is done the church is defiled, her covenant to the Lord is broken, and she runs greedily into conformity with the world, to the shame and reproach of Christ and his cause, so that the world has reason to say,—"What do ye more than others? There is no difference between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."

It is no excuse, and God will not receive it as such, for us to conform to the world in this matter, and obey a book dictated by the God of fashion to avoid being called singular. There is indeed no virtue in wearing attire different from others for the sake of being singular—but when it comes to that, that we must follow the precepts of a book that requires us to attire ourselves in direct opposition to the rules of the Bible—the church of Christ should not be long in choosing which she will serve, and not fear to wear modest apparel, whether called singular or not. When the cross is taken up in loving obedience to Christ, his blissful presence makes the yoke easy and the burden light. Daniel and the three worthies were willing to be called singular, and suffer death even, rather than dishonor God by bowing to idol gods and serving them. God has a controversy with this whole nation, and he has not arisen to overthrow one form of slavery, and then allow his church to be bound slaves to the filthy, brazen god of fashion.

Now what hinders those that fear the Lord from renouncing such folly, and coming out boldly on his side, taking the Bible as they have promised to, for their only rule of faith and practice? They have solemnly promised to give up all for Christ; then why not leave caste and reputation to him, and bring every tithe of the heart into the storehouse, and prove him herewith and see if he will not pour out a blessing, such as there will not be room to receive? His promises are yea and amen to all who obey him, what hinders then the forsaking every false way, and coming to the rich, soul-satisfying feast that Jesus has prepared for all who love and serve him in simplicity and godly sincerity? What are all the forms and ceremonies of religion without a heart-cheering sense of God's presence that makes us dead to the world and alive to God, and causes us to respect all his commandments?

To obey is better than sacrifice. What is to be gained by disobedience; by solemnly covenanting before God to renounce the world and its vanities, and to take the Bible as the only rule of faith and practice, and then turning God's houses into houses of merchandise, loading the body with all the foolish, vain ornaments that the world can invent? Can we thus lie to God and be guiltless? No, we shall find at last that it had been better not to vow, than to vow and not perform. When the heart is right, the eye single, then the whole body will be full of light, and it will show itself outwardly. Legion is the name of the evil here considered, and the effect upon the spiritual life of the church is like blasting and mildew. Who will arise in the strength of the Lord to put away the evil from among us before the judgments threatened in the third chapter of Isaiah, and others of a similar import come upon us?—Earnest Christian.

SANCTUARY SINS; OR, RULES FOR THE HOUSE OF GOD.

"Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools."—ECCL. 5: 1.

"The Sabbath! 'tis a holy day;
Let no base thought intrude
On worship of the heart, or stay
The heavenly solitude."

1. Be regular in your attendance; make conscience of it. Occasional absence from church, or even regular half day hearing, is counted a small thing by many. A wet Sabbath, or even a shower, will keep them away. A headache, a little extra fatigue on the Saturday, or perhaps the prospect of hard work on Monday, are counted good reasons for their absence. And if there be any slight ailment through the week, Sabbath is selected as the day for taking medicine, as it can be spared without any pecuniary loss.

2. Be punctual. Go in time, and be in time. "It is a part of my religion," says Mrs. Chapone, "never to disturb the religion of others." Some persons make a point of being late. They retire to rest late on Saturday; they rise late on Sabbath morning; they breakfast late; their family devotions (if any they have) are late; and of course they are late to the sanctuary. They hurry out, and they hurry along, and they hurry into church after service is begun. They see no sin in losing part of divine worship themselves, nor in disturbing the worship of others. Reader, be punctual at the house of God; make conscience of it. One slack one makes another slack one, and another. "One sickly sheep infects the whole flock." Beloved, the way to make every body slack, is to be slack yourself. Slackness is contagious; it spreads like the leprosy. Let a minister be slack, a little behind the time in his appointments, and how soon the disease affects the whole body, every member of his audience! So also with the parent, the teacher, the overseer. "One sinner destroyeth much good."

3. Never stand or lounge about the church door, nor engage in commonplace or worldly conversation. Go in; take your seat immediately on your arrival.

On entering the house of God take off your hat. Some very ill-bred persons go in, and walk up the aisles with their hats on! Why not sit with your hats on? Why not the minister preach and pray with his hat on? If you are Quakers, and wear your hats for conscience' sake, we have not a word to say. Keep them on.

4. Walk softly to your seat. Some persons are very annoying—make a great noise with their thick boots or shoes—go tramping through the aisles like a trotting horse, disturbing every body.

5. Select a comfortable seat—not the best one. We have seen some little folks (and some big folks) take the best seat they could find, and hold on to it as if nailed or chained thereto. Is this polite? Young friends, give place to your superiors always. "Rise up before the hoary head."

6. Take care of your thoughts; bring them into subjection to the law of Christ. We have no right to think our own thoughts, or speak or own words, on the Lord's day. (See Isa. 58: 13, 14.)

Some are buying and selling all the time. Christ says, "My house shall be called a house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves." Govern your thoughts.

"There is no room for trifling here,
For worldly hope or worldly fear."

Some worldly minds, instead of listening to God's truth as it falls from the lips of the faithful preacher, are transacting business—their hearts are wandering, like "the fool's eye, to the ends of the earth." The farmer plows his field; the merchant drives his bargain; the shopkeeper sells his goods or takes stock; the lawyer threads his way through a client's case; the politician speculates on parliamentary tactics, or sketches a reform bill; the soldier forms squares, or deploys into line; the mechanic plies the loom, or the needle, or the trowel, or the hammer.

The minds of others are upon some novel, romance, or silly love tale, over which they pondered the week previous. Thus men, women, and children, who come together to worship the great God of heaven and earth, mock him in his own house.

"Keep thy foot (and heart, too) when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools."—Eccl. 5: 1. On which passage Matthew Henry weightily says: "Religious exercises are not vain things; but if we mismanage them, they become vain to us."

7. Sleeping in church is a bad practice; in most cases it is wicked. There was some excuse for "Eutychus falling asleep," for "Paul was long preaching," and it was midnight. But there is no excuse for our modern sleepers, especially as most of these are not occasional, but regular sleepers, who seem not to feel the shame or the sin of the practice. Few things are more unpleasant to a minister than to see eyes closed and heads nodding in this or that pew. If he were to stop and name the individuals before the congregation, he would do well. Sleepers in church, beware! it is Satan who is sitting next you.

8. Fidgeting, nestling about, and gazing about during the solemn services of the sanctuary, are evident manifestations of disrespect and want of reverence for holy things. Children, especially, should be instructed to keep quiet till all the services are closed; fix their eyes intently on the speaker—riveted; hear as for eternity; receive the truth in meekness, take it home, digest it, practice it. "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."

Some people seem to sit on nails or nettles, their body is so constantly in motion. Others take out their watches, and count the length of sentences in a sermon, twirling or twitching their watch-chain or ribbon all the while. Others seem as if taking the census of the congregation, or counting the number of panes in the window, or watching the movement of the flies. They are drinking in every thing but the sermon, and seem as if relieved from the stocks when the service is over.

9. When you enter your pew, engage a few moments in silent prayer to God for a special blessing on the duties of the sanctuary. Pray for the minister, that God will fill him with the spirit of wisdom and power from on high, enable him to speak boldly, declare "all the words of this life."

Think over, also, or revolve in your mind some precious passages of God's word which you may have previously committed; meditate thereon with silent and fervent ejaculations, till your soul burns with love and is on fire for salvation.

10. Be sure always, in the house of God, to be well supplied with Bibles and hymn-books; and when the Scriptures are read from the pulpit, take your Bible and follow the reader. When the text is named, or in the course of the sermon a passage of Scripture is cited, turn to it, observe the passage and its connection.

11. When the hymn is given out, take your hymn-book, open it, and sing, sing—every one should sing, making melody in his heart to God. Singing is a most interesting, delightful, important, and profitable part of public and domestic worship. This confining the singing to a few, or singing by proxy, is contrary to God, reason, edification, and common sense.

12. In time of prayer, imitate your minister—bow the knee, or rise up (unless enfeebled by disease or decrepit age). Never take the sitting posture when you can well avoid it.

13. Be moderate in leaving the house of God; wait a moment in silence after the benediction is pronounced before taking your hat, your gloves, or even moving a foot.

14. Never crowd the aisles or press your way out; wait for one another. Retire from the house of God as cautiously and respectfully as from the house of your friend, or even more so.

15. Never put on your hat till you reach the door. After retiring from the sanctuary, go home, retire to your closet. Remember, "behold, a sower went forth to sow; and when he sowed, some seeds fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them up." Beware!

"THAT SAITH [illegible] F CYRUS."

Saith the Lord "of Cyrus, he is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure, even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." Isa. 44: 28. "When Cyrus read this and admired the divine power, an earnest desire and ambition seized upon him to fulfill what was so written; so he called for the most eminent Jews that were in Babylon, and said to them, that he gave them leave to go back to their own country, and to rebuild their city Jerusalem, and the temple of God." Josephus b. 11, c. 1, s. 3.

We will give the words of Cyrus himself:—"I have given leave to as many of the Jews that dwell in my country, as please to return to their own country and to rebuild their city, and to build the temple of God at Jerusalem, on the same place where it was before." Josephus b. 11, c. 1, s. 3.

"ANOTHER COMMANDMENT."

If it be impossible to give another commandment before the first was given, we must admit that Cyrus did issue a commandment to build Jerusalem; for, when the Jews were employed in building their city, the son of Cyrus said, "Give ye now commandment to cause these men to cease, and that this city be not builded until another commandment shall be given from me." Ezra 4: 21.

BUILDING JERUSALEM.

During the reign of Artaxerxes, we found the Jews employed in building their city, Ezra 4: 12. As this Artaxerxes was the son of Cyrus (Ezra 4: 15), it is evident that Cyrus had given the Jews the privilege of thus building Jerusalem. Dan. 9: 25. To give Cyrus' own words concerning the matter, he says, "I have given leave to as many of the Jews . . . as please to return to their own country, and to rebuild their city, and to build the temple of God at Jerusalem." Josephus b. 11, c. 1, s. 3.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

O for the peace which floweth as a river!
Making life's desert places bloom and smile;
Amid the shadows of earth's "little while."

"A little while" for patient vigil keeping,
To face the storm, to wrestle with the strong;
"A little while" to sow the seed with weeping,
Then bind the sheaves and sing the harvest song.

"A little while" to wear the robe of sadness,
To toil with weary steps through erring ways;
Then to pour forth the fragrant oil of gladness,
And clasp the girdle of the robe of praise.

"A little while" 'mid shadow and delusion,
To strive by faith love's mysteries to spell;
Then read each dark enigma's clear solution;
Then hail light's verdict, "He doth all things well."

"A little while" the earthen pitcher taking
To wayside brooks from far-off fountains fed;
Then the parched lip its thirst forever slaking
Beside the fullness of the Fountain-Head.

"A little while" to keep the oil from failing,
"A little while" faith's flickering lamp to trim,
And then the Bridegroom's coming footsteps hailing,
To haste to meet him with the bridal hymn.

And he who is at once both Gift and Giver,
The future glory and the present smile,
With the bright promise of the glad "forever"

JESUS LOVES YOU.

"I would that this thought might be impressed upon every mind: Jesus loves you." These words fell from the lips of a faithful servant of God at the close of a most excellent sermon delivered to the little flock in Addison, Vermont, nearly two years ago. Jesus loves you! How this simple sentence thrilled my heart. Three years I had been seeking the Lord, had been forward in baptism, and to me was extended the right hand of fellowship by the church. I had taken delight in listening to the preaching of the word, and notwithstanding several miles intervened, Sunday after Sunday found me seated in the chapel, and I eagerly drank in each word as it fell from the lips of our beloved pastor.

Yet my hungry soul had not been satisfied; it was not enough that man looked upon me as a christian. My heart yearned for the approving smile of God. He alone could fill the void within, and there I felt that he was not. I looked upon those around me; none seemed to have or to desire that which I so earnestly sought. The solemnity which prevailed during the service was quickly dispelled by the light and trifling conversation that followed. If any possessed the light I sought, it was hid under a bushel, I saw it not.

Thus groping so long in darkness I had become settled in the conviction that inasmuch as I had yielded obedience to the requirements, baptism, fellowship, and breaking of bread, I could do no more, and was prepared to drift with the current. But suddenly I found myself in the midst of troubled waters. The flock seemed to have been forsaken of its shepherd, and though no wolves were visible, the sheep were scattered, some of the lambs missing, while those who remained were chilled and evidently famished for the sincere milk of the word. Evident tokens that the enemy had entered.

My heart was troubled; my confidence in professors of religion shaken; I doubted if any professed it, except in the imaginations of a fevered brain. Where, then, is my hope? what awaits me beyond the tomb? I could not solve these questions nor rid my mind of them. Oh, for a friend to guide me, to teach me the way of truth! In all the circle of my acquaintance I knew of none; to those on whom I had hitherto relied so implicitly, I could no longer look with confidence. As for friends, I felt for a time that such did not exist. Then how sweet to my soul these words, as they fell from the lips of the man of God: "Jesus loves you." I had often heard them before, and had read their truth in the word of God, but the manner in which they were uttered forcibly impressed it upon my heart, and to my mind conveyed a deeper meaning. I saw that God's love was not love in the abstract. That Jesus loves me, was the cheering thought that encouraged me to hold fast that I had, a desire to serve him, and earnestly pray for light to illumine the way.

Months rolled on. Far from home and friends, surrounded by sinners and worldly-minded professors, both alike ungodly, still walking in darkness, harassed by doubts and anxious fears, my trials were severe, and numerous the temptations that beset me. But that voice, in tones so meek and deeply touching, was still ringing in my ear: Jesus loves you. I could not wilfully sin against him, and though deep in the "Slough of Despond," and grievously bedaubed, I had no inclination to get out on the side whence I came, but, reencouraged by a Savior's love, struggled on to the "wicket gate."

Sometimes I would enter the house of God; cold and lifeless was the aspect of both church and congregation, but still more cold the measured tones of the Orthodox preacher in his address to the people. The house was but thinly filled, and yet there was no room for the poor; the pews were rented. I was glad to get out where I could breathe free air, and feel the genial warmth of God's impartial sun.

Oh, christian, where art thou? Religion; it is all in vain I seek it. Are not those who profess it not as good, yea better than most of those who claim it theirs? Why am I troubled thus for naught?

Then again those thrilling words, Jesus loves you, inspired me with new hope, and most earnestly did I beseech this ever-loving Jesus to lead me in the way I should go; and he who pitieth the sparrows as they fall, was not unmindful of my feeble cry, but graciously led me to see that it is not my own righteousness, nor the good works I might do, that could atone for sin, or win one smile from God. But Jesus loved me, and with his own blood had cancelled the debt long ago, and now if I would look up and believe on the Son of God, I should be healed. I looked, and oh, what rapture filled my soul! And could it be, it was for me that Jesus died? Yes, it was me that Jesus loved, and now was manifest, the depth of that love. He gave his life for me.

How easy now to serve the Lord. My heart overflows with gratitude. Let scoffers scoff and scorners boast, yet I will cheerfully bear the cross, and boldly speak our Savior's praise; for, lo, "Jesus loves me!" and if God be for us, who can be against us?

Dear reader, are you seeking the Lord, yet look in vain for one to teach and guide you? Are you ofttimes discouraged and ready to give up in despair because of the coldness and inconsistency of professed christians around you? Turn your eyes from these and look to God for guidance; and let not a sense of your unworthiness keep you from the mercy seat, but remember that "Jesus loves you," and with hands extended, says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Poor sinner, you who are in open rebellion against God, presuming on his forbearance and long-suffering; come with me to Calvary; see on yonder tree the pierced and bleeding body of our Lord; hear him, even in the agonies of death, still pleading,—"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." Jesus loves YOU, and to-day he pleads for you, "Father, forgive." Can you still persist in the course of sin? Will you pierce him still again? Will you not rather cast yourself at his feet? Oh, come to Jesus.

"Come, freely come, by sin oppressed,
Unburden here the weighty load;
Here find thy refuge and thy rest,
And trust the mercy of thy God:
Thy God's thy Father—glorious word!
Forever love and praise the Lord."

Fellow pilgrim, tried and tempted, called to suffer on the bed of pain, Jesus loves you. Let this cheer our hearts and encourage us to be faithful unto the end, and "He who spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things." ABOUT SCATTERING.

"From that time many of his disciple went back, and walked no more with him."—JOHN vi. 66.

We hear much about the spirit of Christ being a gathering spirit; we think it is, but whom will it gather? We answer, it will not gather those who are not willing to hear some of his sayings, and do them. Look, for example, to the sixth chapter of John, speaking of His flesh and blood,—"Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Many therefore of his disciples, when they had heard this, said, this is an hard saying; who can hear it?" You will notice that he then turned to the twelve, and said, "Will ye also go away?" You will find that there was a class that walked with him then, but when he came to talk plainly to them they thought it hard. Are there not some in our day like them?

But some will say the Spirit will not scatter. Whom did it scatter in this case? You will notice it was those who said they were "hard sayings." We think it will not scatter them that are willing to keep his commandments.

How is it that there are so many of those who are looking for the Lord scattered out here? Where did they come from? From most of the so-called churches. But why are they thus scattered? Did those that proclaimed the coming of the Lord near have the spirit of God? We think God must have been in the move, yet they were scattered. Parhaps if we should enter one of those churches they could tell us something of the work that this sort of preaching, the coming of the Lord, and other truths, made. Perhaps they would say it could not have been of God, for it divided and scattered. Am I to believe it was not of God because it caused such a commotion? I think not.

In regard to some of the preaching in these days, once in a while there is one of God's servants who is not afraid to preach the plain truth, just as we find it in the Book; yet it makes quite a stir among some. But had they better dodge these things because they disturb some? I think not. But some may say, Give us something that will keep us all together. In the first place, who do we want kept together? If saint and sinner, they had better be scattered, unless something can be said that pricks the heart, and I am inclined to think that will be the plain truth. We have heard about this lullaby preaching, trying to make all, saint and sinner, think they are good. We look back into the past. We think if the pure gospel had been preached in power, perhaps more would have been made to see their sins. We think we should see quite a difference in the professed followers of Christ. But perhaps the cry has been, Give us something that will keep us together, and so they have been kept together; but there is a day coming when they will be divided. Give us the pure word, that we are to be judged by in the last day.

Christ came to make a division between two classes. Perhaps his truth will not always drive out, or cause to come out, but it will make a stir. Let it come; if it is too straight for me, I will, by the help of the Lord, get where I can sit and bear it. I may have said quite enough on this, but hope it may remind those that are scattered, if it is God's word that scattered you, hold on to the truth; it will stand in the coming day, when all else shall fail. His word will stand at last, and so will you, if you keep it in your heart, and live as it teaches; and when you come to stand before him who is to judge the world, you will stand acquitted.

Dear one, do you want to be there? Then be faithful a little longer. Here we are, amid all this commotion, but the grace of God is sufficient. Hold fast whereunto you have attained, that no one take your crown. My heart's desire is, that I, with you, may overcome, and at last have a right to the tree of life. May God help us all, that we may be gathered home in that day when God makes up his jewels. JOHN T. KIMBALL.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, and the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In our previous article, at the closing remarks, we began the subject of the unconscious state of the dead, and referred to the account of the spirit, as given in Eccl. 3: 19, 20, 21. In the passage here referred to, it is evident that the spirit alluded to was nothing more nor less than the breath, which God takes away when the man dies. As inspiration plainly teaches us that there was nothing given to man after he was formed from the dust, but his breath; and also informs us that when his breath is taken away he dies.

The words spirit and soul are two different words in Hebrew and Greek, and have two different meanings; therefore, the spirit is not the soul, nor the soul the spirit. The word that is translated spirit, in Hebrew and Greek sometimes means breath, and sometime means the mind; and the word from which soul is translated, both Hebrew and Greek, means life, person, or desire.

We will now continue our subject of the unconscious state of the dead, and refer to the 88th Psalm, where we began it in our last article, at the 10th verse, and ask the reader to consider the 11th and 12th verses, which read as follows:—"Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" Psalm 115: 17:—"The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Psalm 146: 4:—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

Are not the thoughts the greatest and most important part of the soul? Certainly, if the soul is a separate, living entity, after the death of the body; for, say our orthodox friends, "when a person is dead, he knows more than all the living!" and, as we have heard stated from the pulpit, that "our friends look down from heaven, and see and know all that is going on here on earth." But, dear reader, what means this passage in the Bible (Eccl. 9: 6), where it is recorded,—"Neither have they any more a portion forever in any thing that is done under the sun." I would ask the candid question, how can Job say by inspiration (Job 14: 20, 21), that (when a man is sent away by his Creator to the region of death,) "his sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not?" I say, how can it be so, if the soul is immortal, and lives in heaven, when the body is dead? for, if he knows more than all the living, when he is dead, surely he knows all about his son's affairs.

But let us turn to 1 Thess. 4: 13–15,—"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep; that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." What are we to hope for? Shall we hope that our friends are already in heaven, and are wide awake praising God, and do not sleep in Jesus at all, and need no resurrection? or shall we embrace the plain and simple truth of the gospel, and say that our friends are dead, or that they sleep in Jesus, and need a resurrection in order to have eternal life? How much better it is for us to believe that God says what he means, and means what he says, and not twist the Scriptures all out of joint in order to maintain our position.

Let us examine a few more passages of Scripture, in order to understand more clearly what the soul is, and where the whole man is between death and the resurrection, that we may come at the idea of what the real punishment of the wicked will be, when the great day of accounts arrives. We will now look Psalms 33: 22,—"Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the destroyers." Please read Psa. 88: 3, also Psa. 107: 18; and a plenty more of similar passages can be found. When a man dies and is put into the grave, his life becomes extinct; the whole man dies and goes into the grave.

We will look at Eccl. 9: 5. The wise man says, "the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not any thing; neither have they any more a reward, for the memory of them is forgotten." In the sixth verse we are informed that "their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished." Please turn to the 18th chapter of Ezekiel, and read it through, and you will plainly see that God declares that the souls of the wicked, who continue in sin, shall die, and die, eternally, and become extinct.

We will notice one more idea about the resurrection of the saints from their graves. How was it in relation to the saints which rose and came into the holy city, at the time of our dear Savior's resurrection? Does it not plainly say, "the saints who slept"? What part of the saints was it that woke up and rose from the dead? Was it the bodies of the saints that woke up, while the souls were wide awake in heaven praising God? and did their souls come down from heaven, and enter those bodies? What constitutes the saints which rose? Was it not their souls and bodies together? B. PERHAM.

A WORD OF EXHORTATION

TO THOSE WHO PROFESS TO BE LOOKING FOR THE LORD.

There is one subject which I have been led to think upon a great deal, and I confess I am not able to solve the mystery, for such it looks to be to my mind. I allude to the neglect of the Sabbath School, and to the apparent neglect in home training and home example among our people. How is it that we see so many who are so constant at meeting, so earnest in exhortation to others, while their own children seldom or never are seen to darken the door of the Lord's house? Can it be that such parents live at home the pure principles which they are so zealous in teaching when away from home? Can it be that it is possible that children are trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and still show their training so little? or, is the legitimate fruits of such training, such fruits as we see constantly around us? We are a people who are notorious for sticking to the word of the Lord. We believe that it is all true, and that all Scripture is profitable. Let us remember, then, that there is a place in that word which reads like this:—"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." I am aware that in fulfillment of the word of God we are to look for such things as we see around us; but are they not the legitimate fruits of a cause, and is not by far the greater part, if not all, of that cause, the loose example which they receive at home? Are they trained up in the way they should go, and do they depart from it? I think not. For the word says they will not. Let us believe God, if it make every man a liar.

I am aware that we are amid the perils of the last days; but have these perils come upon us without a cause? Has human nature changed, or have these perils come upon us because man loves sin, and by a long continued looseness of morals, has come to wink at many things, until the doors seem now to be thrown wide open to all manner of sin? Shall we look for these signs of the last days among our own children? if so, have they been trained up in the way they should go? Let us look around us, and see if our skirts are clear from the blood of all men, and when we look, be sure and not overlook those with whom we are the most intimately connected, and let us all inquire the next time we go to meeting where the young seldem are seen, and where there are many who take an active part in meeting, who it is well known have children who should be taught to reverence the Lord and his house, let us, I say, inquire if we are standing clear of the blood of all men in this matter. We see Sabbath schools flourish in other churches, why do we not have them? We see the Sabbath school papers of other denominations in a flourishing condition—we see our "Young Pilgrim" is not flourishing as it should; but, on the contrary, the editor has to record the sad tale of a falling of two thousand names from its subscription list. Why is this? Whatever the answer may be, I am sure it cannot be that the paper has not been ably conducted, or that it does not fill the place that it was designed to fill. Have we in the eager haste to get knowledge ourselves, forgotten that there are those who surround us who are famishing for the teachings of that same Bible, and who, not being able to digest strong meat, must be fed with the "sincere milk of the word"? Have we, as Advent people waiting for our Lord from heaven, nothing to do towards the training of the rising generation? Are we occupying the position which God would have us in this matter? May God grant us wisdom, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

M. G. DAY.

A LETTER.

MY DEAR SISTER:—Your experience in regard to holding fast the blessing, is like that of many others, and desiring to benefit as many as possible, I take this public way of replying to your very kind and welcome letter. I will begin by saying something about backsliding.

I have usually divided backsliders into two classes. One class consists of hopeless reprobates, who are among the most desperate enemies of the religion they once professed. These are they who "crucify the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame," that is, so far as it is in their power. In regard to these the Spirit says, "It is impossible to renew them again to repentance." They have sinned "wilfully," after receiving knowledge of the truth. We would hope that this class is small.

The other class of backsliders, as I view the case, embraces almost the whole body of professors. But few, comparatively, can say they never knew from experience the feelings of a backslider. In some cases the young convert sinks into a state of spiritual slumber soon after his conversion, and remains for years in so stupid a state that he cannot tell whether he is on the side of truth or in the ranks of the enemy. Ask him if he is a christian, and he says, "I hope I am, but I am not sure." Press him more closely, and ask him to "examine himself," whether he be in the faith, and he cries out, "Alas, I bear no fruit. I have done absolutely nothing in the service of him who gave himself for me." Almost countless multitudes are in that condition, or a worse one, if they would but testify.

Here we see the two classes of backsliders. One class mourn over their shortcomings, and occasionally resolve to awake, and live up to their high calling; while the other class deny that there is any thing in religion. One who I much fear belongs to this class, said to me a few days after I set out to serve the Lord,—"I have been through the mill, and I know there is nothing in it; and you will find it so." If any young convert who reads this should meet with such a one, bear in mind it is the language of the old serpent, and his followers.

But I wish to protest against the view of these who say it is impossible to hold fast to the "first love." There is no imperative necessity for you to backslide. But unless you grow in grace, doubtless you will do so. You are not required to backslide, but you are required to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of the truth." And so in the case of higher attainments. The soul that is made "perfect in love" may not only continue in that blessed state, but it is evidently the duty of such a one to walk in the path of the just, that "grows brighter and brighter unto the perfect day."

But in an unguarded moment the adversary may have led you astray, or a spirit of slumber may have stolen upon you unawares, and all at once you feel the sting of death, which is sin, or a consciousness of guilt. Now you must confess your faults, and return with all your heart to your "first love." "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, and call ye upon him while he is near."

If you will do this without delay, then there is hope in your case. The Lord is gracious and merciful, and ready to forgive. Pray earnestly that you may not only be restored to the blessed state you enjoyed in "months past," but that you may go on, till the glory of the Lord is revealed, and you see that glory "face to face."

With true sympathy and love, your brother,

Sutton, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

SHALL YOU I BE THERE?

In my Father's mansion,
A palace rich and fair,
He's preparing a supper,—
Shall you and I be there?

A feast of wine upon the lees,
Refined and very rare,
Of rich things full of marrow,—
Shall you and I be there?

The King in all his splendor—
His bride white robes shall wear;
Both will be at the supper,—
Shall you and I be there?

Now all are invited,—
And let us have a care
How we reject this offer,—
Shall you and I be there?

FOR THE CHURCH OF EVERY NAME.

The word of inspiration says: "Let women professing godliness adorn themselves in modest apparel." Is this command obeyed by the church at the present time, or is it not? There is no neutral ground here,—God is either obeyed or disobeyed. If the latter, then sin lies at the door; and as without repentance there is no remission, how can there be prosperity till it is put away, and the church shows by her obedience that she delights to be led by the Spirit of Christ, to do as he bids her. He is not the minister of sin. Unblushing transgression against his sacred word must be repented of, and all our works must be wrought of God through the Spirit, or they will pass for naught at the day of final reckoning. Either the soul is bowed in humility to bear the cross that God's word imposes—or else it is lifted up, and goes after an idol god, that quiets the conscience in sin, and gives liberty to gratify the lust of the eye and the pride of life. When the last is done the church is defiled, her covenant to the Lord is broken, and she runs greedily into conformity with the world, to the shame and reproach of Christ and his cause, so that the world has reason to say,—"What do ye more than others? There is no difference between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."

It is no excuse, and God will not receive it as such, for us to conform to the world in this matter, and obey a book dictated by the God of fashion to avoid being called singular. There is indeed no virtue in wearing attire different from others for the sake of being singular—but when it comes to that, that we must follow the precepts of a book that requires us to attire ourselves in direct opposition to the rules of the Bible—the church of Christ should not be long in choosing which she will serve, and not fear to wear modest apparel, whether called singular or not. When the cross is taken up in loving obedience to Christ, his blissful presence makes the yoke easy and the burden light. Daniel and the three worthies were willing to be called singular, and suffer death even, rather than dishonor God by bowing to idol gods and serving them. God has a controversy with this whole nation, and he has not arisen to overthrow one form of slavery, and then allow his church to be bound slaves to the filthy, brazen god of fashion.

Now what hinders those that fear the Lord from renouncing such folly, and coming out boldly on his side, taking the Bible as they have promised to, for their only rule of faith and practice? They have solemnly promised to give up all for Christ; then why not leave caste and reputation to him, and bring every tithe of the heart into the storehouse, and prove him herewith and see if he will not pour out a blessing, such as there will not be room to receive? His promises are yea and amen to all who obey him, what hinders then the forsaking every false way, and coming to the rich, soul-satisfying feast that Jesus has prepared for all who love and serve him in simplicity and godly sincerity? What are all the forms and ceremonies of religion without a heart-cheering sense of God's presence that makes us dead to the world and alive to God, and causes us to respect all his commandments?

To obey is better than sacrifice. What is to be gained by disobedience; by solemnly covenanting before God to renounce the world and its vanities, and to take the Bible as the only rule of faith and practice, and then turning God's houses into houses of merchandise, loading the body with all the foolish, vain ornaments that the world can invent? Can we thus lie to God and be guiltless? No, we shall find at last that it had been better not to vow, than to vow and not perform. When the heart is right, the eye single, then the whole body will be full of light, and it will show itself outwardly. Legion is the name of the evil here considered, and the effect upon the spiritual life of the church is like blasting and mildew. Who will arise in the strength of the Lord to put away the evil from among us before the judgments threatened in the third chapter of Isaiah, and others of a similar import come upon us?—Earnest Christian.

SANCTUARY SINS; OR, RULES FOR THE HOUSE OF GOD.

"Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools."—ECCL. 5: 1.

"The Sabbath! 'tis a holy day;
Let no base thought intrude
On worship of the heart, or stay

1. Be regular in your attendance; make conscience of it. Occasional absence from church, or even regular half day hearing, is counted a small thing by many. A wet Sabbath, or even a shower, will keep them away. A headache, a little extra fatigue on the Saturday, or perhaps the prospect of hard work on Monday, are counted good reasons for their absence. And if there be any slight ailment through the week, Sabbath is selected as the day for taking medicine, as it can be spared without any pecuniary loss.

2. Be punctual. Go in time, and be in time. "It is a part of my religion," says Mrs. Chapone, "never to disturb the religion of others." Some persons make a point of being late. They retire to rest late on Saturday; they rise late on Sabbath morning; they breakfast late; their family devotions (if any they have) are late; and of course they are late to the sanctuary. They hurry out, and they hurry along, and they hurry into church after service is begun. They see no sin in losing part of divine worship themselves, nor in disturbing the worship of others. Reader, be punctual at the house of God; make conscience of it. One slack one makes another slack one, and another. "One sickly sheep infects the whole flock." Beloved, the way to make every body slack, is to be slack yourself. Slackness is contagious; it spreads like the leprosy. Let a minister be slack, a little behind the time in his appointments, and how soon the disease affects the whole body, every member of his audience! So also with the parent, the teacher, the overseer. "One sinner destroyeth much good."

3. Never stand or lounge about the church door, nor engage in commonplace or worldly conversation. Go in; take your seat immediately on your arrival.

On entering the house of God take off your hat. Some very ill-bred persons go in, and walk up the aisles with their hats on! Why not sit with your hats on? Why not the minister preach and pray with his hat on? If you are Quakers, and wear your hats for conscience' sake, we have not a word to say. Keep them on.

4. Walk softly to your seat. Some persons are very annoying—make a great noise with their thick boots or shoes—go tramping through the aisles like a trotting horse, disturbing every body.

5. Select a comfortable seat—not the best one. We have seen some little folks (and some big folks) take the best seat they could find, and hold on to it as if nailed or chained thereto. Is this polite? Young friends, give place to your superiors always. "Rise up before the hoary head."

6. Take care of your thoughts; bring them into subjection to the law of Christ. We have no right to think our own thoughts, or speak or own words, on the Lord's day. (See Isa. 58: 13, 14.)

Some are buying and selling all the time. Christ says, "My house shall be called a house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves." Govern your thoughts.

"There is no room for trifling here,
For worldly hope or worldly fear."

Some worldly minds, instead of listening to God's truth as it falls from the lips of the faithful preacher, are transacting business—their hearts are wandering, like "the fool's eye, to the ends of the earth." The farmer plows his field; the merchant drives his bargain; the shopkeeper sells his goods or takes stock; the lawyer threads his way through a client's case; the politician speculates on parliamentary tactics, or sketches a reform bill; the soldier forms squares, or deploys into line; the mechanic plies the loom, or the needle, or the trowel, or the hammer.

The minds of others are upon some novel, romance, or silly love tale, over which they pondered the week previous. Thus men, women, and children, who come together to worship the great God of heaven and earth, mock him in his own house.

"Keep thy foot (and heart, too) when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools."—Eccl. 5: 1. On which passage Matthew Henry weightily says: "Religious exercises are not vain things; but if we mismanage them, they become vain to us."

7. Sleeping in church is a bad practice; in most cases it is wicked. There was some excuse for "Eutychus falling asleep," for "Paul was long preaching," and it was midnight. But there is no excuse for our modern sleepers, especially as most of these are not occasional, but regular sleepers, who seem not to feel the shame or the sin of the practice. Few things are more unpleasant to a minister than to see eyes closed and heads nodding in this or that pew. If he were to stop and name the individuals before the congregation, he would do well. Sleepers in church, beware! it is Satan who is sitting next you.

8. Fidgeting, nestling about, and gazing about during the solemn services of the sanctuary, are evident manifestations of disrespect and want of reverence for holy things. Children, especially, should be instructed to keep quiet till all the services are closed; fix their eyes intently on the speaker—riveted; hear as for eternity; receive the truth in meekness, take it home, digest it, practice it. "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."

Some people seem to sit on nails or nettles, their body is so constantly in motion. Others take out their watches, and count the length of sentences in a sermon, twirling or twitching their watch-chain or ribbon all the while. Others seem as if taking the census of the congregation, or counting the number of panes in the window, or watching the movement of the flies. They are drinking in every thing but the sermon, and seem as if relieved from the stocks when the service is over.

9. When you enter your pew, engage a few moments in silent prayer to God for a special blessing on the duties of the sanctuary. Pray for the minister, that God will fill him with the spirit of wisdom and power from on high, enable him to speak boldly, declare "all the words of this life."

Think over, also, or revolve in your mind some precious passages of God's word which you may have previously committed; meditate thereon with silent and fervent ejaculations, till your soul burns with love and is on fire for salvation.

10. Be sure always, in the house of God, to be well supplied with Bibles and hymn-books; and when the Scriptures are read from the pulpit, take your Bible and follow the reader. When the text is named, or in the course of the sermon a passage of Scripture is cited, turn to it, observe the passage and its connection.

11. When the hymn is given out, take your hymn-book, open it, and sing, sing—every one should sing, making melody in his heart to God. Singing is a most interesting, delightful, important, and profitable part of public and domestic worship. This confining the singing to a few, or singing by proxy, is contrary to God, reason, edification, and common sense.

12. In time of prayer, imitate your minister—bow the knee, or rise up (unless enfeebled by disease or decrepit age). Never take the sitting posture when you can well avoid it.

13. Be moderate in leaving the house of God; wait a moment in silence after the benediction is pronounced before taking your hat, your gloves, or even moving a foot.

14. Never crowd the aisles or press your way out; wait for one another. Retire from the house of God as cautiously and respectfully as from the house of your friend, or even more so.

15. Never put on your hat till you reach the door. After retiring from the sanctuary, go home, retire to your closet. Remember, "behold, a sower went forth to sow; and when he sowed, some seeds fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them up." Beware!

For the World's Crisis.

"THAT SAITH OF CYRUS."

Saith the Lord "of Cyrus, he is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure, even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." Isa. 44: 28. "When Cyrus read this and admired the divine power, an earnest desire and ambition seized upon him to fulfill what was so written; so he called for the most eminent Jews that were in Babylon, and said to them, that he gave them leave to go back to their own country, and to rebuild their city Jerusalem, and the temple of God." Josephus b. 11, c. 1, s. 3.

We will give the words of Cyrus himself:—"I have given leave to as many of the Jews that dwell in my country, as please to return to their own country and to rebuild their city, and to build the temple of God at Jerusalem, on the same place where it was before." Josephus b. 11, c. 1, s. 3.

"ANOTHER COMMANDMENT."

If it be impossible to give another commandment before the first was given, we must admit that Cyrus did issue a commandment to build Jerusalem; for, when the Jews were employed in building their city, the son of Cyrus said, "Give ye now commandment to cause these men to cease, and that this city be not builded until another commandment shall be given from me." Ezra 4: 21.

BUILDING JERUSALEM.

During the reign of Artaxerxes, we found the Jews employed in building their city, Ezra 4: 12. As this Artaxerxes was the son of Cyrus (Ezra 4: 15), it is evident that Cyrus had given the Jews the privilege of thus building Jerusalem. Dan. 9: 25. To give Cyrus' own words concerning the matter, he says, "I have given leave to as many of the Jews . . as please to return to their own country, and to rebuild their city, and to build the temple of God at Jerusalem." Josephus b. 11, c. 1, s. 3. The New Webster a New Work.

We have commended this edition warmly already, on the faith of our first examination of it. It has grown upon us in every day's further study. We did not, at first, comprehend how entirely new a work this is, as compared even with the last preceding edition; and how important had been the etymological revision which it has received, making it, for substance, a rewritten volume, with all that was admirable and superior in the previous contributions of a generation to its pages, preserved and augmented by a thorough concentration upon it of the best skill and widest research of the present. As it stands,—in its etymologies, in its definitions, in its synonyms, and in its (real) illustrations,—it is far in advance of any other manual which offers itself to the aid of the student of the multifarious wealth of the composite English tongue.—Boston Congregationalist.

INQUIRERS ABOUT THE SOUL.

BRO. GRANT:—Dear Sir,—In looking over the word of God concerning the formation of man, there are some seeming contradictions upon the point as to how he was formed. First, we find that in the creation man was made, and the breath that God breathed into him made him live; we would then consider that the spirit was nothing more or less than the breath, the soul not being connected with the spirit, only as life was extinct without the union of the two. But as my intention is not to explain these passages that I shall present, but refer them to you for explanation; therefore, I will but bring them forward for perusal.

The first, that seems to vary from the idea that the spirit of man is his breath, is found in Zechariah 12: 1. This represents the spirit of man within him, and also that it was formed. As it is the great power of God to form the spirit and place it within man, so man lived from that very moment, as nothing could be formed unless there was either form [as a body] or sensitive knowledge containing in part the infinite knowledge of the Creator; so our consideration leads us to think that man's spirit is the essence of life, the ruling principle and actuating power by which the whole man is governed.

The second will be found in 1 Cor. 2: 11. This text would be in itself conclusive evidence that the invisible personage within man was the knowing part, and that the understanding of man is wholly confined to it. Separate from the spirit, no knowledge is understood to exist.

Another text of a different form is found in Job 14: 22. In the 21st verse we have laid down the principle of the unconscious state of the dead; but in the next we find that his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn. This last represents man as sensitive of pain at some time, but when is the question? It also represents the soul of man within him, and the former texts says positively that the spirit is within him; this gives permission to claim that the spirit and soul are one.

I submit these texts to you for consideration. Please give an explanation of the same.

Yours truly, E. G. CHADSEY.

Sutton, Mass.

The text in Zech. 12: 1 reads as follows: "The burden of the word of the Lord for Israel, saith the Lord, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit within him."

When did the Lord stretch "forth the heavens" and lay "the foundation of the earth"? Before he "created man upon the earth." Let us now turn to another passage, found in Amos 4: 13,—"For, lo, he that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind, . . . the Lord the God of hosts is his name."

This passage from Amos evidently refers to the same time mentioned in Zechariah, when the Lord created the heavens and the earth. At that time he created "the wind." Does any one believe that the wind here referred to is a man, or an intelligent agent? Certainly not. But it is the same word in the Hebrew that is rendered "spirit" in Zech. 12: 1, and we believe they both mean the same thing. The Lord created, or formed, "the spirit"—"the wind," or "the breath of life,"—before he placed it "within him," causing the man to live. The Septuagint reads:—"He that formed breath for all, knows all."

When the wise man was speaking of the spirit, wind, or breath, as related to man and beast, he says: "They have all one breath."—Eccl. 3: 19. For this reason it is called "the breath of lives," because no living being upon our planet can live without it. Says David, "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."—Ps. 104: 29. When speaking of man, he says: "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4. Says Job, "The spirit of God is in my nostrils."—Job 27: 3.

In all these passages, the words spirit, wind, and breath, are from the same Hebrew word ruach. We think the point is now clear that the Lord formed, or created it, that it is in man's nostrils, and is taken away at death; but we find no proof in the Bible, reason, common sense, facts, or philosophy, that any thing else is taken from man when he dies. If there is another spirit taken away besides "the breath," or spirit of life, then there are two spirits taken from man; but the Bible only speaks of one, and that one is in his "nostrils."

The passage in 1 Cor. 2: 11 reads as follows:—"For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God." In these passages we have the spirit of man, of God, and of the world. All would agree that "the spirit of the world" is not another world, or a world within a world; but that those who "have received . . . the spirit of the world" have partaken of the disposition, feelings, or character of worldly men. So, when we partake of "the Spirit which is of God," then we have the disposition, or feeling corresponding with the nature, or character of God. It is certain that the word spirit, in 1 Cor. 2: 11, does not mean breath.

Spirit is used in four senses in the Bible: 1. To represent the breath of life. 2. A state of mind, feeling, or disposition. 3. The Holy Spirit. 4. A being; as an angel.

Which of these senses is employed in 1 Cor. 2: 11? We think there can be no doubt but that it is the 3d, referring to a state of feeling. It is a well-known fact, that we are so constituted that, when we meet a person, we can usually tell his feelings toward us at the very first interview. When we feel a warm sympathy from him, we say, he has "a kindred spirit." The spirit, or feeling in us, corresponds with the feeling, or spirit, in him. On account of this arrangement in our constitutions, we know one another.

Again, we may visit an individual who pretends to be very glad to see us, and who makes a great ado over us; but all the while we feel that at heart he is really sorry that we have come; which is afterward found to be a fact. How did we know that he was playing the hypocrite? By means of the spirit, or feeling, conveyed by the magnetic currents passing from him to us, and acting upon our nervous system. Our Creator has thus constituted us, in order that we may read the feelings of others toward us. If one is angry, then an angry spirit, or feeling, proceeds from him, and those around can feel it, and thus know him. If he is in deep sorrow, then those in his company know his state of mind by the spirit he manifests. If he is very happy and joyful, he exhibits a corresponding spirit, and we know him by his spirit, or feeling.

Paul says:—"Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father." "The spirit of bondage," and "the spirit of adoption," are not two personalities, but represent two states of feeling, or two different states of mind. "The spirit of adoption" in a man, that leads him to "cry, Abba, Father," is not another intelligent agent which entered into him when he lost "the spirit of bondage"; but only another feeling.

We read in the Bible of "the spirit of wisdom," "the spirit of counsel," "the spirit of knowledge," "the spirit of jealousy," "the spirit of glory," "the spirit of error," "the spirit of fear," "the spirit of meekness," etc., etc. No one supposes that all these are so many different spirits, existing as conscious beings. So when we say a man has a "haughty spirit," or a "proud spirit," a "patient spirit," a "new spirit," a "perverse spirit," a "sorrowful spirit," etc., we do not mean that these are so many separate personalities, that will continue to live when the man is dead; but simply different feelings, or states of mind; which may be known by their manifestations, and read by the spirit, or feelings of those in their company.

The text in Job 14: 21, 22, reads as follows:—"His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them. But his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn."

The Hebrew word nephesh, rendered soul, occurs in the Old Testament seven hundred and fifty-two times, and psuche, the corresponding Greek word, is found in the New Testament one hundred and five times, making eight hundred and seventy-five times in all; and yet these original words are not rendered spirit once. The word ruach, rendered spirit in the O. T., occurs four hundred times, and the corresponding word pneuma is found in the N. T. three hundred and eighty-five times, making seven hundred and eighty-five in all; but they are not once rendered soul; which shows that the words spirit and soul are not used to represent the same thing in the Bible.

The question is now, what does soul mean in Job 14: 22? The word soul is used in three senses in the Scriptures: 1. To represent the whole being, whether man or beast. This no Bible student will deny, who has carefully examined the subject. 2. It is used to represent the life of either man or beast. 3. It is used, like the word spirit, to denote a state of mind, desire or feeling. Which of these three uses is applicable to the text under examination? It is not used to represent the primary signification of the word, i. e., the whole man; neither does it indicate, we think, his life; but his state of mind, or feeling. The previous verse forever settles the point that when a man is dead, he knows nothing of what is going on in this world. As Job says in chapter 16: 22, "When a few years are come, then I shall go the way whence I shall not return."

We learn from the passage under consideration (Job 14: 22), that when a man has pain in his flesh, he has a mourning feeling or desire within, that he may be relieved. The word nephesh, rendered soul, is frequently rendered desire. The following are examples: "The wandering of the (nephesh) desire.—Eccl. 6: 9. "Return into the land of Judah, to which they have a (nephesh) desire to return."—Jer. 44: 14. "He uttereth his mischievous (nephesh) desire."—Micah 7: 3. When we speak of Job's desire, or "soul within him," we do not mean another man inside of Job, but simply that he feels sorrow, or mourning, within himself.

If we should adopt the view held by some, we should make a strange meaning out of the passage; for some claim that the flesh is the body of Job, and the word him represents the real Job, who thinks, and wills, and reasons—the accountable person. If this view were true, then the "flesh upon" his soul would have pain, and "his soul within" his soul would "mourn." This would give Job two souls! Such is the result of straining a passage to make it mean what the Bible does not teach.

NEW TRACTS.—We have just received two new tracts from Bro. W. Sheldon, entitled "Is the coming of the Lord near?" and "Dodging the truth on the Prophetic Time." The first contains 16 12mo. pp., and the second 12 pp. These are good tracts to circulate.

KILLING A PRAYER MEETING.

"He killed the meeting." Who did? "Bro. A." How did he do it? "He talked so long. What he said was all good enough, but there was too much of it. He meant well, but it nearly killed the life of the meeting, and then Bro. B. finished it." Ah! how did he do it? "Why, he prayed so long that we were all glad when he got through. He prayed and prayed, and it did seem as though he never would get through. No one felt like praying or speaking when he got done." Don't you think these were good men? "O yes, I have not a doubt of it; but they most always spoil our meetings. I dread to see them get up to speak or pray. They seem to have very little knowledge of human nature and know still less about the best way to conduct a prayer meeting."

We often hear conversation like the foregoing, and know from many similar examples that we have witnessed that it is all true. It will be observed that when a church gets rather cold, the members are more liable to fall into the habit of long and tedious talking and praying; but when there is a revival, they are led to be short. The long prayers and exhortation generally tend to dry up the life of a meeting. This fact shows very clearly that such prayers and long talks are not in harmony with the teachings of the Spirit; because if they were, the humble children of the Lord would not be so grieved, or burdened, by the long prayers and exhortations. All, doubtless, have noticed that when each one is short, the meetings are much more interesting. This shows that the Lord is best pleased, because his children enjoy it best, and sinners are more readily reached in such meetings than where they talk and pray long. If one has more to say in a prayer meeting than he can utter in two or three minutes, as a general rule, we think he will do more good to divide it, and give only a part at a time. There is no objection to his speaking several times; indeed it often adds to the interest of the meeting.

When persons talk long they very commonly get on to some doctrine which is entirely foreign to the devotional interests of the meeting, which only tends to divert the attention from the real object of the meeting. There is a right time to advocate doctrine, but it is seldom best in a prayer meeting.

"Above all things avoid verbiage and prolixity, which are worse than anything yet mentioned. The most common way of killing a prayer meeting is to pray it to death. Instead of exhorting the meeting negatively and letting time run to waste, kneel down and pray from one to two minutes, no more, for the gift of the Holy Spirit and the tongue of fire. Repeat this remedy as often as the case may require, and you will find it a catholicon for that disease at all events. Except at the opening of the meeting, no one should ordinarily pray longer than three minutes. Half of that time would be far better. Not only shun verbiage, but avoid vain repetitions of your own thoughts and words, and of others' also. Pray, if you wish, for the blessing of God, in the form that may seem most necessary to you, upon every one present, but don't pray for everything you can think of, in the vestry prayer meeting.

You might as well pray (as I remember of hearing one brother,) for Sodom and Gomorrah. It requires much less faith for a Universalist to believe that all will be saved, than to believe for the salvation of his one soul. Just so those who pray in our vestries for the "conversion of a world lying in wickedness," have not faith to pray for the regeneration of a companion, friend or neighbor! Do not be in haste about the conversion of the world till those of your own family and acquaintance are saved. One going shopping on Washington Street would not enter a large store and ask for everything in general and nothing in particular unless a lunatic; so let us fix upon something definite, before going to God's storehouse of blessings, and then ask in faith for that very thing needed, and if we rightly ask we shall receive, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

Bro. Sheldon truthfully remarkes:

"Some people have a special gift for spoiling a good meeting by talking it to death, or praying it to death. The minister gets his sermon finished and leaves the congregation in excellent spirits, fully prepared to enjoy an excellent season in adding their testimony; the minister gives them on opportunity to speak, especially requesting them to be brief, that all may have an opportunity; but a long-winded brother gets up and begins to speechify, and seems not to know when to stop; and, perhaps, all he says might be in place, provided he should cut it up into about a dozen speeches, but as it is, it kills the spirit of the meetings, and when he gets through, the rest are all tired, and dispirited, and the meeting proves a drag; in short, the meeting is spoiled. Often it is a preacher who thus stabs the meeting to its very vitals. Let preachers be just as short as others in such meetings; there should, as a general rule, be less than three minutes occupied at a time; speak several times, if need be, rather than be lengthy, and thus, murder the meeting—let the long exhortation be given at the right time, but not in such a meeting of brief testimonies. Others will crowd in some theological item, good enough in its place, but out of harmony with the current of the meeting, and thus turn the meeting out of its proper channel to its ruin! O ye meeting-spoilers, reform."

The following from "Notes by the Way," by Bro. H. Munger, is worthy of a candid consideration:—

"Just as it seemed duty to call on sinners to enlist, and deserters to come back, the wheels were ignorantly blocked with a fifteen-minutes exhortation. The meeting running down, and it getting late, had to close.

Oh! when will good-meaning brethren learn where and when to work to advantage? Ever so good an exhortation out of place will hurt the spirit of a meeting especially if it is long, when we are in the quicktime of a meeting. It is no time for a death march to be played when we are about to charge bayonets on the enemy. Dont think hard because I am telling your faults. This is for all that read this paper. More efforts, or victories, are lost by having those in the attacking party that belong and can work to advantage on the defense. For God's sake brethren, do try to learn your place in the church. You may be a skillful engineer, and occupy an important position in defending—yet be right in the way in time of a charge. I often think of what Dr. Redfield said about Knapp and Finney having a protracted meeting—i. e., it would take them two weeks to get the church to know their places, and keep them. Some could build fires and sweep the house; others could invite their neighbors more effectually; others look out for order, finances, etc.; but a very few were adapted to take hold when the meeting got up to a working-point. Getting mourners forward to seek God; this must be wholly in the hands of those adapted for that part of the work, and selected out of the church for that work. They may not be any better christians, or of more use to the cause than others; but they can perform the work in the body that other members cannot. This we all know. Why not all regard it? Many times a good preacher has not this gift, and he cannot bear to have some one inferior to him occupy such an exalted position; so he takes the whole job, and fails. I have seen this hundreds of times in my life. We may be a moulder, and melter, too, and may not. I recollect when that blessed, godly man, Charles Fitch, had got through preaching at a campmeeting at Chester Factory. Sinners began to break down and come forward for prayer, and a number were calling for mercy. At once he ran out and called on (I think) Brn. Hastings, Allen, Miller, and others. The work, said he, is out of my reach, and you, God's firemen, must take it. And they did, after he let go; and the power of God came down, and many were converted in what some would call a whirlwind: some lost their strength, others shouted, and some of the more wise and prudent got scared and asked Bro. Fitch what he thought of such work. He shouted glory to God three times, and said, It is the work of God—out of my reach—let it run. But, said a man from Hartford, these men are not ministers that are praying. No, said Fitch, they are God's firemen, and they will work when it would scorch you and me; and we had better stand back and let it alone. This man went off and sat down, saying, if this was the work of God, he knew nothing of it. Perhaps he had been a cook or a nurse, and never saw a battle before. It was no sign he was not loyal, and had a place in the army, or body, and could perform his duty in his place.

Now, brethren, why not learn to keep our place in the church? I have suffered more in feeling from brethren trying to do what they cannot, and getting in my way when God puts the burden on me, than in any other way. If you speak about it, some will say you want to lord it over God's heritage; etc., as one did at the campmeeting last year. When I felt as if I must sink, when Bro. Pratt was getting sinners forward, two men, one from Rhode Island, the other from Granby, undertook to work just where God never put them; and everything they said and done only disgusted the mourners, and two left the circle before I spoke to them. Now it is time to speak and act in this matter, or we go back into formality, and lose the power of God for fear of speaking out and trying once more to set the church in order. . . .

Now let us all try to see what we can work at best, and go at it unitedly—be co-workers together for God; for the time is short for us to work; the pay-day is soon coming, and every man will be rewarded according to his work—not what he has set others a-doing. The time is very near when you will show this world such a display of sins that the great men will wonder, and then perish. The man is to be pitied who boasts of his courage enough to burn up such books as give the best evidence of Jesus' soon coming."

When will the people learn wisdom? How often must this point be urged before some will heed the exhortation to be short, if they would be heard with pleasure. A half a dozen short exhortations are much more interesting than one long one. All enjoy the short ones, while but very few are pleased with long. Try it. Let those who usually speak from five to twenty-five minutes cut down to two or three, and see how much better all will enjoy the meeting. They will find new life in it, and they may expect to see their numbers increase, as well as the good results of the meeting. We say again, try it.

THE CRITICAL CONDITON OF THE POPE.

The condition of the Pope is becoming very critical. If Napoleon takes away his troops as he has promised the Italians, the Pope cannot defend himself against his enemies, and must lose the last vestige of his temporal dominion. He is just beginning to realize his perilous position. The prospect is that the coming year will witness the end of the Pope's power; and if so, we may expect the dead will soon arise. We have never before had so strong evidence as now, that our Savior will soon appear.

A Paris correspondent of the New York Observer, under date of October, 1865, says:

"Affairs at Rome are just now the object of universal curiosity. . . . Pius IX. and the Cardinals have . . . blindly persuaded themselves that Napoleon III. would not dare to order the French garrison to leave Rome; and under this vague impression, they have taken no serious measures to defend themthemselves from the dangers to which the temporal power of the Pope will be exposed. . .

Faithful to his promise, Napoleon III. has announced that part of the French regiments will soon return to our country, and that the rest of the garrison will be recalled according to the terms of the treaty. . . . Thus the crisis is imminent. . . .

The pontifical treasury is in the greatest distress. All the money obtained by St. Peter's Pence is spent. . . . The Roman See has heavy debts which it is not in a condition to meet. . . . Poor Pius IX. is passing through dark days. He is upon the brink of an abyss, and seeks in vain for a way to escape the catastrophe which threatens him. . . . It is more and more probable that the temporal power of Popery has attained the last limit of its duration."

CLOTHING FOR THE FREEDMEN.

We are glad to see our brethren and sisters waking up to the wants of the Freedmen. We at the north have but a very faint idea of the destitute condition of the Freedmen at the south. There must be much suffering among them during the coming winter, unless a great effort is made at once by their friends at the north. Now is the time for action.

We have received some barrels of clothing from our Brn. and Srs., to be forwarded to the new mission.

MUSIC WANTED.

Bro. Gorham, who is assisting in arranging the new hymn book, writes as follows:—

"A large selection of hymns has been sent in, and with the exception of a few suitable for dedication occasions, and the funeral services of children, all that we desire; but the music is not forthcoming, only some half-dozen pieces having been received as yet. Now this is not as it should be. We wish to make the new book as perfect as possible, both in point of words and music; and this cannot be done unless the brethren lend a helping hand. There are quite a number of tunes in our ground-work (the Lyre) which ought to be expunged and their places supplied with better, to say nothing of the new hymns, which, in many cases, deserve new music. The compiler has no business nor inclination to plagiarize from copyrighted works, however good or popular the music; so his only (and proper) resource is among our musical brethren. Who will help in this matter? Let those who have already furnished us with contributions send more; and those who are competent and have done nothing, add their mite. We want a good Thanksgiving Anthem—want it badly; who will send one? Come, friends, wake up! tune up your harps and give us a strain for the benefit of the new book, and sacred music generally. Contributions will be received for three or four weeks, but probably no longer. SEND ON YOUR MUSIC. A. T. GORHAM.

A NEW YEAR'S PRESENT.

Would you make a welcome New Year's present to your little friends? Send them the Young Pilgrim for the coming year. Some have ordered it already for this purpose. Are there not others who would be glad to do so?

We shall try to make the visits of our little Pilgrim more valuable and interesting every month, and worthy of a glad welcome in thousands of happy homes, as it goes forth, a little missionary of Jesus, preaching words of truth and life, and cheering faithful pilgrims, young and old, with the comforts of the Blessed Hope and the glad tidings of Coming Joy.

Gentle reader, will you help extend its circulation? Will you make an earnest effort? Will you see that your own paper is sustained, and its usefulness enlarged? Let us ALL work, and work AT ONCE.

CHEERING RESPONSES.

"I expect, the coming year, with the blessing of God, to increase the circulation of the Young Pilgrim, by five or six hundred copies."

It is cheering to receive responses like that. It is from a noble-hearted friend of the young, who not long since ordered and paid for some two hundred and twenty-five copies, for several different schools in Michigan and Canada West.

It is an example worthy of imitation. The brother, perhaps, has means and opportunities no greater than many others have. But he loves the young, and wants to see them instructed in the truth, and prepared to meet Jesus in his soon coming kingdom. And so he does—what many others might do, if they would—he improves the means and opportunities which God has given, and does what he can. If every one would do that, we should have more than ten thousand subscribers in less than six months, and the influence and usefulness of the little Pilgrim Missionary would be proportionably increased.

Who will go and do likewise? W. B. H.

For the World's Crisis.

FROM A TEACHER TO THE FREEDMEN.

Bro. ADDISON WHEELER, a teacher in the employ of the National Freedmen's Relief Association, writes from Fort Baker, Washington, D. C.:—

BRO. HERRON:—I arrived at Washington on the morning of Oct. 18th, and reported myself to our Superintendent, A. E. Newton, and in the afternoon came out here to see the people. All appeared glad to see me, children and old people also. One man said, "I am proud to see you again." Another, "Bress de Lord! that you are back, to be among us again"; and others expressed joy at my return. One little girl hung on to my hand as though I was her nearest friend. She wanted to go with me all over the neighborhood.

I have over eighty scholars on my list, and shall probably average some sixty-five per month. I think some of starting a night school for adults who cannot come to the day school because they have to work to support their families. One man who wishes to come to the night school says, "I knows right smart now, but I wants to know better"; thus showing his desire to improve. I shall have but little to do with the night school, except to oversee it, and to see that every thing goes on right.

I have heard of several children who do not come to school because they have no clothes that are decent to be seen in. I wish I had something for them, so that they might not lose the opportunity of learning to read and spell; but I shall try to get something for them, some how. My scholars, for the most part, are doing very well. I have all that I can turn my hand to, to get along with so many; but I think the good Lord helps me, and I thank him for it.

Brethren and sisters, remember me at the throne of grace, that I may know and do the will of the Lord, and be in health, and have a home in the kingdom. My address is

"STOP THE CRISIS."

What can it mean, my dear brother and sister? Do you no longer love the children of God? Do you no longer wish to be numbered among them? Have you lost all interest in their warm, glowing letters—in their labors of love? Are you going back to the hollow world, now that the end of the journey is so near? Have you lost sight of the pearly gates and jasper wall. Has Christ died in vain for you? Oh, go back to the time when you first tasted of the riches of his grace. Think with what solemn vows you gave yourself to him; how sweet the peace was which fell upon you when you came up from burial with him to walk in newness of life. Have you forgotten it all? Have you forgotten how dead you were to the world then? How vain and worthless it all seemed, and with what deep, yearning love you longed for the coming of the holy and just One? Will you throw away your hope of a future life, that you may enter the worldling's gay circle of pleasure? Shall another take your crown? Have the wicked works of wicked men more charms for you than the pure and ennobling truths of the gospel?

Oh, my brother! my sister! beware! pause and think before you separate yourself from all communion with the body of Christ. You may not have weekly meetings to comfort and encourage you, how much more, then, do you need the weekly visits of your paper. Your brothers and sisters come thus to console you—do not deprive them and yourselves of this pleasant, though silent communion. You need "the Crisis," and "the Crisis" needs you. Don't stop it. The last day is coming soon. May God prepare us all for it, is the prayer of S. R. CHAPLIN.

THE GARDINER CONFERENCE.

The brethren and friends assembled in the new meeting-house, in the south part of Gardiner, Nov. 30th, in the evening; according to appointment. It is a newly opened door, through the labors of Bro. H. D. Reed. We found the mass of the people interested in the meeting, with open hearts and houses. Many of them have seen and love the truth. Some have been converted. Thus they were ready to welcome the gospel of the kingdom among them. A good attendance the first evening, with open ears. The congregation increased at each meeting, until the house was as full as it would hold.

A good number of the old soldiers were on hand to engage in the good word of the Lord. The preaching was good, and in the old style and spirit; neither Hebrew nor Greek, but simple plain English, which was backed up by the Holy Spirit, and made a deep and, we hope, an abiding impression on the hearts of the people.

The prayers and exhortations were from warm and loving hearts of faithful christians, and being blessed of God, made up one of the most interesting quarterly conferences we have ever held. Union and peace were some of the leading features of the meetings. Some of the exhortations were of the most interesting character, and one especially, the last evening, from a young believer, was as interesting and weighty as any speech of mortal tongue we ever heard. It seemed to come by the direct inspiration of the Spirit of God.

At this conference backsliders were made to see their sad condition. Some confessed, and began anew the service of the Lord. Sinners saw and felt their need of Christ, and several enlisted in his cause. Others are in trouble. We pray God they may come to Christ and find peace.

This was truly a heavenly sitting together in Christ. We trust the faith of Jesus' soon coming to gather his flock was advanced much by this effort. May the work go on until Jesus comes in all his glory.

AN APPEAL.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Wisconsin:—Our fourth annual meeting is past since we were known here as a separate conference, and our next quarterly meeting is at hand. Dear friends of Jesus, bear with a few words from me, a co-worker, relative to the cause here.

Although we are weak in numbers, and very much scattered, and, on account of the scarcity of preachers, can maintain preaching in no place only one quarter of the time, and some not that, yet, as many of us can testify, we have seen much good result from our feeble efforts, and many hearts are rejoicing to-day in hope of the glory of God, in consequence. Yet let me ask you a question,—in view of the increasing evidences in the prophetic word and signs of the times, that the day of toil is almost over, are we as earnest in the cause of our Master as we ought to be? Are we not only trying to keep ourselves in the love of the truth, by working out our salvation, but are we preachers and laymen trying in that earnest manner that we ought to be, by precept and example, to point our fellow men, who are soon to stand with us before the Judge, to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world? These, and other like reflections, suggested themselves to my mind when I saw so many vacant seats of our brethren and sisters at our last annual gathering.

Dear friends of the soon-coming Master, is it possible that amid the general crash of all that is godlike in our fallen world, and amid the gigantic efforts of our adversary to deceive, if possible, the very elect; and amid the worldly-mindedness and love of money which drown men in destruction and perdition, while these influences close in around us with all their chilling effect; I say, is it possible that any of those that have tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, should be cheated out of them? God forbid, and may we say, no, by the help of God.

As our next quarterly meeting will be at a seasonwhen the things of this world do not crowd very hard, let every one be at his post, armed and equiped, as the law directs, with "breast-plate," "helmet," "shield," and "sword," and the Lord will give us victory. Now, don't say, I am so weak I cannot do any thing. A pin is an important thing in a building. Let every church appoint delegates, and let us feel willing to make a sacrifice to come. Let us unitedly renew our covenants before the Lord, and with one another, and may our united testimony be, that we are fully able to go up and possess the land. A word to the wise is sufficient.

DENY THYSELF.

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."—Matt. 16 : 24.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I have a few words to say to you. I entreat you in the name of my Master to listen. We are living in a day of gluttony and feasting, when the people stuff themselves to repletion on rich food, and christians do so too, never a thought entering their minds that it is a sin in the sight of God to do so. Now, to those who are earnestly desiring to know the will of God and do it, I submit these thoughts.

Many thousands of dollars are squandered to glut the insatiate cravings of a morbid appetite; only making the eater dull and stupid in his intellect, sensual in his desires, even if it does not cause downright sickness.—Many are the complaints that the poor, distressed, and overloaded stomach utters in the shape of sick-headache, cholic, palpitation of the heart, vomiting, etc., because the people love to gratify the palate. Now, brethren and sisters in Christ, I earnestly beseech you,—you who profess to honor God in your bodies, to eat and drink to his glory.

Would it not be far better to use plain, simple food, that will supply the needs of the body just as well, and make your heart overflow with thankfulness, and give the money that a nice dinner would cost, to send the Crisis to the poor; or buy tracts to help the people to see the nearness of the coming judgment? Come, deny yourselves, and take up the cross. I am well aware that in nothing are people so sensitive as in relation to the appetite. Nothing will give offence so quickly as to talk to a man about his eating habits; yet, in no way do people cloy their bodies and benumb their spiritual perceptions, as by their violation of the laws of digestion. You will feel much richer towards God, and better in body and mind, if you heed the suggestions I have offered; and maybe be the means of saving souls from eternal death. Come, let us give up the momentary pleasures, and be wholehearted men for God. Thy Bro. in Christ,

East Weare, N H. G. Frank Locke.

IMPORTANT COUNCIL.

Bro. Grant:—Believing our brethren will be interested in hearing what is going on in other denominations, in relation to our peculiar doctrines, and not seeing any notice in the Crisis of an important council held in July last, to install Rev. J. E. Walton over the Third Congregational church in Portland, Me., I send some striking remarks on destruction, made by some members of the council, and its final decision. I take them from the New York Observer, the very noted Presbyterian paper:—

"The installation of Mr. Walton was urged upon the ground that he was simply an inquirer after the truth, and would not do the people much harm, as he did not intend to preach the condemned doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked, which he believed now, but might not believe after he had studied the subject farther.

Rev. Mr. Lee, in advocating the installation, spoke of the great progress going on in state and church,—said we were breaking through the crust of ages, the days of creeds; considered them as a relic of the dark ages, and not consistent with the light of this day. He expressed the thought that we were breaking up the crust of old constitutions, and should soon emerge into a new and more enlarged existence. Because this man (the candidate) happened to be caught upon this very point, on which he was in doubt, he ought not therefore to be condemned. Such a man ought not to be lost to the church; he was worth a great deal to Jesus Christ. It costs something to make such a man. The speaker himself had been shaken in his mind, on he did not know how many points."

"The moderator, Rev. Mr. Balkam, of Lewiston, Me., considered the undecidedness of the candidate on a single doctrine no bar. The inquisitiveness of Mr. Walton on the doctrine of annihilation was no hindrance to his preaching faithfully the great doctrine of the eternal punishment of the wicked. The speaker asserted that he had no sympathy with the doctrine; but referred to many good men who he supposed believed in it, and thought more than one hundred ministers in our denomination were in a state of doubt on this point."

The result of the council was, they refused to install, but only by two majority—eleven for, and thirteen against him. In the same paper it is said that

"A council in July, 1864, refused to install Mr. Walton, but the church had continued him as pastor, and have engaged him for another year, notwithstanding the second refusal to install him."

I am happy to see in this transaction what I have long believed would come to pass, when our views were generally spread, viz., that the horrible doctrine of endless misery would have to be discussed in councils, Methodist conferences, and Baptist associations; and thus get into other papers besides our own. When this takes place, truth will spread tenfold faster than now. Their motto has been keep dark; for they have been learning slowly, from our efforts, that they "live in glass houses," and a general battle would be fatal to their human traditions and creeds.

As the Observer and Independent publish the above remarks, and result, they have done us much good in bringing our views before, say fifty thousand christians; many of whom know but little of what is going on in christendom, on the subject of future punishment. If one speaker "knew one hundred who were in doubt as to the common doctrine," even in one denomination, others exist in other sects, some of whom will soon get more light, and get moral courage to proclaim their views, as it seems Mr. Walton has done. Surely, we "labor not in vain" on this point of reform, whatever may be the result of proclaiming the time question. J. Blain.

SIGNS.

Many strange sights and sounds have been seen and heard in these last days, calculated to awaken men to a sense of their nearness to the great day of the Lord. The following was published in the Advent Herald, Nov. 4th, 1862. It was communicated by Bro. Abner N. Kendall:—Ed.

Dear Bro. Bliss:—In my late tour into Monroe Co., I went partly for the purpose of looking up antiquities; and in my researches I came across an old pamphlet of ancient date [1813] which I think goes to show that God has raised up men in every age of the world to give evidence to us of what is to befall all the nations in the last days, and to set forth the signs of the near approach of the Son of man. I send it to you, and if you think it worth a place in the Herald, you are at liberty to give it publicity. I also met an old man, one hundred and four years of age, with whom I tried to converse; his faculties were so far gone that I found it difficult to elicit any thing of importance; he was a firm believer in the coming of the Lord, said there had got to be a great battle fought previous to that event. Such is the foundation and climax of the old man's hope. Yours in haste, Abner N. Kendall.

THE SWORD, OR, A SIGN FROM HEAVEN.

Feeling it a duty incumbent on me to communicate to my fellow men what has been so remarkably revealed to me, I shall attempt to communicate, as far as my memory and illiterate abilities will admit, a faithful narrative of a most remarkable phenomenon of which I was an eye witness.

On the 26th of March, 1798, as I was on my journey with a team from Woodstock, in Connecticut, the place of my nativity, to Burlington, in Vermont, on the evening of the 27th of said month, I called for entertainment at the house of Capt. J. Bissell, innholder in Chelsea. After some time spent in the evening in conversation with some gentlemen on the unhappy situation of our country, as it respects foreign powers, its internal divisions, etc., by reason of so many designing characters among us, who are actuated more from sinister views than any real patriotic zeal for the general welfare, with a mind burdened with these reflections I retired to my lodging at an early hour. Whether the conversation of the evening had a tendency to influence the vision of the night, I will not determine, but as no one ever paid less attention to the rambles of moqus than myself, I conceive there must be something evidently supernatural in the singular phenomenon I am about to relate.

A few minutes before the clock struck one, as I conceived, I awoke, and turning my eyes towards the window, beheld an uncommon gleam of light, which induced me to leap from my bed. I looked out, but nothing strange appeared, it being no other than an agreeable twilight night. I again got into bed, with a view of getting a little more refreshment by sleep; but it was without effect. After musing some time on the conversation of the evening, and the events which caused it, I was surprised at something resembling a field-piece, and the clashing of swords, as I conceived it, which I saw plainly through the window. At the same time a bright light appeared in the room, as though the moon in the height of its lustre had shone directly upon me. I raised myself in bed, but immediately sank back with terror and surprise, and lay some minutes motionless. At length methought I heard an audible voice, which I conceived not human, call me by my name, and said, "Arise and give ear to the messenger of Heaven, for you shall be witness of the signs which shall be given of the perilous days which are coming on the earth, by reason of the innumerable sins and dissensions so prevalent among mankind, especially in this favored land: for saith the Lord—'I have delivered this people, like the children of Israel, from the tyranny of a powerful nation, and fain would have gathered them as a hen gathereth her chickens under her, but they would not hearken to the voice of wisdom; they have become a rebellious and disobedient people, lusting as it were after the luxuries of Egypt, boasting in their own strength, and pregnant with evils innumerable: but their peace is destroyed; wars and rumors of wars shall there abound, both national and civil; the father shall rise against the son, and the son against the father. For a great and powerful nation have I chosen to be a scourge unto all other nations of the earth; even the most haughty shall bow to them,—for the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong; but by an Almighty arm the nations of the earth shall be made to know that the Most High reigneth.' This nation shall lay waste your seaports, and utterly destroy your navigation. She shall infest your sea-coast with the fleets of all the conquered nations, and her armies shall swarm round you like the flies and gnats of Egypt, for a season; until they shall know that the Lord giveth and taketh at his pleasure. And for a sign of these times shall you be a witness of the angel descending with a long flaming sword in his hand, which shall turn to every point to prepare the way for ushering in the glorious day. Then shall the sword be transformed into an olive branch, which shall arise and overspread the horizon, and appear as emblematical of the harmonious day in which all nations and languages shall be gathered into one family, and all become of one heart and mind to serve under the peaceable government of Him whose sceptre sways all worlds."

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. K. Flagg.

Bro. Grant:—I suppose there are some anxious hearts waiting for a voice from the South. I can only say our mission has been delayed for a few days on account of severe sickness in Bro. Himes' family. But they are now improving, and we are making all necessary arrangements to leave here for Chicago on Thursday of this week, where we are to remain over next Lord's day; where, also, we are to finish our arrangements, and leave Chicago next Monday, one week from to-day, for the South. We intend to stop at St. Louis, perhaps one week, and establish a mission there if possible. Then our next move will be to take the steamboat at St. Louis, Mo., for Memphis, Tenn. You will hear from us in due time.

I left Savoy, Mass., for Chicago, Nov. 6th. On my way I stopped three days with my son and eldest daughter. Found them well and trying to do well. Many of our brethren and sisters East will remember the time when they both gave their hearts to the Lord, at Wilbraham campmeeting, one year ago last August. Since then they have been called to pass through many trials and perplexing difficulties, yet they believe in the glorious truths we preach, and are exceedingly anxious to have meetings where they can attend and hear the Bible preached. Oh, how it did cheer my poor heart to hear them talk about these blessed truths, and manifest so much interest in them.

Dear brethren and sisters, if you ever pray for me, pray also for my dear family, whom I have left in the Lord's hands, while I go to preach to others. With an anxious and heavy heart, I left them Saturday morning, Nov. 11th, to finish my journey to Chicago, Ill., where I remained until last week Wednesday, when I came to this place.

During my stay in Chicago I preached five or six times to the few brethren in that city. Notwithstanding it is a large city of 175,000 inhabitants, yet there is no Advent church, neither do they hold meetings of their own, unless some pilgrim preacher happens to come among them. One week ago yesterday I preached three times in the Odd Fellows' Hall in Chicago, to a large audience, on the evils, corruptions, and pernicious influence of Spiritualism. The notice drew together a large number of Spiritualists, who came in a body from their own meeting. At the close of the afternoon service, one of their leading members gave me an invitation to preach the same sermon next Sunday afternoon, at Smith and Nixon's Hall, which is the largest hall in the city. I have promised to do so. Bro. Himes was with me through the day. He will also be with me next Lord's day and evening at Odd Fellows' Hall. The next day we leave for the South.

I am now stopping with the brethren here in Buchanan. A conference of Advent believers is now being held in this place, which continues over next Sabbath. This is the home of Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, Bro. Himes, and other good brethren, who came from the East. It is the most pleasant town and people I have met with since leaving the East. It contains 1500 inhabitants, five meeting-houses, quite a number of stores, steam and other mills, together with two large flour mills, giving it an appearance of much activity. Bro. Himes' office is pleasantly situated in the centre of the village, where also is the printing establishment for the Voice of the West. They have two large rooms; one of which is used as the editor's room, where a large assortment of books, Bibles and tracts are kept for sale. The other room is used as the compositor's room, and printing office. Bro. Himes, together with three members of his family, and three others, complete the number of hands engaged in the work of the office. The printing of the Voice is done upon a large power press, which cost about fourteen hundred dollars. It is now worked by two men, but the brethren are making an effort to raise about two hundred dollars more for a small steam engine, for the purpose of working the press by steam.

Bro. Munger is here, and will remain during the conference; then he leaves for the East. You ought to have seen us when he met me last Saturday. It was like meeting each other after a resurrection. I think Bro. Munger is anxious to get East again. (See in his "Notes by the Way," published in the Voice of the West.) But I feel very well contented out here, so long as I can work for the Lord. When we commence work in St. Louis I will write you again. Dear brethren and sisters, will you pray for us? Do, and may the Lord bless you. Amen.

Waiting to see the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls, H. K. Flagg.

Buchanan, Mich., Nov. 27th, 1865.

From Sr. E. S. Brigham.

Bro. Grant:—Paul has told us that "in the last days perilous times shall come," when men would be "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," and who cannot see, that will see, that we are in the very days spoken of by Paul? When I hear of the crimes that are daily committed all around us, my soul cries out with John the Revelator, "Come, Lord Jesus," and "come quickly," and end these scenes of cruelty. But O I have friends out of Christ, who are not ready to see Jesus. I have one daughter. Other mothers have daughters. Yes, many of our brethren and sisters have children that are not ready to meet the Savior; but this prayer of John's will soon be answered, and what is done for our children, and for a lost world, must be done quickly. I pray the Lord to roll upon his people a burden for souls. I believe the Lord is stirring up his people, and getting them ready for that day. Many have been, and some are still buried up beneath the pride and fashion, and applause of this world, living in their fine mansions, with all the luxuries that money can buy; while that poor, widowed sister, and that old and infirm brother, struggle along to procure the necessaries of life.

Many of our brethren are very benevolent, but there is still more to be done. Keep the shovel moving, brother, and shovel out as fast as the Lord shovels in. You know the Lord's shovel is the largest. O if we were not such selfish creatures, and could feel that we are not to live for ourselves alone, but for the good of others, how much more might be accomplished. But thanks be to God, the time is near at hand, when there will be equality; when the hidden ones, those that the world have not known, but known to Jesus, will have a mansion. Yes, one that will outshine any that man can build. I expect to have one then. I will be content to live as a pilgrim and stranger a little longer, and strive to please my Master, if I may be permitted to enter those pearly gates, and walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem.

Your sister in hope of eternal life,

Westboro, Mass. E S. Brigham.

From Bro. A. W. Sibley.

Bro. Grant:—I am happy to say that the result of a protracted meeting held in this place has been, that between thirty and forty have started for the kingdom. We commenced our meetings the 23d ult., and have continued them every evening. The whole community is stirred. God is working wonderfully. His great name have all the praise.

Your brother in Christ, A. W. Sibley.

P. S. We have had no one to help us in this meeting but the brethren in this place.

Woodstock, N. H. A. W. S.

Bro. Woodruff writes from Madison, Ct.:—"We had a blessed time there last evening. Some twelve or fifteen requested prayers. Among them several old backsliders from other churches. The power of God attended our labors."

Dr. Cumming.—Of Dr. Cumming, who is the great Scotch preacher of London, and who ceases not to lecture and write on the second coming of Christ, an English review gives the following personal description:

His singularly handsome person, his brilliant flow of poetic thoughts, his striking talents, and his burning zeal, combine to make him one of the most interesting speakers of the day. Mr. Cumming is very small in person, not exceeding five feet four or five inches in height, with a slender and graceful figure. His face is one of the most beautiful I have ever seen, for he is altogether too diminutive to be called strictly handsome. His hair is of a jet black, with a soft, waving curl upon it; his complexion resembles alabaster, with a deep damask color; his forehead is high and finely formed, and his eyes are concealed by invisible spectacles. His nose is acquiline, but very large; and the lower part of his face is as perfect as that of some Greek statue, with the addition of beautiful teeth. Altogether, he is what his countrymen call a very "bonnie chiel," and he would really be incomparable were he only magnified. His manner is very unassuming; he never puts himself forward, but remains behind the speakers. While silent he has all the meekness of a tractile child; but when he speaks he displays all the vigor and energy of an young eagle.

Obituaries.

Perkins. Died Nov. 7th, 1865, at the Insane Asylum, Brattleboro, Vt., Alvora Perkins, aged sixty-four years and ten months.

He embraced the Savior when quite young, and joined the Christian Church in Woodstock, of which he was a member until the year 1821 or '22, when he removed to Stockbridge, and was a member of the Christian Church in Stockbridge until 1842, when he heard and embraced the doctrine of Christ's second coming, as preached at that time. He has been a firm believer in the Advent doctrine ever since.

He spent all he had of this world's goods trying to recover his health, but in vain. Some time in August last he became insane, and it was thought proper to carry him to the insane asylum, to see if any thing could be done for his benefit, where he spent the last seven weeks of his life.

The funeral was attended at Gaysville, by J. Ashly. A very appropriate discourse for the occasion was given from 2 Tim. 4 : 6-8, by the request of the deceased while in his right mind.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Nov. 23d, Queenstown 24th.

The reported arming of the Pigeon House Fort at Dublin is confirmed. Rumor accounts for it by the alleged appearance of a doubtful vessel in the channel. Magazine Fort, Phenix Park, Dublin, is similarly strengthened. It is alleged that these movements are not attributable to Fenianism, but to increased discipline under Sir Hugh Rose.

Public meetings are taking place in Manchester to demand from the government the most searching investigation into the proceedings in Jamaica.

The Austrian government has ordered the release of all the political prisoners arrested by the Gallacian authorities from 1863 to the present time.

TWO DAYS LATER.

Liverpool Nov. 24th, Queenstown 25th.

A dispatch from Dublin announces that Stephens' the Head Centre of the Fenians, escaped from prison at 2 o'clock on the morning of the 24th. No particulars have been received, but great excitement is said to have prevailed.

DOMESTIC.

Th Fenians.—The Fenians are thoroughly in earnest in their work. They have taken a spacious mansion in New York as their headquarters of government there. Great Britain is moved from center to circumference, by the bold action taken by the order. They have issued bonds and put them in the stock market for the purpose of raising funds; and these bonds have found a market in the cities of Canada. Where they mean to strike is a secret; and this secrecy increases the danger and the impossibility of knowing where to prepare for defence. The world is being moved to its extremities, and seems preparing for an universal onslaught. Murders, robberies, incendiarianism, wars, pestilence, locusts, and famine are abroad in the earth.—Advent Herald.

☞ A Brooklyn gentleman was followed into his residence by a desperado, a few nights since, and choked until he handed over to the villain the contents of his purse, which amounted to $103.

How to clean Ribbons.—In these hard times all economical hints are acceptable. The following recipe has stood the test of experiment: Wet the ribbon in alcohol, and fasten one end of it to something firm; hold the other in your hand, keeping the ribbon out straight and smooth; rub it with a piece of Castile soap until it looks decidedly soapy, then rub hard with a sponge, or, if very much soiled, with the back of a knife, keeping the ribbon dripping wet with alcohol. When you have exhausted your patience, and think it must be clean, rinse thoroughly in alcohol, fold between cloths, and iron with a hot iron. Don't wring the ribbon; if you do, you will get creases in it that you cannot smooth out.

Tallow Candles.—The "Scientific American" gives the following recipe, which will be of value to those who make tallow candles: Steep the cotton wick in water in which has been dissolved a considerable quantity of nitrate of potassa—chlorate of potassa answer better, but it is too expensive for common practice; by this means a purer flame and superior light are secured, a more perfect combustion is insured, and snuffing is rendered nearly as superfluous as in wax candles. The wicks should be thoroughly dried before the tallow is put to them.

HEED THE COUNSEL OF THE WITNESS.

REV. 3: 14-19.

TUNE—"Annie Lyle."

Down to the time of trouble
We are hasting fast,
When probation's hours so precious,
Will have all been past.
Soon Jesus will have finished
Pleading for us all;
Soon the voice of mercy slighted
Never more will call.

CHO.—Heed the counsel of the Witness,*
And his each command,
That when he shall cease his pleading,
You may safely stand.

How is it with us, brethren,
Are our hearts in love,
One as Jesus with the Father†
In the courts above?
Are our garments pure, unspotted
By one stain of sin,
And the seal of Jesus' favor
Stamped on all within?

CHO.—Heed the Witness, search you deeply,
Prove yourselves,‡ be true,
And with God's whole armor girded,§
In his strength go through.‖

Perfect, pure, no spot or wrinkle,¶
One in Jesus' love
We must be, if we would enter
In his courts above.
But if not,—the thought how dreadful,
We must filthy be!
And in dire dismay must perish,
Lost, eternally!

CHO.—O be zealous,* O be faithful,†
Make your calling sure,‡
And with God's whole armor girded,
To the end endure.§

Gird you for the mighty conflict,
Still the hope is given,
If you heed the faithful Witness,
You may enter heaven;
For the true and faithful Witness
Counsels us in love,
And, a few brief moments waiting,
Pleads for us above.

CHO.—O, be zealous, heed the counsel,
Christ will quickly come,‖
And, by angel hosts attended,
Take his children home;
Then be zealous, heed the Witness,
And his each command,
That when he shall cease his pleading,
You may safely stand.

Worcester. M. E. HASKELL.

For the World's Crisis.

EIGHT WEEKS.

According to notice, Bro. Jonas Wendell, of Edenboro, Pa., and myself, began our grove meeting in Fairfield, O., on Saturday, Sept. 9th, and continued over Sunday. On Monday, Brn. Wendell and I. M. Judson came home with me and tarried over night, when we had a good time in searching the Scriptures, to see if "these things" were so, and making prayer and supplication to God for a more perfect and entire consecration to him and his truth, as well as sanctification of soul, body and spirit, that we might walk blameless before the world while in the Lord's service, accompanied with spiritual songs of thanksgiving and praise to God for all his mercies and loving kindness towards us and all his believing children scattered abroad. On Tuesday morning these two old working men left for Norwalk, and on Thursday I went to fill regular appointments at Bucyrus, Nevada and Eden, leaving Bro. W. to return to Fairfield and repeat the grove meeting of the Sunday previous, which he carried through alone, laboring on at the Penfield school-house until Thursday evening following, during which time there were several new converts, and some old backsliders reclaimed. The Lord grant "them the gift of continuance," so that they may this time remain steadfast, "cleaving unto the Lord with full purpose of heart."

On Thursday I returned from Nevada, having in my absence perfected the arrangements for other meetings; and on Friday, Jonas joined me at Olena, and preached in the evening to a good congregation, in the M. E. house, from Titus 3: 11-13. After meeting several of my neighbors came in to hear more of the "songs of Zion," with one of which all were delighted, which I insert here.

"OVER THE RIVER."

"I have heard of a land that is ever bright,
Where friends never change or fade from our sight;
To meet my dear Savior who thither will come,
With all the redeemed, my spirit doth long.

CHORUS.

I want to cross over, don't you, where HE reigns,
And join the bright angels on Eden's fair plains?
I want to be gathered with all the redeemed,
'Tis over the river, where the fields are all green.

I have heard that there flowers are always in bloom,
And always send forth the richest perfume;
I have heard that no sickness or death will be there,
No sin to molest or fill with despair.

• • • • • • •

I have heard that the blest on that happy shore
Shall never be hungry or thirst any more;
I have heard that all tears shall be wiped from the eye,
For that happy land my spirit doth sigh.

Then on let us press, for Jesus is near,
And strengthen each other with words of good cheer;
With zeal ever buoyant, and courage ne'er slack,
Let's be true to our King, and never draw back.

On Saturday morning we left for Bro. D. C. Jefferson's in Berlin, Erie Co., and held our grove meeting on Saturday and Sunday. Hoping to keep the crowd by saving the best of the wine for the last of the feast, it was arranged for me to preach in the morning, and Bro. Wendell in the afternoon; when he was cut short in his discourse and the congregation lost a rich treat by a severe thunder shower. In the evening began preaching in the M. E. Chapel and continued through the week. On Thursday one rose for prayers, and on Friday three went forward. On Saturday morning left Bro. W. to close the meeting Saturday night, as he was engaged at Norwalk on Sunday, and myself at Nevada and Union.

On Tuesday returned to Shiloh and began the meeting there in the school-house, expecting Bro. W. to begin in Plymouth at the same time; but the subjoined notice having been posted up at the "Fair grounds" and some other places, a misapprehension of the paragraph in Italics caused the friends having control of the Hall to object to the use of the same, which had heretofore been very generously and freely tendered for our use; and while I feel truly thankful for those favors conferred and accepted, I would here say that I must confess my surprise that so notorious a fact as that embraced in the Italicized sentence should have been so construed as to suggest the idea of a personal application. I had never had a suspicion that there was any one in P., professing christianity, who would confess themselves "filled" by so old a coat as that. I hope they will think better of it, and by retracing their steps, recall the implied confession, and allow us to "occupy," and still find them friends and brethren, as of old. We certainly cherish none other than the kindest feelings towards them.

STOP AND READ!
Another Great Change in the Administration of Government!
THE OLD PARTY COMING INTO POWER!

More than eighteen hundred years ago, there was a great stir about a certain man, whose name was Jesus, being made a King. He had a small party, but the great mass of the people hated and rejected him, and finally put him to death. But it is confidently believed and affirmed that he arose from the dead, and being a descendant on his Father's side, of the God of heaven, he ascended up thither to receive an appointment to the kingdom from his Father.

The party, though small, have not become extinct; they have suffered much from the kingdoms of this world, also from traitorous hypocrites, who have professed friendship for this absent King, but who in reality were the friends of this world, and his greatest enemies. But the hopes and expectations of said party are now especially strengthened by the unsettled state of the nations, and they have received information from the most reliable source that their King will return, break in pieces and consume all the kingdoms on earth, and destroy all persons opposed to his reign. All his true friends will be spared.

With the hope of increasing the party to be saved in the great day of his power, his friends will hold a series of meetings, etc.

In the meantime a letter had been sent to Bro. W., at Norwalk, apprising him of the proceedings, and stating that his coming would be useless, as there was no place to preach in; fortunately, however, I had taken my wife along to Shiloh, as I went up to Nevada; and she, having gone over to Bro. P. T. Light's to visit her sister in P., learning how matters stood, wrote another note to Bro. W., requesting him to come on to P. She then went to work to procure a meeting-house, and on the third day, Sr. Hoffman joining her in the undertaking, the two succeeded in obtaining the M. E. house, and Jonas having arrived, held forth in the evening.

During all this time, I was "firing away" in Shiloh, blissfully ignorant of what was transpiring in P.; but on Thursday concluded to walk over to P. and see how matters were progressing there, and found Bro. W. very much indisposed, unable to sit up, and suffering severely. So any further effort at carrying on the meeting in P. was abandoned, and leaving Bro. W. at Bro. Light's, we all (five) went to Shiloh.

After meeting, rode back to P., and in the morning Bro. W., being somewhat improved by rest and quiet, informed me that, at a funeral which had recently occurred in P., he was told the preacher had characterized the doctrine of "the sleep of the dead" as "a damnable doctrine," while two, if not three or more, of the relatives of the deceased were themselves firm believers in it. So W. proposed that I should write a note to the gentleman, stating the case, and invite him to substantiate his declaration from the word of God, also to discuss the side issues of life and immortality in Christ, and he would deliver the note, or he would write and I deliver, which latter was done accordingly; but not finding the Rev. at home, the invitation was left at his house, and an answer subsequently obtained, which will appear in its place.

While matters were adverse at P., providence was on our side at Shiloh. On Friday evening, the Democrats wanted the school-house to hold political meetings in, and the Republicans wanted it for the same purpose on Saturday night, in consequence of which we had both parties electioneering for us, to the end that I might have the Lutheran house to hold my meeting in, so that they could get the other. The old maxim of "divide and rule" was of no utility here, but "combine and succeed" worked like a charm. The devil's forces, it may be, opened the doors for us, but the Lord got the glory of it, and we the house, and well filled up to Sunday night. This was the same place where the U. B.'s had shut me out of their house ten or twelve months previous, an account of which I wrote to the Crisis in Jan. last; and this was what had come of it, for "they that turned the world upside down had come hither also."

On Friday night Bro. Langarl of Cincinnati came, also one of the young converts from Berlin, with a request for Bro. W. to return there, as the interest would not "out." On Saturday night Bro. Snyder of Mansfield and Bro. H. A. King of Nevada came, and the Shilohese began to think "the promised time had come."

On Sunday afternoon had an interview with the Rev. ———, to whom I had been the bearer of a dispatch from Jonas and succeeded in obtaining a response.

He saw no necessity for discussion.

If we were in error, it should seem to be his duty to show it us, and a discussion of those questions might have so desirable a result.

Surely it was INFIDELITY.

That is the very thing we deny, and wish you openly to substantiate, if you can, from the Bible.

He would not discuss with infidels.

Brother, you should be more careful how you characterize those who believe the word of God and trust in Jesus Christ for salvation as infidels.

O! you are all right THERE.

How do you say, then, we are infidels?

Well, he did not wish to discuss, and would not.

Do you wish me to convey that, as your answer?

Yes, sir. Which was duly reported.

On Monday Bro. W. went back to Berlin, and Bro. S. accompanied him, leaving me to close the meeting at S. in the evening. We had a glorious good time in Shiloh, and succeeded in sowing some "good seed." We left the people of Shiloh on Tuesday morning searching their Bibles as they had never searched them before, intending to reach Nevada by noon and begin meeting there the same evening; but at Crestline were detained eight hours by the colliding of freight cars, in consequence of which we were too late in, arriving in the dark and rain, but found Bro. Nelson King in waiting with a horse and buggy, who took us to his home and made us comfortable for the night.

Nevada, situate on the P. H. W. and C. R. R., in Wyandotte Co., O., is the home of brothers H. A. and N. King, of "Bee" notoriety, who have acquired a well-earned reputation as being among the very best Apiarians in the U. S.; and their apiary of large golden-colored, Italian bees, presents a rich treat for the amateurs in the art of Bee-keeping to feast their eyes upon.

But Bro. Homer is as great a lover of the truth as he is an amateur in bee culture, and has managed this field with as much adroitness as he has his apiary with skill, and the best of it all is, he makes the latter secondary to the former. He looks upon his bee culture as every man should look upon his business, i. e., as only a means by which he may have the resources of doing good and spreading the truth in the world; consequently seems to be as conscientious in his bee traffic as he is in his religion. He has, according to his means, paid more money, scattered more tracts, and spent more time for the cause, than any other man that I know of not older than he is.

LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

BRO. GRANT:—It gives me joy to see the leaders of our brethren manifest love to each other. I love to have the watchmen see "eye to eye"; but if they cannot quite do that, the next thing to it is to have them love each other in spite of minor differences. Let each one be willing to ignore all the good himself has done, and acknowledge the good done by his brethren. "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, and he will exalt you in due time."

Do not be too anxious about your "good name," but let your Master take care of that. If you don't get quite all the credit you deserve now, so much the better. You will have it all with compound interest by and by. If the printer accidentally omits a few words in one of your articles, and so alters, or possibly spoils the sense of your writing, don't get nervous about it. The great cause of our blessed King is not at all damaged by that typographical error, or unintentional omission, and we will rejoice that in all these things "we are more than conquerors through him that loved us." SILENCE KEEP.

If a storm of sudden rage
Meet thee on thy pilgrimage,
Move on calmly 'neath the strife;
Silence keep, for death or life,
Silence keep!

Let no words escape thy tongue,
Though bad hearts thy heart would wrong,
Peace! the trial is not long;
Silence keep!

Better be misunderstood,
Though thy cause to thee seem good,
Than to speak in angry mood.
Silence keep!

Of unruly words beware,
Else thy tongue shall prove thy snare;
Then, till thou hast thought a prayer,
Silence keep!

In the field of human deeds
Flowers may grow as well as weeds,
For their sake sweet Mercy pleads.
Silence keep!

Then, if thou wilt silent be,
Thou shalt hear heaven's minstrelsy,
As sweet Mercy pleads for thee.
Silence keep!

Silent as the flowers that sleep
In a midnight silence deep,
Silent as the tears you weep:
Silence keep!

NUMBER TWENTY-FOUR.

DAVID'S FIRST VICTORY.

The Philistines had invaded Judah, and king Saul had gathered his forces to oppose his progress. The hostile hosts were assembled upon the opposite mountains that overlook the pleasant vale of Elah. But ere the battle-charge had sounded, a mighty champion appeared on the side of the Philistines, who defied the armies of Israel, and demanded a hero to oppose him. Goliah, the terrible giant of Gath, was no common foe,—nearly ten feet high, clad in an armor of brass, and bearing a spear with a staff like a weaver's beam, he seemed an animated tower upon the plain, between the expectant armies. His huge form, menacing looks, and bold defiance, struck terror into all hearts; and not one of all the warriors of Israel could be prevailed upon to accept the defiant challenge, but all fled from his presence.

For forty days this champion appeared each morning and evening, and insulted the warriors of Israel, and mocked their God whom he boasted could not deliver them out of his hand. At length the youthful David, sent by his venerable father Jesse, to inquire after his brethren, appeared upon the scene. When he listened to the boasting of the heathen Goliah, his heart was moved with indignation that no one was to be found to remove the reproach from Israel. The noble bearing of David was reported to the king, who sent for him. Then, in the presence of Saul and his captains, he offered to go alone and fight the champion of the Philistines; and when the king endeavored to dissuade him, David said, "Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock; and I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth; and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him and slew him. Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear; and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the holy God." David reasoned that, as the Lord had delivered him from the power of the fiercest beasts, he would also deliver him out of the hand of the giant foe of Israel. Saul was assured by this testimony, and bade him go in the name of the living God. Then he armed David with his own armor and coat of mail; but this youth, so unused to war and its habiliments, yet so bold, could not go in the armor of the great king of Israel; he must go as the Lord had designed, unarmed, and in the simple garb as he had ranged his own wild hillocks when a shepherd boy. He would not go in the vain strength of man, but in the might of the Lord of hosts

Thus David went, armed only with the exalted faith of his future glorious destiny. With his simple sling only, he went to meet the foe before whom the bravest had fled. The gaze of the battle-arrayed hosts was upon him; but he faltered not. The danger before him appalled him not. His memory of the past, his lofty faith, his hopes of the distant future, sustained and urged him on. As he passed over the brook that flows through the vale of Elah, he selected five smooth stones from their pebbly bed, with which to execute his daring purpose. When Goliah came nearer David, he was disappointed. His pride was insulted, for he had hoped to meet a foe worthy of his strength, if such an one could be found; but when he saw the fair unarmed youth before him, he reviled him for his temerity, thus rashly to court certain death, saying, "Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves?" And he cursed David, and swore by the idol gods he worshipped he would give his flesh to the fowls of the air and the beasts of the field. But David was not dismayed; for he assured Goliah that, although he came with sword and spear and brazen shield, he would be overthrown by the power of the God of Israel, whom he had def[illegible]. Then as David hastened to meet him, he described a swift circle or two with his sling, and let fly a stone that sank deep into the forehead of the defiant heathen, who fell with a sound that shook the earth. David was upon the fallen foe in a moment, and with the giant's own sword he severed his head from his body, and bore it away in triumph.

Intensely had the assembled armies watched this scene. The Philistines had followed their hero with unbounded hope and exultation. They never dreamed but of victory. It had been otherwise with the Israelites. They watched with the deepest solicitude the departure of the stripling on his way to sure death, as it seemed to them. They knew not his faith, his noble purpose, his lofty destiny; history that was to thrill the ages. But the terrible champion fell, and there was a cry of terror and dismay in the camp of the Philistines. Their tower of strength had fallen, and they turned to flee, for they thought their gods had turned against them. There arose a shout of triumph and exultant victory from the hosts of Israel, that even made the distant hill-tops echo. The brook, that late had flowed so pure through the green vale of Elah, now became crimsoned with the blood of the slain Philistines, who fled and were pursued till the gates of Gath, or Ekron, opened to receive the survivors of the terrible overthrow.

That day was the heathen foe humbled, and the God of Israel glorified by the abiding faith of the youthful David. And when the victors returned to their homes that night, they were met by the fair daughters of the cities of Israel, with song and dance; and as they sang, they answered one another,—"Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands."

Thus opens the career of David, the future king of Israel, the triumphant warrior, the sweet singer, the beautiful player on the harp of Judah, the man after God's own heart.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

BRO. GRANT:—In reading Bro. Burbank's article, entitled "Sunday Schools," I hasten to say every word is true. Let every reader of the Crisis read that article again. Oh, how much is lost by the sad neglect of our people in not having more Sunday Schools. It does seem as if we were blind to our greatest interest in this matter. But not so with the nominal churches of the land. They know as well as Sampson did wherein their great strength lieth, and so they act. Every little church, no matter how small, all over the country, has connected with it a Sunday school, and their labor is crowned with success. From these schools every year the churches are constantly acquiring their members, either by converted, or unconverted Sunday school scholars. Many of them, no doubt, are truly converted to the Lord.

Not long since, the three Methodist churches in this city met together for a general love-feast. I was present and listened to their testimonies, and there were scores of testimonies offered that night. It is customary among them to give the age, or year, in which they were converted. Nearly all, if I remember right, told us when they started to serve the Lord. And all but three of that large concourse of people, that gave the year of their conversion, testified to having been converted before they were twenty years of age; and nearly all of them had either praying parents, or were, or had been members of Sunday schools. And what is true of this place, I believe to be true of all the churches of the land. The churches know and understand this. They are not blind, like some of us, to their own best interest, and the best interest of their children.

Now look here, brethren and sisters, let us take a look at the past. It will not do us any harm to look back, if we do not wish ourselves back as Lot's wife did. We will go back twenty years, if you plese. Think now of the time when you gave all for Christ,—houses, lands, children, everything, and you said with the poet,—

"I've given all for Christ, He's my all."

How many dear brethren and sisters can you think of that did the same thing, and said here Lord am I, and the children thou hast given me. And in doing so, they did right, and God was well pleased, no doubt. The Spirit of the Lord bore a sweet witness with ours that we were his, and we had joy unspeakable. But what of our children? Well, thank the good Lord, some of them are converted, and are now shining lights in the world, and have a good hope, through grace, that they will meet us in the kingdom. How shall I tell the rest of the story? Shall I say that scores and hundreds of our children, bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh, are grown up, and have gone out of our influence and reach, and are to-day scattered over this perilous wilderness without hope and without God in the world? A few, it is true, have joined other churches. Well, thank the Lord for that. A poor house is better than no shelter. But how many times I have been at the houses of Advent parents, and seen them go to meet with the little flock, and their children go one to this, another to that church, and more to no church at all. They even despise the religion of their fathers. Many times my heart has been pained at such a state of things as this. Are we not, as a church, as a people, and as individuals, responsible to a great extent for such a state of things as this? Are we our brothers' keepers, and if not, can we say we are not our children's keepers? Paul says, let every one seek not his own, but his brother's welfare. But have we sought after our children's welfare? If so, then where are the Sabbath schools for them? where is the training up of the children in the way they should go, that when they are come to years of understanding they may not depart from it? If so, then why are so many of our children in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity? No doubt much of it is in consequence of inactivity and neglect, and how shall we answer for these things? Shall we say we had no influence for good over our children? that we did all we could? Alas! for such excuses as these. Well, then, if we have not done our duty in this respect, will we do it hereafter? or will we take up the lamentation and mourning that the harvest is past, the summer ended, and our children are not saved.

I have written this that if possible I might help to call attention, and to stir up action in this direction; having been for the past early years of my life a member of a Sunday school, and for the past two years a teacher in the Sunday school, and having felt the effect on my heart, and having seen the blessed fruit and effect on my own family, and also the blessed result on the hearts of the dear children in this place, therefore I have written on this subject. Should any wish to engage in this good work, and are in doubt as to whether they can make a school interesting and prosperous, if they will write to me, I will cheerfully give them all the benefit of my experience. I tell you, christians, we had better be at work for the good of somebody, if we would serve the Lord acceptably; and who has a better right to our services than the children?

Yours truly, in behalf of the children,

New Haven, Ct. G. W. DENNY.

PAUL CONSISTENT WITH HIMSELF.

Why did Paul "desire to depart, and to be with Christ," by translation, if he could just as well have been with him by dying? Phil. 1: 23. We are aware we have touched a tender spot in the theology of our opponents, by this reference to Paul's desire. They construe Paul's language into a desire to die, that his soul might be with Christ. But such a construction is without a shadow of proof; for first, Paul saith not a word about "his soul," nor any other man's soul, or spirit, in the entire epistle. Second, he speaks of death in the next chapter as a calamity, and says, "Epaphroditus was sick nigh unto death; but God had mercy on him," and restored him to health. Had Paul believed Epaphroditus, had he died, would have been "with Christ, which is far better" than being here, how could he say, "God had mercy on him" in keeping him from dying when he was "nigh unto death?" Did Paul think it would be "far better" for himself to die than to live, and just the reverse for Epaphroditus? Strange logic that! Paul's "desire to depart" was manifestly a desire for a translation, after the example of Enoch, so as "not to see death." It was a "desire" perfectly innocent in itself, but which he knew would not be likely to be granted to him, as the whole connection shows; for in the third chapter he points the Philippians to his death and resurrection, saying, "Being made conformable unto his (Christ's) death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead:" verses 10, 11. Thus it is manifest that he did expect to die; and hence, though he desired a translation, he did not expect one; nor did he expect to be with Christ till "the resurrection of the dead;" for he saith in the same chapter,—"Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." No hint of expecting Christ to "come at death," when the "vile body" goes to corruption.

Thus we see, that though Paul desired a translation—which would be "far better" than either "to live in the flesh" or "to die"—yet he did understand that he would die; and he labored and suffered, "if by any means" he "might attain unto the resurrection of the dead," which he taught would be when Christ shall come from heaven; for, saith he to the Thessalonions, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise," etc.

Such language is not to be misunderstood, mistaken, nor perverted to accommodate the theology of an immortal soul, that is never named in all the Bible, and concerning which the apostle's language, of "desire to depart and be with Christ," is a simple perversion of it, and is contradicted by the entire epistle, as well as by all his teaching concerning the resurrection.

Thus we have disposed of this text of our opponents, from which they infer the consciousness of the dead, and find it avails them nothing, but when taken with the context, and entire argument of Paul, is strongly confirmatory that the only hope of a future life is by resurrection or translation.

If it still be urged that Paul said, "to die is gain," we reply, to die might be gain to one who had "five times received forty stripes save one," who had been "beaten with rods, stoned, thrice suffered shipwreck, in journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils by his own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings oft, in hunger and thirst, in fasting oft, in cold and nakedness," besides numberless other trials; "to die" might be "gain" to such an one, even though an undisturbed "sleep" in unconsciousness till the resurrection. A minister in these days, with "$5,000 salary," a comfortable home, and called of men Rabbi, or "Doctor of Divinity," might not see how it would be gain to die, unless he was going at once to heaven; and it may be doubted if he would think even that gain enough to make him in a "strait" to die—as any physician might testify who attends him when ill—but Paul's "salary" was a very different matter; and he might think it gain to die, and rest till the resurrection; though he might "desire," by a translation, "to depart and be with Christ, which" would "be far better" than either "to live" or "die." Such might have been his view of the matter.

To take the common view of Paul's discourse, here, is to make him say, in one breath, that he knew not what to "choose"—to live or to die—and in the next, to declare he was in a great straight to die: i. e., he did very much choose rather to die than to live! Can any rational man suppose that Paul would talk in such a contradictory strain? Between life and death, as a means of "gain" to Christ and his cause, Paul said, "What I shall choose I know not;" but there was another thing he did greatly desire, and choose, if it were consistent for his Master to grant it, viz: by a translation "to depart and be with Christ," so that he would neither live here, in this mortal "flesh," nor "die." This Paul did choose; at the same time, he declares that he was aware that he should "abide and continue" as he was, in this present state, for the benefit of the church.

The view we have taken is further confirmed by Paul's language to the Corinthians, where he says,—"We which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh—knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus," etc. 2 Cor. 4: 11, 14. It is the change of mortality to immortality that Paul everywhere speaks of, and looks for; to take place either by resurrection or translation, and not a soul, disembodied, in bliss anywhere.—Herald of Life.

STORY OF BLIND BARTIMEUS.—Mark 10: 46.

In Jericho's streets our dear Savior had walked,
And just had passed on from the place,
Attended by those who had followed to see
Miraculous working of grace.

Just outside the gate his disciples passed on,
While a great number gathered around,
When "blind Bartimeus," the beggar, they spied,
Low seated upon the damp ground.

How soon did he rally his long wasted strength,
When he heard that a Jesus was near;
And in accents that told of the deepest regret,
Cried, "Jesus, have mercy and hear."

'Twas then many charged him that he'd hold his peace,
But he cried out the more a great deal,—
"Thou blest Son of David, have mercy on me,"
"Have mercy!"—and Jesus stood still."

He commanded the blind man be called unto him,
They calling, said, "be of good cheer;
For he'll have thee to rise, and he calleth thee now,
O, rise up, have nothing to fear."

Then casting away all his filthy old rags,
That had long served to cover his shame,
He with darkness of mind, but firm in his faith,
To the great kind Physician then came.

Then spake the great Prince to the trembling one,
"What wilt thou I do unto thee?"
He answered with meekness, but strong in belief,
"O, Lord, wilt thou make me to see?"

Then answered the Savior and said unto him,
"Thy faith makes thee whole, go thy way";
Then received he his sight, and he joined in the praise,
And "followed the Lord from that day."

THE YOUNG MARTYRS.

The inquisitors of the Low Countries, thirsting for blood, scoured the neighboring country, searching everywhere for the young Augustines, who had escaped from the Antwerp persecution. Esch, Voes and Lambert were at last discovered, put in chains, and conducted to Brussels. Egmondanus, Hochstraten and several other inquisitors summoned them to their presence.

"Do you retract your opinion?" inquired Hochstraten, "that the priest has no power to forgive sins, but that the power belongs to God above?" and then he went on to enumerate the other gospel truths which he required them to abjure.

"No, we will retract nothing!" exclaimed Esch and Voes firmly: "we will not disown God's word, we will rather die for the faith!"

The Inquisitor. "Confess that you have been deceived by Luther."

The Young Augustines. "As the apostles were deceived by Jesus Christ."

The Inquisitors. "We declare you to be heretics, worthy of being burnt alive; and we deliver you over to the secular arm."

Lambert was silent. The prospect of death terrified him; distress and uncertainty agitated his heart. "I request four days' respite," said he, in stifled emotion. He was taken back to prison.

As soon as this respite was expired, Esch and Voes were degraded from their priestly office and handed over to the council of the reigning governers of the Low Countries. The council delivered them bound to the executioner. Hochstraten and three other inquisitors accompanied them to the place of execution.

Arriving at the scaffold, the young martyrs contemplated it with calmness. Their constancy, their piety, and their youth, drew tears from the inquisitors themselves. When they were bound to the stake, the confessors drew near. "Once more we ask if you will receive the christian faith?"

The Martyrs. "We believe in the christian church, but not in your church!"

Half an hour elapsed. It was a pause of hesitation. A hope had been cherished that the near prospect of such a death would intimidate these youths. But, alone tranquil of all the crowd that thronged the square, they began to sing psalms—stopping from time to time to declare that they were resolved to die for the name of Jesus Christ.

"Be converted, be converted," cried the inquisitors, "or you will die in the name of the devil." "No" answered the martyrs; "we will die like christians, and for the truth of the gospel."

The pile was then lighted. Whilst the flame slowly ascended, a heavenly peace dilated their hearts; and one of them could even say: "I seem to be on a bed of roses." The solemn hour was come—death was at hand. The two martyrs cried with a loud voice, "O Lord Jesus, Son of David, have mercy upon us!" and they began to recite their creed. At last the flames reached them; but the fire consumed the cords which fastened them to the stake before their breath was gone. One of them, feeling his liberty, dropped upon his knees in the midst of the flames, and then in worship to his Lord, exclaimed, clasping his hands: "Lord Jesus, Son of David, have mercy upon us!"

Their bodies were quickly wrapped in flame; they shouted: "Te Deum laudamus." Soon their voices were stifled—and their ashes alone remained. This execution had lasted four hours. It was on the 1st of July, 1523, that the first martyrs of the Reformation laid down their lives for the gospel.

All good men shuddered when they heard of these events. The future was big with fearful anticipations. "The executions have begun," said Erasmus. "At length," exclaimed Luther, "Christ is gathering some of the fruits of our preaching, and preparing new martyrs."

But the joy of Luther in the constancy of these young christians was disturbed by the thoughts of Lambert. Of the three, Lambert possessed most learning; he had been chosen to fill the place of Probst, as preacher at Antwerp. Finding no peace in his dungeon, he was terrified at the prospect of death; but still more by conscience, which reproached him with his cowardice, and urged him to confess the gospel. Delivered ere long, from his fears, he boldly proclaimed the truth, and died like his brethren.

A noble harvest sprung up from the blood of these martyrs. Brussels manifested a willingness to receive the gospel. "Wherever Alexander lights a pile," remarked Erasmus, "there it seems as if he had sown heresies."

"I am bound with you in your bonds," exclaimed Luther; "your dungeons and your burnings my soul takes part in. All of us are with you in spirit; and the Lord is above it all!"

He proceeded to compose a hymn commemorative of the death of the young monks; and soon, in every direction, throughout Germany and the Low Countries, in towns and in villages, were heard accents of song which communicated an enthusiasm for the faith of the martyrs.

Flung to the heedless winds,
Or on the waters cast,
Their ashes shall be watched,
And gathered at the last.
And from that scattered dust,
Around us and abroad,
Shall bring a plenteous seed
Of witnesses for God.

Jesus hath now received
Their latest living breath—
Yet vain is Satan's boast
Of victory in their death.
Still—still—though dead, they speak,
And trumpet-tongued proclaim
To many a wakening land
The one availing Name.

A POLITE BOY.

I want to tell you about a polite little boy. To be polite is to be kind. George had company. Lucy and Mary and James and Andrew came to spend the afternoon with him. He tried to make them very happy. He offered them the best seats; he let them see the prettiest playthings. In showing them a picture book, he held the book so that they could see particularly well. He was attentive to each one.

We ought always to be kind and polite to company, as well as to mother and brothers and sisters at home.

Very little children do not know this; but they must. When you go a visiting, do you not like to have the people you go to see kind and polite to you? I am sure you do. And so you ought to be kind and polite to them when they come to see you. We ought to do to others as we wish that they should do to us. That is the rule Jesus Christ gave, and a most excellent rule it is.

If you have a jumping-rope, or top, or rocking-horse, would it be polite for you to play with them yourself all the time? No. You must let your company have them the largest part of the time. In all cases, to be really polite, we must give up our pleasure in some measure to others, and be happy in making others happy.

One day George saw an old man sitting on the rock in the sun, and he thought, "Poor old man!" He stopped, and taking off his hat, "Are you pretty well, sir?" he asked.

"I am as well as old man can expect to be, I thank you," said he.

"Can I help you, sir?" asked the little boy.

"I believe not," said the old man, smiling. "I am a'most home, and then all will be well." George thought he meant his house; but it was his heavenly home he meant.

"Good-by, sir," said the little fellow, putting on his hat and going, for he did not want to be troublesome.

"God bless you sonny," said the old man, pleased with the kindness of the little stranger.

ALWAYS SPEAK TRUTHFULLY.

I wonder if any of my little readers ever find it difficult always to speak the truth. Do you remember the answer little George Washington made, when his father said,

"My son, do you know who cut down my tree?"

"Yes, pa: I cannot tell a lie, you know I cannot: I cut it down with my ax."

Was not he a brave little boy? How happy he must have felt that he had not yielded to the temptation of telling a lie! Satan always feels pleased when we do wrong. Do not let him have that satisfaction, dear children. Have you ever read that verse in the Bible which says, "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you?"

I will relate to you an incident which occurred in my class some time ago. You must know I have a class of about sixty scholars. Well, among them is a little boy who once told me a lie. Poor little fellow! I felt so sorry for him, and left him by himself for some time. When it was about time to leave school, I took a seat beside him, and tried to tell him how wicked he had been. Among other things, I said, "Hugh, why is it you should never tell a lie?"

"What answer do you think that poor little ignorant boy made?"

"Because God is so good to me."

It struck me so forcibly at the time as such a beautiful answer, coming from the lips of a little one, who I doubt never had a kind mother to tell him of the love of Jesus to little children.

I am afraid, dear children, you do not justly appreciate the many privileges with which you are daily surrounded. Do you ever feel thankful to God for placing you in a christian land, and giving you kind parents to anticipate your every wish, and feel happy in gratifying you, when it is for your good? Have you ever read how the Hindoo mothers throw their little girls into the River Ganges? Poor things! they know no better: they have not the Bible to guide them aright. Will you try and save up your pennies to send them the glorious gospel of the blessed God?—Ex.

EVENING THOUGHTS.

This world, with all its pride and show,
Will pass away ere long,
Its mirth and pleasures, wealth and power,
Prove empty as its song.

Sure, wise is he who walks the way
The blessed Savior trod;
Narrow and thorny though it be,
It leads at last to God.

Ah! sweeter is the inward calm
Religion doth impart,
Than all the pleasures of the world
That alienate the heart.

My Savior, keep me from the world,
Let me not go astray;
When clouds o'ershade my pilgrim path,
Make plain for me the way.

I'll trust the Lord; I'll follow thee,
Thou art my Guard and Guide,
And with thy glory in full view,
What can I want beside?

Enough for me that thou art mine,
My Savior and my God;
I'll raise my head and joyful be,
Though 'neath thy chastening rod.

LUTHER ON THE ADVENT.

HOW CHRIST'S COMING IS TO BE REGARDED.

[Translated for the Prophetic Times.]

LUKE 21; 25–26.—The Lord here foretells his coming at the last day, which is to be with great power and majesty. A week ago you heard of his ride into Jerusalem upon an ass, without pomp; where he did not have a place of his own, even a foot's breadth, and where he was crucified besides. This was a poor and sorrowful coming, in which he came not as a Lord, but as a servant desiring to serve, and so to serve as to die for us, as he himself says, in Matt. 20: 28: "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." In short, in his first coming, he rendered the greatest service, such as no angel or creature could, in preparing and making ready the kingdom of believers and the elect. But when the number of his elect is complete, he shall come again, not as a servant, but as a Lord; and shall come for the purpose of delivering us from the earth, worms, death, and putrefaction.

This is what he declares in this gospel, and admonishes his people to guard themselves against false security, that the day of his coming may not overtake them unawares; and at the same time comforts them, that they may not be terrified on account of the signs which are to go before that day, but rejoice the more that their redemption draweth near.

In the first place, the Lord admonishes us christians not to place the date of our lives here upon the earth, but to know that our Lord and Redeemer shall come from heaven, and thus to be prepared every hour to expect his coming; likewise, that we should be but half, and with the left hand, in this world, whilst with the right hand, and with the whole heart, we are in waiting for that day when our Lord shall come in his glorious majesty and power, which no man can describe.

This is the admonition and warning of this passage, that we may regulate ourselves with reference to that event, for there is no abiding here; and not conduct ourselves as the ungodly, who say: "Oh, who knows when the day of judgment shall come!" Such self-secure and godless people, whose hearts are engrossed with eating and drinking, and cares of this life, we are not to imitate; for as that approaches, all will be busy building, making marriages, eating, drinking, and be quite secure in their own esteem; and with these things shall they be taken up, as if there were nothing else to be done. Such people shall that day overtake unawares, and Christ shall come upon them as a flash; and just when they are most confident, drumming, leaping and dancing, they shall find themselves unexpectedly overwhelmed, and given to eternal burnings.

This the Lord tells us in advance, and desires us to order ourselves accordingly. They that disregard it shall suddenly be overtaken. When they are most engaged building, rejoicing and being rejoiced, eating and drinking, and living in the greatest security, above and beneath shall be fire and brimstone. Just as it was in the days of Sodom; they ate, they drank, they danced, they frolicked, and did not care a farthing for pious Lot; as it also is this day with our towns-people, farmers, and nobles. Then Lot said to them: "God shall destroy you with fire;" but they laughed at him, and said: "You pious fool, what know you about it?" What happened? Early in the morning, at the rising of the sun, the sky became black, and a fearful storm arose, and the lightning flashed hither and thither, and in one hour they were in hell. So is it also in our day. People, when they hear of the day of judgment, say: "Oh, that I only had enough to eat and drink, and money plenty to last me till that day shall come, I should have well to do." But when they are fullest of treasure, and most wanton, and it is said to them: "Beware, the day of judgment is at hand;" and they laugh at it and say: "Ha, what a fool you are, to suppose the day of judgment near;" so shall that day break in upon them like a thunderbolt, which flashes in an instant from the rising to the setting sun. What, then, are those royal dollars, houses, chains, and sparkling show?

Hence saith Christ: "Ye, my dear followers and friends, go ye not with the secure and godless multitude, but watch. Your eyes shall behold how their hearts are occupied, and how they will laugh you to scorn; but watch ye; for the day of judgment shall come suddenly, as the lightning, from which they cannot fly. Just as a little mouse is entrapped in a moment, so quickly shall their calamity come upon them."

Such warning of the Lord Jesus we are to take to heart, and carefully mark. For we cannot help it, but must hear and see it, that everywhere people are so wanton; but let us have respect to the words of Christ, and expect his coming, and not turn our eyes after the doings of the ungodly and self-secure in the world; for the Lord Jesus faithfully admonishes us to expect his glorious coming which shall take place, when the ungodly shall be cast into the abyss of hell, and we, on the contrary, shall be redeemed from the earth, and from all the miseries that we here suffer.

This is one thing which we are this day to learn, to wit, that we prepare ourselves for the Lord's coming, as we also confess in the Creed, that the Lord Jesus Christ shall come to judge the quick and the dead. For what is thus briefly expressed in our Creed is fully and overflowingly declared in this gospel, which further adds how matters shall stand in the world as that coming of the Lord approaches, to wit, that Christ shall be neglected, and the preachers of the true gospel be accounted fools, and the godless and undisciplined multitude give themselves to excess and avarice, as if this were the only business of life. Not that it is evil and wrong to provide themselves with the necessaries of life, but that they should not have their hearts "overcharged." If they did but charge their hands, there would be nothing out of place, for there must be work; but that they should burden their hearts, this is forbidden; that is, that they should place their hope and trust in becoming great and rich, caring nothing for Christ, and deriding God's word concerning the day of judgment. To have "the heart overcharged," is to be engrossed with temporal things, so as to disable it for conforming to the words of Christ; just as in our day, people of all classes are only concerned to know how to become rich, and apart from that care not the snap of a finger for the word of God.

Thus, says the Savior, shall it be and go when the day of judgment is before the door. All the world shall be saying to itself, Peace and safety. Here do not mistake yourselves; go not with them; do not so misbehave; keep ye unto me; neither be alarmed; lift up your heads, and see, that when I shall come again from heaven, I may so find you with nothing wanting; for I shall come for your redemption. But whosoever shall overcharge his heart with things of this world, and not concern himself about that day, thus shall it be with him; he shall suddenly find himself among the dead. He who gives himself to forbidden pleasures and delights, shall suddenly be overwhelmed, and he who is busy with his filthy lucre, shall presently discover himself, purse, money and all, prostrate under the hand of judgment. So shall it be in those days, and so shall men find it.

A strong indication of our times, therefore, is, that the day of judgment is not far off; for to this is the world now pretty much given, and shall be much more given. Every thing is rearing itself aloft; the passion for display has no bounds; and so great is the confidence of the common masses, that they laugh the minister to scorn. They shall also become so confident in themselves, as not any more to endure sound doctrine, but to dash the book from them, and say: "Thou fool! art thou concerned about what is preached?" Of such sort are there already among the people of town and country. Whosoever lives till that day will know how to understand these words.

Hence the Savior speaks to his disciples: "Watch, that I may not find you among this barbarous multitude." If they shall say, "No danger;" in that same instant shall they be overtaken. Thus was it when Lot admonished his sons-in-law; he was derided as one that mocked. For so they thought: Oh, for many a day has the city stood, and for many a day more shall it continue! But before another day was passed they were dead, and swimming in fire. This the world will have. It is indeed no fault of Christ; he has faithfully warned the world, and to this day permits his gospel to be preached; but it is of no avail. They should indeed become alarmed and say: "He who so preaches to us these things is not one to deceive us;" but they go on in their carnal security, and say: "I must meanwhile quaff my glass." On, then, against the words of Jesus, so shalt thou have thy deservings; thou wouldst not hear, I have given thee warning; hence shalt thou be suddenly overtaken. Then shall they have to say, It has served them right; but now they concern themselves not about it. But the Lord saith: "The day shall come as the lightning's stroke;" upon this we may calculate.

Thus shall matters stand before the last day, to the end that people may learn and not vex themselves, that things come to such a close, but say: "Christ has declared it in advance, that thus intractable, barbarous, and greedy, shall the world become. Thus was it with Sodom in the time of Lot, and in the entire world in the days of Noah. It is all said to us by way of consolation, admonition, and instruction, that we may be able to determine what is signified. The barbarous multitude understand it not; but we are to know, and to watch, that we do not fall into the same indifference. We must eat and drink, but not so as to overcharge our hearts, but lean them upon the Savior's coming, and know that that which cometh is the resurrection of the dead and eternal life. Regulating myself by such a rule, I may alike sleep, wake, study, eat, or drink; and, come the day of judgment when it may, it cannot overtake me unawares.

Yea, it is our wish, for the sake of the present, that that day should come; for in this life the name of God shall not be hallowed, but more and more blasphemed; His kingdom is withstood; His will is not done on earth; our daily bread is being withdrawn; our trespasses continually increase, and temptation ceaseth not; therefore we pray: Our heavenly Father, Thy kingdom come; deliver us from evil. Help, O Lord; let the final stroke come, and make an end. If we will permit ourselves to be thus admonished, watch and pray, we may be confident that the last day shall not overwhelm us with dread. But all others shall be overwhelmed, and it will be their own fault; for they are not willing to regard the Savior's coming as at hand; hence that day must overtake them suddenly, not for any fault in Christ, who amply warns them, but on account of their own guilt, in not taking the warning that is given them.

In the second place, the Lord comforts us, and incites us to rejoice, when we see the sun and the moon darkened, and comets in the sky, and all created things arranging themselves for change, and the usual order of things coming to an end. "When ye shall see," says He, "the sun and moon turning away their eyes, then has the time come for the death of nature." Just as a man, as his spirit is departing, only half sees, and rolls his eyes, is near the moment of his death, so, also, when the world rolls its eyes, and great changes are manifest, know in like manner that the time of its end has come. Lift up your heads, and be not therefore alarmed, for your redemption draweth nigh.

These are words which should be written in golden letters in the heart, for they are immeasurably full of consolation to those whose hopes are fixed upon the life eternal. "When ye shall see," says Jesus, "that things are moving, that the world is breaking in ways of ghastly terror, be not dismayed, ye that are my followers and friends, but let them be afraid to whom it appertains." But the secure, untutored people about us concern themselves not about these things. And if there should even be three darkenings of the sun in one day, they would still lie in the beer-houses and drink to the fill. Hence saith the Savior: "When ye shall see that heaven and earth are giving away; that people are wedded to their wickedness, and that every thing is being borne down by the current, then take heart and rejoice. Rejoice in what? Upon yourselves? No, no; but upon me, for I come. It will be somewhat alarming; for if I throttle the world, so shall it have a distressing look, and roll its eyes; but fear not, I am at hand, ye shall be delivered." Upon this let us lay hold, that we may believe that our Lord Jesus Christ certainly cometh, and that eternal life we shall have. When this day and hour shall come, however, we cannot precisely tell; but still we may know when it is near at hand, as the Lord says: "When these things begin to come to pass, know ye that it is not far off." Hence we are admonished every day and hour.

He gives us, also, a parable of the fig-tree, and other trees; not an alarming and horrifying picture of fire, but a beautiful, joyous, lovely picture concerning the trees. When the trees now put forth, he says: "So behold in them, and take note, that now the summer is nigh; likewise also ye, when the sun is darkened, say: 'The trees are putting forth;' and when the sea roars and the waves thereof, say: 'This is the beautiful bloom upon the trees.'" An indication of what? That we shall be eternally redeemed. The world shall look upon these signs in the sun, moon, water, and earth, with reference to what they are to eat and to temporal supplies; but ye, my followers and friends, shall take them for beautiful flowers. Therefore shall ye be joyful, for the kingdom of God cometh unto you, that ye may have faith, to which end ye have been baptized, wherefore ye suffer, wherefore also ye are called and entreated.

These two things, then, should we learn, by way of increasing our faith, and having ourselves admonished and comforted. When we behold the manifold scandals with which the world abounds, we are not to turn ourselves to them, but guard carefully against all who move with them, like stocks and blockheads, and care for none of these things. To them shall the wrath of God suddenly come; but we are to rejoice, looking for the Lord, who shall come in the clouds with his angels, and deliver us from all adversities. This is what Christ has preached to us this day. God give us grace to lay hold of it and keep it! Amen. Walch's Luth., 13 vol., Cols. 34–43.

SELF-DENIAL.—It is a matter that cannot be too often considered, that real happiness, health, order, peace and bounty, depend on self-denial. If nature, in its wild state and wishes and indulgent sensualities, is to be humored, a dose of poison is brewing, a scourge for the fool's back is preparing—like drunkards who sit down in good humor to tipple, but soon proceed to black eyes. No man ever found a happy life by chance, or yawned it into being with a wish. Even the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. So that perfect peace may be won by perpetual war, and the health of the spirit by the death of the flesh. My old maxim is that religion will cost us something, but the want of it infinitely more.—Rev. R. Cecil.

QUESTIONS.

Was Nehemiah commanded to build Jerusalem?

No. He, like Ezra, speaks of it as having been already built. For example, "I came to Jerusalem, and was there three days."—Neh. 2: 11.

What was he commanded to do?

Nehemiah was commanded to do nothing; but he had asked the king, saying, "Send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it."—Neh. 2: 5.

How could the building of Jerusalem secure his fathers' sepulchres?

Nehemiah did not ask the privilege of building Jerusalem, but that which he had learned was "broken down," and "burned with fire," which was not Jerusalem, but "the wall of Jerusalem," "and the gates thereof" (Neh. 1: 3), which secured his "fathers' sepulchres."

Such was the great anxiety on the part of the Hebrews to have a proper burying. This was his city in the same sense that "the rich man's wealth is his strong city." Prov. 18: 11.

Is there any other place that Nehemiah, in allusion to the wall, calls it a city?

Yes; for when he had completed the wall, he, in allusion to that or the ground which it enclosed, said, "the city was large and great, but the houses were not builded." Neh. 7: 4.

Are Daniel's 69 weeks to be reckoned from the building of the walls to secure the sepulchres of the dead?

We think not. Daniel, at last, was informed that they were to be reckoned "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." Dan. 9: 25.

Did Nehemiah say any thing about building Jerusalem?

No. He said, "Come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem." Neh. 2: 17.

When Nehemiah went up to Jerusalem, did he not find houses there?

Yes, for those who builded the wall repaired "every one over against his house" (Neh. 3: 28.)

Did the commission which Nehemiah obtained from Artaxerxes grant him the privilege of building houses at Jerusalem if he had thought proper to do so?

No, for he could not build houses without timber; and "the keeper of the king's forest" was not authorized to let him have more than enough "timber to make beams for the gates of the palace, which appertained to the house, and for the wall of the city, and for the house that" Nehemiah entered into during his stay at Jerusalem. Neh. 2: 8.

Why did he not ask for timber to build Jerusalem?

Because Cyrus had many years before builded Jerusalem, and if "the city was large and great" (Neh. 3: 9, 12), there was no necessity for the privilege of building any more houses there.

Then is it not certain that Jerusalem had been restored and builded long before that time?

Yes, for saith the Lord of Cyrus, "HE shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives."—Isa. 45: 13.

When was the "house of God" finished?

"This house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king." Ezra 6: 15.

And can Daniel's 69 weeks be dated at a later epoch than the completion of the house builded at Jerusalem?

Not if reckoned "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." Dan. 9: 25.

By whose commandment was Jerusalem restored?

It was "builded and finished . . . according to the commandment of the God of Israel."—Ezra 6: 14.

How do you know this?

He "saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built."—Isa. 44: 26.

Whom did the Lord command to build Jerusalem?

He "saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." Isa. 44: 28.

Who is Cyrus?

The king that overthrew Babylon, that "brake in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron."—Isa. 45: 2.

Was the Persian empire called Cyrus?

No, that was called "the kingdom of Persia." 2 Chron. 36: 20.

Did God call the man by name that was to build Jerusalem?

Yes; saith the Lord, "I have even called thee by thy name."—Isa. 45: 4.

What was the name by which he was called?

"Cyrus," the "ravenous bird from the east, THE MAN that executeth my counsel from a far country."—Isa. 46: 11.

Can he whom the Lord calls "THE MAN," whose name is Cyrus, mean the "dynasty," or "kingdom of Persia"?

No, for saith the Lord, "For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name."—Isa. 45: 4.

Of what worth to the "elect" is it that he hath called Cyrus by name?

It puts an end to the controversy as to "the man" whom the God of Israel commanded "to restore and to build Jerusalem."—Dan. 9: 25.

Have we positive evidence that Cyrus did receive "the commandment" of "the God of Israel"?

Yes. Says Josephus, "This was known to Cyrus by his reading the book which Isaiah left behind him." Josephus could not be mistaken in this, for Cyrus acknowledges that "the Lord God of heaven hath . . . charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem" (Ezra 1: 2), and since, in the same verse in which he is charged to lay the foundation of the temple, he is commanded to build Jerusalem, he could not have overlooked it. Isa. 44: 28.

When Cyrus granted the Jews the privilege of building Jerusalem and the temple, did he observe the same order in which he found it recorded in the book of Isaiah?

Yes. In his decree to the Jews, he said that "he gave them leave to go back to their country, and to rebuild their city Jerusalem, and the temple of God"; and in his "epistle to the governors that were in Syria," he observes the same order again, thus:—"I have given leave to the Jews to return to their own country, and to rebuild their city, and to build the temple of God at Jerusalem."

Suppose Jerusalem had not been builded for fifty or a hundred years after; could that affect the date from which the sixty-nine weeks are to be reckoned?

No; for they are reckoned not from the building of Jerusalem, but from "the going forth of the commandment to" build Jerusalem.

Did the God of Israel ever command more than one person to build Jerusalem?

No; for saith the the Lord of Cyrus, "He is my shepherd, and shall perform all of my pleasure (in this), even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." Isa. 44: 28.

Since the God of Israel has expressly said of Cyrus, "He shall build my city" (Isa. 45: 13), how can any one believe that he meant Artaxerxes?

Leaving this for others to answer, I conclude that if God said one thing and meant another, the Bible is no revelation to me.

Is it mentioned either in sacred or profane history that Nehemiah restored the Jewish sacrifices?

No; for both Josephus and the Bible agree that they were restored when the Jews returned under Cyrus. Ezra 3: 1–13.

Does either sacred or profane history speak of the Jewish sacrifices having ever been more fully restored than at the time of the dedication of the temple, in the sixth of Darius?

No; for "the priests and the Levites were purified together; all of them were pure"; "and they set the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God which is at Jerusalem; as it is written in the book of Moses."—Ezra 6: 18–20.

And was their service acceptable to the Lord?

We have no evidence of its ever being more so, for "thus saith the Lord, I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies."—Zech. 1: 16.

If by the decree of Cyrus all of the Jews had the privilege of returning home (Ezra 1: 3), and all of the vessels of the house of God were restored (Ezra 1: 7), Jerusalem (Ezra 4: 12) and the temple builded (Ezra 1: 3), all of "the priests and the Levites . . . purified" (Ezra 6: 20), and commenced offering all of their sacrifices "as it is written in the law of Moses, the man of God" (Ezra 3: 2); if the Lord "returned to Jerusalem with mercies" (Zech. 1: 16), insomuch that "all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the Lord," and "sang together . . . in praising and giving thanks unto the Lord," for such a glorious deliverance (Ezra 3: 11); what, we ask, was wanting to make this the full restoration of Israel, the restoring and building of Jerusalem?

WILLIAM C. THURMAN.

For the World's Crisis.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, and the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

At the closing remarks of our last article, we were on the examination of the peculiar circumstances of the saints, who rose from the dead and went into the holy city, after our Savior's resurrection, and appeared unto many. Matt. 27: 52, 53. Our last question, in our last article was this: What constituted the saints who came out of their graves? was it their bodies only, that came out of their graves, and went into the holy city? or did the souls that belonged to those bodies come down from heaven, and go down to where their bodies were, and then enter their bodies, and burst open the prison that contained those bodies, and then come out of their graves and walk into the holy city? How will you answer this important question, dear reader? Would it not be the most reasonable way to say that the whole man, soul and body, went into the grave, or fell asleep in Jesus; and when he rose from the dead, at the crucifixion, that it was the whole man which constituted the saint which rose?

We will now examine the circumstances of raising Lazarus, the brother of Mary and Martha; for we want to know where his soul was, while he was in the grave; so that we can find out whether any one goes to heaven before he has his trial at the day of final judgment. We will pause here a moment, and ask the simple question, did our Savior know whether Lazarus was dead or not? We answer, we think he did. What did our Savior mean when he said, "Lazarus sleepeth;" and as the apostles did not really understand him, he says to them, "Lazarus is dead!" Now what shall we do? Shall we determine to have it that the soul of Lazarus was alive in heaven, when Christ said he was dead? Do any persist in their belief that a part of Lazarus was alive in heaven, and the other part dead and in the grave? Let us follow Jesus to the grave of Lazarus, and take a view of the operations there.

I think it was said by both the pious sisters to their heavenly visitor, that if he had been there their brother would not have died. The Savior says to Martha, "Thy brother shall rise again." How much of Lazarus is here meant by our Savior? also, what is meant by "brother"? Did the Savior mean only half of Lazarus, or only half of thy brother?

What did Jesus do at the grave? He said, "Take ye away the stone." He then looked up to his Father, "and said, Father, I thank thee that . . . thou hearest me always." Here it was shown to all present that he looked up to his Father for power to fulfill his great mission on the earth. He then cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth." And the dead heard his voice and "came forth." Here comes the point that I want the reader to notice in particular. Did the Savior call the soul of Lazarus from heaven to go down into the grave, and enter the body, and then call Lazarus from the grave? or, did he call the whole of Lazarus forth from the grave?

One more question, and I am done with this subject; and that is this: In Joshua 1: 2, "the Lord spake unto Joshua . . . . Moses my servant is dead." Did our heavenly Father know whether Moses was dead or not? We think he did. And he said, "Moses my servant is dead." Was Moses alive when God said he was dead? We think the whole of Moses was dead. If he was raised afterwards, it was the whole of Moses.

Our next article will be on the subject of the punishment of the wicked.

"DOES THE SOUL LIVE IN DEATH?"

NUMBER THREE.

In pursuing this subject, the author of this tract assures us that, if we will admit the principle that when the body dies the life element in man lives on, all will be plain. Then we may understand how it is that Paul desired to "depart and be with Christ, which is far better; but to remain in the flesh was more needful for you."

But this is all plain enough without. Paul did not desire his soul, or the life element, to depart and be with Christ. He wished to be with Christ himself. And this he knew could not be until Christ should appear the second time. Hence, he said to the Colossians (ch. 3: 1–4), "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory." And when about to suffer martyrdom in Rome in his old age, he said to Timothy (ch. 4: 6, 7), "I am ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." And now was the time, if ever, for him to speak of the life element departing to be with Christ. But what does he say? Not one word about the intermediate state, but, "henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them who love his appearing."

"Absent from the body, and present with the Lord." "At home in the body, and absent from the Lord" (2 Cor. 5: 6–8), is of the same class of passages, and shows that he looked for and desired the immortal state. "Not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon," "that mortality might be swallowed up of life." This he expected at the resurrection, and not before.

Peter also said, I must "put off this my tabernacle." Did the soul, or life element, put off the body in this case? Said Peter, "I will that ye may be able, after my decease, to have these things always in remembrance." Peter expected to die. "After my decease." Nothing said about a life element continuing in existence: and in this connection he speaks of his hope as being connected with the coming of Christ. "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory."—1 Pet. 5: 4.

The case of the Messiah is also brought up to prove the conscious intermediate state, in these words: "Of Christ Peter said, 'His soul was not left in hades (the invisible world], neither did his flesh see corruption.'"—Acts 2: 31. Let us read the whole passage:

"Him, being delivered by the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain; whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. For David speaketh concerning him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face; for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved: therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover, also, my flesh shall rest in hope: because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance. Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses."—Acts 2: 23–32.

It will be seen that Peter speaks of the resurrection of Christ. Not one word about the under world, or invisible world. Christ was buried, and rose again. He was not left in hades (the grave, the under world) to see corruption, but came forth from the grave, on the third day, triumphant; "whereof," said Peter, "we are all witnesses."

No one who reads these passages with a simple faith, without a preconceived theory to support, would ever entertain a doubt but what the apostle held and taught the simple resurrection of Christ from the tomb without seeing corruption. This is all that is given in the sacred narrative.

But our brother asks, "Why do those who hold the unconsciousness of the dead never use such language as Paul and Peter did, relating to the intermediate state, if they really believe they teach that the whole being dies in natural death? Why do they never use such parables to teach their ideas as that of the rich man and Lazarus? Christ used that language, and never undertook to explain it away, as they do."

To which we reply, that we love to dwell on the passages that are supposed to teach an imperfect, intermediate state, because they bring to view the perfect state for which the apostles, with ourselves, have longed and prayed. We would be absent from the body of mortality and be with Christ. Not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon; that mortality might be swallowed up of life. We do not confine these passages to hades, or the under world, with its rewardless and dreary waiting for the restitution at the coming of Christ. We go to sleep in Jesus, and the next instant of apparent time finds us with Christ in the kingdom, singing—"O grave, where is thy victory. O death, where is thy sting? Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

As to the parables, we use them in all their fulness. The rich man and Lazarus are not explained away, but explained in harmony with the other parables and the perfections of God.

But we will ask, Why do they not quote and use the parables without explaining them away? Take the parable of the tares and wheat. Does that not plainly teach that the tares (or wicked) are burned up in the fire (Matt. 13: 40), while the righteous shine forth in the kingdom? Yet they only quote such scriptures to deny them; and hold that the tares, the wicked, are to burn in eternal anguish, without cessation of life. Why do they continually explain away the words of God that relate to the end of the wicked—such as "everlasting destruction," "perish," "consume," "destroy," "burnt up root and branch," and the like expressions with which the Bible abounds? They have to explain away all these plain declarations of the Holy Spirit, to sustain their theory of a conscious intermediate state, and after the judgment a state of eternal misery.

We are asked why we do not teach as Peter did that Christ "went and preached" to "the spirits in prison, which some time were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing?" We do teach this, just as Peter did. But we do not teach a Popish fable, and found it on the word of God; nor promise dead men probation in purgatory. Why should we? The spirit of Christ warned the persons spoken of then, "while the ark was preparing." That was their time of probation.

We are also asked why we do not teach, as Peter did, that the "gospel was preached unto the dead." 1 Pet. 4: 6. We do; but not to dead men in hades, the grave. For "there is no knowledge in sheol," the grave. It was to men who were living in a probationary state. Protestant commentators agree in this, as a general thing; and yet we are told that "Materialists do not use apostolic language relating to these things." Or, if they quote such language, "it is to see how adroitly they can explain it away." This would seem to be a heavy charge; yet, being without foundation, we let it pass. The truth is, we use apostolic language and ideas both; and not the ideas of a later and corrupt age of the church. And we are happy to know that thousands once holding to those errors are coming out on the pure word of God, resolved to take the Bible just as it reads; letting one part of the book explain the other. This does away with probation in hades, and eternal misery in the "Valley of Hinnom."—Voice of the West.

SATISFIED.

To enjoy the favor of God is to become acquainted with him. In loving him because he first loved us, is to admire the creations of his hand. God's beautiful earth, with its signature of goodness, as seen in the annual resurrection of nature fresh from his hand, demonstrates that our earthly existence is an indulgence of grace. In longings after the unseen and beautiful, never forget that his "Royal Master is among us."

In my checkered life, I have seen spots on earth so beautiful that if sin, with cold, freezing shadows, could never come, if death could not disturb its repose, I could wish to dwell amid it forever. Plastic beauty is of God, and is the shadow of things to come, when the body will be Christ's.

Man was not born to die. If he must die through moral degeneracy, still in this common lot broods no ruin through a virtuous education, our own endeavors, and the blessing of God. He is all mercy, while justice is the habitation of his throne. The supremacy of his judgment is shared in the great benevolent character of his Son. Since the freedom of atonement, erring mortals cannot provoke his anger. No crude or narrow sense of man's wickedness is a partaker of his generosity. Freaks of periodical vindictiveness are not the attributes of One whose plan is to reconcile an alienated world to him. The power which he abhors may and will drown some in perdition; but the sovereignty of the cross will not abrogate the justice of the sentence. I love his Son because he ever liveth to make intercession for me.

The holy man may sin, but to such the Master saith, "Go and sin no more." With my profoundest aspirations thirsting for and only quenched in Heaven, I am perfectly contented with my Father's will respecting his erratic children. Earth's daily interviews and intercourse with Heaven, are the seal of my acceptance. I ask no more.

With this credit of approbation from One on high, I am fitted to love, sympathize, and try to save that which is lost. In the consciousness of doing good, I possess the dictates with which to regulate my conduct. And when the Master of Assemblies honors his immortal banquet with the bread and water of life, may I witness my perpetual happiness—interminable as the years of God.

EVENING THOUGHTS.

This world, with all its pride and show,
Will pass away ere long,
Its mirth and pleasures, wealth and power,
Prove empty as its song.

Sure, wise is he who walks the way
The blessed Savior trod;
Narrow and thorny though it be,
It leads at last to God.

Ah! sweeter is the inward calm
Religion doth impart,
Than all the pleasures of the world
That alienate the heart.

My Savior, keep me from the world,
Let me not go astray;
When clouds o'ershade my pilgrim path,
Make plain for me the way.

I'll trust the Lord; I'll follow thee,
Thou art my Guard and Guide,
And with thy glory in full view,
What can I want beside?

Enough for me that thou art mine,
My Savior and my God;
I'll raise my head and joyful be,
Though 'neath thy chastening rod.

LUTHER ON THE ADVENT.

HOW CHRIST'S COMING IS TO BE REGARDED.

[Translated for the Prophetic Times.]

LUKE 21; 25-26.—The Lord here foretells his coming at the last day, which is to be with great power and majesty. A week ago you heard of his ride into Jerusalem upon an ass, without pomp; where he did not have a place of his own, even a foot's breadth, and where he was crucified besides. This was a poor and sorrowful coming, in which he came not as a Lord, but as a servant desiring to serve, and so to serve as to die for us, as he himself says, in Matt. 20: 28: "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." In short, in his first coming, he rendered the greatest service, such as no angel or creature could, in preparing and making ready the kingdom of believers and the elect. But when the number of his elect is complete, he shall come again, not as a servant, but as a Lord; and shall come for the purpose of delivering us from the earth, worms, death, and putrefaction.

This is what he declares in this gospel, and admonishes his people to guard themselves against false security, that the day of his coming may not overtake them unawares; and at the same time comforts them, that they may not be terrified on account of the signs which are to go before that day, but rejoice the more that their redemption draweth near.

In the first place, the Lord admonishes us christians not to place the date of our lives here upon the earth, but to know that our Lord and Redeemer shall come from heaven, and thus to be prepared every hour to expect his coming; likewise, that we should be but half, and with the left hand, in this world, whilst with the right hand, and with the whole heart, we are in waiting for that day when our Lord shall come in his glorious majesty and power, which no man can describe.

This is the admonition and warning of this passage, that we may regulate ourselves with reference to that event, for there is no abiding here; and not conduct ourselves as the ungodly, who say: "Oh, who knows when the day of judgment shall come!" Such self-secure and godless people, whose hearts are engrossed with eating and drinking, and cares of this life, we are not to imitate; for as that approaches, all will be busy building, making marriages, eating, drinking, and be quite secure in their own esteem; and with these things shall they be taken up, as if there were nothing else to be done. Such people shall that day overtake unawares, and Christ shall come upon them as a flash; and just when they are most confident, drumming, leaping and dancing, they shall find themselves unexpectedly overwhelmed, and given to eternal burnings.

This the Lord tells us in advance, and desires us to order ourselves accordingly. They that disregard it shall suddenly be overtaken. When they are most engaged building, rejoicing and being rejoiced, eating and drinking, and living in the greatest security, above and beneath shall be fire and brimstone. Just as it was in the days of Sodom; they ate, they drank, they danced, they frolicked, and did not care a farthing for pious Lot; as it also is this day with our towns-people, farmers, and nobles. Then Lot said to them: "God shall destroy you with fire;" but they laughed at him, and said: "You pious fool, what know you about it?" What happened? Early in the morning, at the rising of the sun, the sky became black, and a fearful storm arose, and the lightning flashed hither and thither, and in one hour they were in hell. So is it also in our day. People, when they hear of the day of judgment, say: "Oh, that I only had enough to eat and drink, and money plenty to last me till that day shall come, I should have well to do." But when they are fullest of treasure, and most wanton, and it is said to them: "Beware, the day of judgment is at hand;" and they laugh at it and say: "Ha, what a fool you are, to suppose the day of judgment near;" so shall that day break in upon them like a thunderbolt, which flashes in an instant from the rising to the setting sun. What, then, are those royal dollars, houses, chains, and sparkling show?

Hence saith Christ: "Ye, my dear followers and friends, go ye not with the secure and godless multitude, but watch. Your eyes shall behold how their hearts are occupied, and how they will laugh you to scorn; but watch ye; for the day of judgment shall come suddenly, as the lightning, from which they cannot fly. Just as a little mouse is entrapped in a moment, so quickly shall their calamity come upon them."

Such warning of the Lord Jesus we are to take to heart, and carefully mark. For we cannot help it, but must hear and see it, that everywhere people are so wanton; but let us have respect to the words of Christ, and expect his coming, and not turn our eyes after the doings of the ungodly and self-secure in the world; for the Lord Jesus faithfully admonishes us to expect his glorious coming which shall take place, when the ungodly shall be cast into the abyss of hell, and we, on the contrary, shall be redeemed from the earth, and from all the miseries that we here suffer.

This is one thing which we are this day to learn, to wit, that we prepare ourselves for the Lord's coming, as we also confess in the Creed, that the Lord Jesus Christ shall come to judge the quick and the dead. For what is thus briefly expressed in our Creed is fully and overflowingly declared in this gospel, which further adds how matters shall stand in the world as that coming of the Lord approaches, to wit, that Christ shall be neglected, and the preachers of the true gospel be accounted fools, and the godless and undisciplined multitude give themselves to excess and avarice, as if this were the only business of life. Not that it is evil and wrong to provide themselves with the necessaries of life, but that they should not have their hearts "overcharged." If they did but charge their hands, there would be nothing out of place, for there must be work; but that they should burden their hearts, this is forbidden; that is, that they should place their hope and trust in becoming great and rich, caring nothing for Christ, and deriding God's word concerning the day of judgment. To have "the heart overcharged," is to be engrossed with temporal things, so as to disable it for conforming to the words of Christ; just as in our day, people of all classes are only concerned to know how to become rich, and apart from that care not the snap of a finger for the word of God.

Thus, says the Savior, shall it be and go when the day of judgment is before the door. All the world shall be saying to itself, Peace and safety. Here do not mistake yourselves; go not with them; do not so misbehave; keep ye unto me; neither be alarmed; lift up your heads, and see, that when I shall come again from heaven, I may so find you with nothing wanting; for I shall come for your redemption. But whosoever shall overcharge his heart with things of this world, and not concern himself about that day, thus shall it be with him; he shall suddenly find himself among the dead. He who gives himself to forbidden pleasures and delights, shall suddenly be overwhelmed, and he who is busy with his filthy lucre, shall presently discover himself, purse, money and all, prostrate under the hand of judgment. So shall it be in those days, and so shall men find it.

A strong indication of our times, therefore, is, that the day of judgment is not far off; for to this is the world now pretty much given, and shall be much more given. Every thing is rearing itself aloft; the passion for display has no bounds; and so great is the confidence of the common masses, that they laugh the minister to scorn. They shall also become so confident in themselves, as not any more to endure sound doctrine, but to dash the book from them, and say: "Thou fool! art thou concerned about what is preached?" Of such sort are there already among the people of town and country. Whosoever lives till that day will know how to understand these words.

Hence the Savior speaks to his disciples: "Watch, that I may not find you among this barbarous multitude." If they shall say, "No danger;" in that same instant shall they be overtaken. Thus was it when Lot admonished his sons-in-law; he was derided as one that mocked. For so they thought: Oh, for many a day has the city stood, and for many a day more shall it continue! But before another day was passed they were dead, and swimming in fire. This the world will have. It is indeed no fault of Christ; he has faithfully warned the world, and to this day permits his gospel to be preached; but it is of no avail. They should indeed become alarmed and say: "He who so preaches to us these things is not one to deceive us;" but they go on in their carnal security, and say: "I must meanwhile quaff my glass." On, then, against the words of Jesus, so shalt thou have thy deservings; thou wouldst not hear, I have given thee warning; hence shalt thou be suddenly overtaken. Then shall they have to say, It has served them right; but now they concern themselves not about it. But the Lord saith: "The day shall come as the lightning's stroke;" upon this we may calculate.

Thus shall matters stand before the last day, to the end that people may learn and not vex themselves, that things come to such a close, but say: "Christ has declared it in advance, that thus intractable, barbarous, and greedy, shall the world become. Thus was it with Sodom in the time of Lot, and in the entire world in the days of Noah. It is all said to us by way of consolation, admonition, and instruction, that we may be able to determine what is signified. The barbarous multitude understand it not; but we are to know, and to watch, that we do not fall into the same indifference. We must eat and drink, but not so as to overcharge our hearts, but lean them upon the Savior's coming, and know that that which cometh is the resurrection of the dead and eternal life. Regulating myself by such a rule, I may alike sleep, wake, study, eat, or drink; and, come the day of judgment when it may, it cannot overtake me unawares.

Yea, it is our wish, for the sake of the present, that that day should come; for in this life the name of God shall not be hallowed, but more and more blasphemed; His kingdom is withstood; His will is not done on earth; our daily bread is being withdrawn; our trespasses continually increase, and temptation ceaseth not; therefore we pray: Our heavenly Father, Thy kingdom come; deliver us from evil. Help, O Lord; let the final stroke come, and make an end. If we will permit ourselves to be thus admonished, watch and pray, we may be confident that the last day shall not overwhelm us with dread. But all others shall be overwhelmed, and it will be their own fault; for they are not willing to regard the Savior's coming as at hand; hence that day must overtake them suddenly, not for any fault in Christ, who amply warns them, but on account of their own guilt, in not taking the warning that is given them.

In the second place, the Lord comforts us, and incites us to rejoice, when we see the sun and the moon darkened, and comets in the sky, and all created things arranging themselves for change, and the usual order of things coming to an end. "When ye shall see," says He, "the sun and moon turning away their eyes, then has the time come for the death of nature." Just as a man, as his spirit is departing, only half sees, and rolls his eyes, is near the moment of his death, so, also, when the world rolls its eyes, and great changes are manifest, know in like manner that the time of its end has come. Lift up your heads, and be not therefore alarmed, for your redemption draweth nigh.

These are words which should be written in golden letters in the heart, for they are immeasurably full of consolation to those whose hopes are fixed upon the life eternal. "When ye shall see," says Jesus, "that things are moving, that the world is breaking in ways of ghastly terror, be not dismayed, ye that are my followers and friends, but let them be afraid to whom it appertains." But the secure, untutored people about us concern themselves not about these things. And if there should even be three darkenings of the sun in one day, they would still lie in the beer-houses and drink to the fill. Hence saith the Savior: "When ye shall see that heaven and earth are giving away; that people are wedded to their wickedness, and that every thing is being borne down by the current, then take heart and rejoice. Rejoice in what? Upon yourselves? No, no; but upon me, for I come. It will be somewhat alarming; for if I throttle the world, so shall it have a distressing look, and roll its eyes; but fear not, I am at hand, ye shall be delivered." Upon this let us lay hold, that we may believe that our Lord Jesus Christ certainly cometh, and that eternal life we shall have. When this day and hour shall come, however, we cannot precisely tell; but still we may know when it is near at hand, as the Lord says: "When these things begin to come to pass, know ye that it is not far off." Hence we are admonished every day and hour.

He gives us, also, a parable of the fig-tree, and other trees; not an alarming and horrifying picture of fire, but a beautiful, joyous, lovely picture concerning the trees. When the trees now put forth, he says: "So behold in them, and take note, that now the summer is nigh; likewise also ye, when the sun is darkened, say: 'The trees are putting forth;' and when the sea roars and the waves thereof, say: 'This is the beautiful bloom upon the trees.'" An indication of what? That we shall be eternally redeemed. The world shall look upon these signs in the sun, moon, water, and earth, with reference to what they are to eat and to temporal supplies; but ye, my followers and friends, shall take them for beautiful flowers. Therefore shall ye be joyful, for the kingdom of God cometh unto you, that ye may have faith, to which end ye have been baptized, wherefore ye suffer, wherefore also ye are called and entreated.

These two things, then, should we learn, by way of increasing our faith, and having ourselves admonished and comforted. When we behold the manifold scandals with which the world abounds, we are not to turn ourselves to them, but guard carefully against all who move with them, like stocks and blockheads, and care for none of these things. To them shall the wrath of God suddenly come; but we are to rejoice, looking for the Lord, who shall come in the clouds with his angels, and deliver us from all adversities. This is what Christ has preached to us this day. God give us grace to lay hold of it and keep it! Amen.

SELF-DENIAL.—It is a matter that cannot be too often considered, that real happiness, health, order, peace and bounty, depend on self-denial. If nature, in its wild state and wishes and indulgent sensualities, is to be humored, a dose of poison is brewing, a scourge for the fool's back is preparing—like drunkards who sit down in good humor to tipple, but soon proceed to black eyes. No man ever found a happy life by chance, or yawned it into being with a wish. Even the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. So that perfect peace may be won by perpetual war, and the health of the spirit by the death of the flesh. My old maxim is that religion will cost us something, but the want of it infinitely more.—Rev. R. Cecil.

QUESTIONS.

Was Nehemiah commanded to build Jerusalem?

No. He, like Ezra, speaks of it as having been already built. For example, "I came to Jerusalem, and was there three days."—Neh. 2: 11.

What was he commanded to do?

Nehemiah was commanded to do nothing; but he had asked the king, saying, "Send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it."—Neh. 2: 5.

How could the building of Jerusalem secure his fathers' sepulchres?

Nehemiah did not ask the privilege of building Jerusalem, but that which he had learned was "broken down," and "burned with fire," which was not Jerusalem, but "the wall of Jerusalem," "and the gates thereof" (Neh. 1: 3), which secured his "fathers' sepulchres."

Such was the great anxiety on the part of the Hebrews to have a proper burying. This was his city in the same sense that "the rich man's wealth is his strong city." Prov. 18: 11.

Is there any other place that Nehemiah, in allusion to the wall, calls it a city?

Yes; for when he had completed the wall, he, in allusion to that or the ground which it enclosed, said, "the city was large and great, but the houses were not builded." Neh. 7: 4.

Are Daniel's 69 weeks to be reckoned from the building of the walls to secure the sepulchres of the dead?

We think not. Daniel, at last, was informed that they were to be reckoned "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." Dan. 9: 25.

Did Nehemiah say any thing about building Jerusalem?

No. He said, "Come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem." Neh. 2: 17.

When Nehemiah went up to Jerusalem, did he not find houses there?

Yes, for those who builded the wall repaired "every one over against his house" (Neh. 3: 28.)

Did the commission which Nehemiah obtained from Artaxerxes grant him the privilege of building houses at Jerusalem if he had thought proper to do so?

No, for he could not build houses without timber; and "the keeper of the king's forest" was not authorized to let him have more than enough "timber to make beams for the gates of the palace, which appertained to the house, and for the wall of the city, and for the house that" Nehemiah entered into during his stay at Jerusalem. Neh. 2: 8.

Why did he not ask for timber to build Jerusalem?

Because Cyrus had many years before builded Jerusalem, and if "the city was large and great" (Neh. 3: 9, 12), there was no necessity for the privilege of building any more houses there.

Then is it not certain that Jerusalem had been restored and builded long before that time?

Yes, for saith the Lord of Cyrus, "HE shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives."—Isa. 45: 13.

When was the "house of God" finished?

"This house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king." Ezra 6: 15.

And can Daniel's 69 weeks be dated at a later epoch than the completion of the house builded at Jerusalem?

Not if reckoned "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." Dan. 9: 25.

By whose commandment was Jerusalem restored?

It was "builded and finished . . . according to the commandment of the God of Israel."—Ezra 6: 14.

How do you know this?

He "saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built."—Isa. 44: 26.

Whom did the Lord command to build Jerusalem?

He "saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." Isa. 44: 28.

Who is Cyrus?

The king that overthrew Babylon, that "brake in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron."—Isa. 45: 2.

Was the Persian empire called Cyrus?

No, that was called "the kingdom of Persia." 2 Chron. 36: 20.

Did God call the man by name that was to build Jerusalem?

Yes; saith the Lord, "I have even called thee by thy name."—Isa. 45: 4.

What was the name by which he was called?

"Cyrus," the "ravenous bird from the east, THE MAN that executeth my counsel from a far country."—Isa. 46: 11.

Can he whom the Lord calls "THE MAN," whose name is Cyrus, mean the "dynasty," or "kingdom of Persia"?

No, for saith the Lord, "For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name."—Isa. 45: 4.

Of what worth to the "elect" is it that he hath called Cyrus by name?

It puts an end to the controversy as to "the man" whom the God of Israel commanded "to restore and to build Jerusalem."—Dan. 9: 25.

Have we positive evidence that Cyrus did receive "the commandment" of "the God of Israel"?

Yes. Says Josephus, "This was known to Cyrus by his reading the book which Isaiah left behind him." Josephus could not be mistaken in this, for Cyrus acknowledges that "the Lord God of heaven hath . . . charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem" (Ezra 1: 2), and since, in the same verse in which he is charged to lay the foundation of the temple, he is commanded to build Jerusalem, he could not have overlooked it. Isa. 44: 28.

When Cyrus granted the Jews the privilege of building Jerusalem and the temple, did he observe the same order in which he found it recorded in the book of Isaiah?

Yes. In his decree to the Jews, he said that "he gave them leave to go back to their country, and to rebuild their city Jerusalem, and the temple of God"; and in his "epistle to the governors that were in Syria," he observes the same order again, thus:—"I have given leave to the Jews to return to their own country, and to rebuild their city, and to build the temple of God at Jerusalem."

Suppose Jerusalem had not been builded for fifty or a hundred years after; could that affect the date from which the sixty-nine weeks are to be reckoned?

No; for they are reckoned not from the building of Jerusalem, but from "the going forth of the commandment to" build Jerusalem.

Did the God of Israel ever command more than one person to build Jerusalem?

No; for saith the Lord of Cyrus, "He is my shepherd, and shall perform all of my pleasure (in this), even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." Isa. 44: 28.

Since the God of Israel has expressly said of Cyrus, "He shall build my city" (Isa. 45: 13), how can any one believe that he meant Artaxerxes?

Leaving this for others to answer, I conclude that if God said one thing and meant another, the Bible is no revelation to me.

Is it mentioned either in sacred or profane history that Nehemiah restored the Jewish sacrifices?

No; for both Josephus and the Bible agree that they were restored when the Jews returned under Cyrus. Ezra 3: 1-13.

Does either sacred or profane history speak of the Jewish sacrifices having ever been more fully restored than at the time of the dedication of the temple, in the sixth of Darius?

No; for "the priests and the Levites were purified together; all of them were pure"; "and they set the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God which is at Jerusalem; as it is written in the book of Moses."—Ezra 6: 18-20.

And was their service acceptable to the Lord?

We have no evidence of its ever being more so; for "thus saith the Lord, I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies."—Zech. 1: 16.

If by the decree of Cyrus all of the Jews had the privilege of returning home (Ezra 1: 3), and all of the vessels of the house of God were restored (Ezra 1: 7), Jerusalem (Ezra 4: 12) and the temple builded (Ezra 1: 3), all of "the priests and the Levites . . . purified" (Ezra 6: 20), and commenced offering all of their sacrifices "as it is written in the law of Moses, the man of God" (Ezra 3: 2); if the Lord "returned to Jerusalem with mercies" (Zech. 1: 16), insomuch that "all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the Lord," and "sang together . . . in praising and giving thanks unto the Lord," for such a glorious deliverance (Ezra 3: 11); what, we ask, was wanting to make this the full restoration of Israel, the restoring and building of Jerusalem?

WILLIAM C. THURMAN.

For the World's Crisis.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, and the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

At the closing remarks of our last article, we were on the examination of the peculiar circumstances of the saints, who rose from the dead and went into the holy city, after our Savior's resurrection, and appeared unto many. Matt. 27: 52, 53. Our last question, in our last article was this: What constituted the saints who came out of their graves? was it their bodies only, that came out of their graves, and went into the holy city? or did the souls that belonged to those bodies come down from heaven, and go down to where their bodies were, and then enter their bodies, and burst open the prison that contained those bodies, and then come out of their graves and walk into the holy city? How will you answer this important question, dear reader? Would it not be the most reasonable way to say that the whole man, soul and body, went into the grave, or fell asleep in Jesus; and when he rose from the dead, at the crucifixion, that it was the whole man which constituted the saint which rose?

We will now examine the circumstances of raising Lazarus, the brother of Mary and Martha; for we want to know where his soul was, while he was in the grave; so that we can find out whether any one goes to heaven before he has his trial at the day of final judgment. We will pause here a moment, and ask the simple question, did our Savior know whether Lazarus was dead or not? We answer, we think he did. What did our Savior mean when he said, "Lazarus sleepeth;" and as the apostles did not really understand him, he says to them, "Lazarus is dead!" Now what shall we do? Shall we determine to have it that the soul of Lazarus was alive in heaven, when Christ said he was dead? Do any persist in their belief that a part of Lazarus was alive in heaven, and the other part dead and in the grave? Let us follow Jesus to the grave of Lazarus, and take a view of the operations there.

I think it was said by both the pious sisters to their heavenly visitor, that if he had been there their brother would not have died. The Savior says to Martha, "Thy brother shall rise again." How much of Lazarus is here meant by our Savior? also, what is meant by "brother"? Did the Savior mean only half of Lazarus, or only half of thy brother? What did Jesus do at the grave? He said, "Take ye away the stone." He then looked up to his Father, "and said, Father, I thank thee that . . . thou hearest me always." Here it was shown to all present that he looked up to his Father for power to fulfill his great mission on the earth. He then cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth." And the dead heard his voice and "came forth." Here comes the point that I want the reader to notice in particular. Did the Savior call the soul of Lazarus from heaven to go down into the grave, and enter the body, and then call Lazarus from the grave? or, did he call the whole of Lazarus forth from the grave?

One more question, and I am done with this subject; and that is this: In Joshua 1: 2, "the Lord spake unto Joshua . . . . Moses my servant is dead." Did our heavenly Father know whether Moses was dead or not? We think he did. And he said, "Moses my servant is dead." Was Moses alive when God said he was dead? We think the whole of Moses was dead. If he was raised afterwards, it was the whole of Moses.

Our next article will be on the subject of the punishment of the wicked.

Vernon, Vt. B. PERHAM.

"DOES THE SOUL LIVE IN DEATH?"

NUMBER THREE.

In pursuing this subject, the author of this tract assures us that, if we will admit the principle that when the body dies the life element in man lives on, all will be plain. Then we may understand how it is that Paul desired to "depart and be with Christ, which is far better; but to remain in the flesh was more needful for you."

But this is all plain enough without. Paul did not desire his soul, or the life element, to depart and be with Christ. He wished to be with Christ himself. And this he knew could not be until Christ should appear the second time. Hence, he said to the Colossians (ch. 3: 1-4), "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory." And when about to suffer martyrdom in Rome in his old age, he said to Timothy (ch. 4: 6, 7), "I am ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." And now was the time, if ever, for him to speak of the life element departing to be with Christ. But what does he say? Not one word about the intermediate state, but, "henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them who love his appearing."

"Absent from the body, and present with the Lord." "At home in the body, and absent from the Lord" (2 Cor. 5: 6-8), is of the same class of passages, and shows that he looked for and desired the immortal state. "Not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon," "that mortality might be swallowed up of life." This he expected at the resurrection, and not before.

Peter also said, I must "put off this my tabernacle." Did the soul, or life element, put off the body in this case? Said Peter, "I will that ye may be able, after my decease, to have these things always in remembrance." Peter expected to die. "After my decease." Nothing said about a life element continuing in existence: and in this connection he speaks of his hope as being connected with the coming of Christ. "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory."—1 Pet. 5: 4.

The case of the Messiah is also brought up to prove the conscious intermediate state, in these words: "Of Christ Peter said, 'His soul was not left in hades (the invisible world), neither did his flesh see corruption.'"—Acts 2: 31. Let us read the whole passage:

"Him, being delivered by the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain; whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. For David speaketh concerning him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face; for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved: therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover, also, my flesh shall rest in hope: because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance. Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses."—Acts 2: 23-32.

It will be seen that Peter speaks of the resurrection of Christ. Not one word about the under world, or invisible world. Christ was buried, and rose again. He was not left in hades (the grave, the under world) to see corruption, but came forth from the grave, on the third day, triumphant; "whereof," said Peter, "we are all witnesses."

No one who reads these passages with a simple faith, without a preconceived theory to support, would ever entertain a doubt but what the apostle held and taught the simple resurrection of Christ from the tomb without seeing corruption. This is all that is given in the sacred narrative.

But our brother asks, "Why do those who hold the unconsciousness of the dead never use such language as Paul and Peter did, relating to the intermediate state, if they really believe they teach that the whole being dies in natural death? Why do they never use such parables to teach their ideas as that of the rich man and Lazarus? Christ used that language, and never undertook to explain it away, as they do."

To which we reply, that we love to dwell on the passages that are [illegible] to teach an imperfect, intermediate state, because they bring to view the perfect state for which the apostles, with ourselves, have longed and prayed. We would be absent from the body of mortality and be with Christ. Not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon; that mortality might be swallowed up of life. We do not confine these passages to hades, or the under world, with its rewardless and dreary waiting for the restitution at the coming of Christ. We go to sleep in Jesus, and the next instant of apparent time finds us with Christ in the kingdom, singing—"O grave, where is thy victory. O death, where is thy sting? Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

As to the parables, we use them in all their fulness. The rich man and Lazarus are not explained away, but explained in harmony with the other parables and the perfections of God.

But we will ask, Why do they not quote and use the parables without explaining them away? Take the parable of the tares and wheat. Does that not plainly teach that the tares (or wicked) are burned up in the fire (Matt. 13: 40), while the righteous shine forth in the kingdom? Yet they only quote such scriptures to deny them; and hold that the tares, the wicked, are to burn in eternal anguish, without cessation of life. Why do they continually explain away the words of God that relate to the end of the wicked—such as "everlasting destruction," "perish," "consume," "destroy," "burnt up root and branch," and like expressions with which the Bible abounds? They have to explain away all these plain declarations of the Holy Spirit, to sustain their theory of a conscious intermediate state, and after the judgment a state of eternal misery.

We are asked why we do not teach as Peter did that Christ "went and preached" to "the spirits in prison, which some time were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing?" We do teach this, just as Peter did. But we do not teach a Popish fable, and found it on the word of God; nor promise dead men probation in purgatory. Why should we? The spirit of Christ warned the persons spoken of then, "while the ark was preparing." That was their time of probation.

We are also asked why we do not teach, as Peter did, that the "gospel was preached unto the dead." 1 Pet. 4: 6. We do; but not to dead men in hades, the grave. For "there is no knowledge in sheol," the grave. It was to men who were living in a probationary state. Protestant commentators agree in this, as a general thing; and yet we are told that "Materialists do not use apostolic language relating to these things." Or, if they quote such language, "it is to see how adroitly they can explain it away." This would seem to be a heavy charge; yet, being without foundation, we let it pass. The truth is, we use apostolic language and ideas both; and not the ideas of a later and corrupt age of the church. And we are happy to know that thousands once holding to those errors are coming out on the pure word of God, resolved to take the Bible just as it reads; letting one part of the book explain the other. This does away with probation in hades, and eternal misery in the "Valley of Hinnom."—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

SATISFIED.

To enjoy the favor of God is to become acquainted with him. In loving him because he first loved us, is to admire the creations of his hand. God's beautiful earth, with its signature of goodness, as seen in the annual resurrection of nature fresh from his hand, demonstrates that our earthly existence is an indulgence of grace. In longings after the unseen and beautiful, never forget that his "Royal Master is among us."

In my checkered life, I have seen spots on earth so beautiful that if sin, with cold, freezing shadows, could never come, if death could not disturb its repose, I could wish to dwell amid it forever. Plastic beauty is of God, and is the shadow of things to come, when the body will be Christ's.

Man was not born to die. If he must die through moral degeneracy, still in this common lot broods no ruin through a virtuous education, our own endeavors, and the blessing of God. He is all mercy, while justice is the habitation of his throne. The supremacy of his judgment is shared in the great benevolent character of his Son. Since the freedom of atonement, erring mortals cannot provoke his anger. No crude or narrow sense of man's wickedness is a partaker of his generosity. Freaks of periodical vindictiveness are not the attributes of One whose plan is to reconcile an alienated world to him. The power which he abhors may well drown some in perdition; but the sovereignty of the cross will not abrogate the justice of the sentence. I love his Son because he ever liveth to make intercession for me.

The holy man may sin, but to such the Master saith, "Go and sin no more." With my profoundest aspirations thirsting for and only quenched in Heaven, I am perfectly contented with my Father's will respecting his erratic children. Earth's daily interviews and intercourse with Heaven, are the seal of my acceptance. I ask no more.

With this credit of approbation from One on high, I am fitted to love, sympathize, and try to save that which is lost. In the consciousness of doing good, I possess the dictates with which to regulate my conduct. And when the Master of Assemblies honors his immortal banquet with the bread and water of life, may I witness my perpetual happiness—interminable as the years of God.

Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine.

They are more simple, durable, and less liable to derangement than others.

They sew with equal facility all fabrics, the most delicate and the heaviest, and with all kinds of thread, silk, cotton, or linen.

The seam is so strong and elastic that, when properly sewed, it will not break, even on the bias.

They fasten both ends of the seam by their own operation.

The seam, though cut at every sixth stitch, remains firm, and neither runs or ravels in wear.

The face stitch is more plump and beautiful, and retains its plumpness and beauty after washing better than any other.

Watching and varying the tensions upon the threads, necessary in other machines, is unnecessary in this. The tension being once adjusted on the GROVER & BAKER machine, any amount of sewing may done without change.

They will make BEAUTIFUL EMBROIDERY without any change of arrangement, simply by inserting threads of suitable sizes and colors for this purpose. These are the only machines that both embroider and sew perfectly.

NAMES.

Notwithstanding all we have said to those who send articles for the Crisis, there are some who still neglect to sign their names to their communications. Such must not expect to see their articles in the paper; hence they lose all their labor. When we find no name accompanying an article, we do not usually stop to read it. When a man comes to preach, you do not expect he will withhold his name; if he should do so, you would think something was not right in his case. So when a letter is written to an individual, he expects to find the true name signed at the bottom; if it is not, it looks rather suspicious. Why, then, should christians be ashamed of their names when they write in their family paper, for the comfort and edification of all its readers? Be assured, no one reads an anonymous communication with half the interest that he would if he knew who wrote it.

We have some excellent articles on hand, which we should gladly publish if we only knew who wrote them. Let this false modesty, which causes some to be ashamed of their names, be done away among us. Your friends would read your articles with great interest, if they only knew that you were the writer; and might also receive much benefit, which is all lost without the name. Now, please remember this. Will you?

VISIT TO CONNECTICUT.

Our late visit to Ct. was one of pleasure and profit. On our way, we spent one Lord's day in Springfield. Our meetings were in the Opera Hall. Some seven or eight hundred were out to hear, and gave good attention to discourses on the subject of Spiritualism, and the evidences that Jesus is soon coming. There is evidently a growing interest among those looking for the second advent of our Lord, and new ones are waking up to watch the signs of the times. Our conference meeting at noon was one of the best we have enjoyed for a long time. It seemed like the meetings we used to have twenty years ago. Several young converts were present from different places, who brought in heart cheering testimonies. It was a heavenly place, and we were much cheered by what we heard, saw, and felt.

Our meetings in Newfield, Ct., were very encouraging. This is the first place where we ever held a protracted meeting, which was fifteen years ago, in company with Bro. S. G. Mathewson. A large number were converted at that time, some of whom have fallen asleep in Jesus, others moved away, some have gone back to the world, others are lukewarm, but some are bright and shining lights. During our last meetings, backsliders were reclaimed, new ones resolved to become christians, and the saints were greatly strengthened. The Lord favored us with rich blessings.

On the Lord's day, they came in from ten and twelve miles around, and formed a great congregation. It seemed like meetings held there fourteen years ago. We were thankful for the privilege of seeing so many familiar faces, which we had scarcely met for ten years. We thought of the time when the saints will be gathered into the kingdom to greet all the good that have ever lived. We found the living members of Christ's body strong in the faith that they shall soon see Jesus. We find this the case in all places. There is an increased interest and union of feeling on the subject. The Spirit of the Lord appears to be impressing the minds of all believers that our Savior will soon come to set up his kingdom.

We closed our meetings in N. by the commemoration of the Lord's death and sufferings, hoping to be allowed the blessed privilege of eating with him at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

ONE TENTH.

It was the practice among the Jews to give one tenth of their income, as required by the Lord. The priests also gave one tenth of what was given them. Shall we, who live in these last days, when there are so many ways of doing good, do less than the Jews, who had not half the light and privileges that we enjoy? We think one tenth of all our income is the least that any one should do for the Lord. But let us remember "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver." He does not want what is given grudgingly. He gives freely to us, and wishes us to imitate him, and thus show that we have his Spirit.

According to the Scriptures and facts around us, this is emphatically a covetous generation. Let us all be on the watch lest that withering spirit get possession of us unawares. We think it very important to adopt a plan of systematic benevolence. Let us all give one tenth, at least, of our income to the Lord, during the coming year, and we think many will feel richer at its close, should time continue, than they will to lay it up to perish.

A poor sister writes:—"I and my lame daughter send a mite,—one tenth of what we have earned since campmeeting by taking sewing. . . . We send it to the Freedmen's Mission Fund. . . . We shall send more when we have health to earn it."

Here is a noble example of self-denial for the good of others. This is the way to lay up treasure in heaven. Let us all try to do more for the Lord, and less for ourselves. One man said on his dying bed, "What I have given away I have saved, and what I have kept I have lost." How true the remark. It is high time to begin to lay up something for the life to come.

FRANCE AND MEXICO.

The Mexican question is occupying the attention of Congress, and exciting considerable interest. Some pretty sharp words are being used relative to the French occupation of Mexico. A war cloud is rising between the two countries, that may result in a terrible storm of war.

Says the Boston Daily Herald, of Dec. 13th, 1865:—

"We observe that the first step in the ventilation of the Mexican question has already been taken in Congress, in the shape of a joint resolution protesting against the establishment of a monarchy in Mexico, and requesting the President to take such steps as will vindicate the American policy and protect the honor and interests of the United States. This resolution has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is a fact beyond a question that a large part of the American people look upon the course of Napoleon in this Mexican business as an insult to our government which never would have been offered while we were at peace among ourselves, and for which we should now demand satisfaction. Or, in the pithy words of Gen. Sheridan, they believe that the Mexican empire is a part of the rebellion, and that it should go down with it. Believing as we do in the patriotism of the American people, we cannot doubt that any necessary war for the vindication of the honor or the maintenance of the rights of this country, would be supported by a large majority of the people, and that our flag would gain new laurels in an encounter with any power on earth."

A Paris correspondent, of the 24th ult., gives the other side of the subject, which also looks rather dark and threatening. When referring to the Mexican question, the reporter of the communication from the Paris correspondent says, as published in the Boston Herald of Dec. 13th. "He sends a disquisition by Lamartine on the political affairs of this continent, published in the monthly periodical Entreties Literateurs. He boldly defends the Emperor Maximilian's policy, and says it is a sublime conception, vast as the ocean, as new as all that which is apropos. A conception of a statesman, a conception of safety for America and the world. The idea of a bold and efficacious position to be taken in Mexico against the usurpation of the United States, is a new but just idea. Europe has the right to take this position. France takes the initiative. He then starts from the position that the new continent of America is the property of Europe, to prove that France has a right to assume this policy, and having shown this to his satisfaction, he draws a picture of Americans as a community and as individuals, which cannot be regarded as very flattering to the United States."

It would take but a little to fan the war smoke to an alarming flame, that would involve the United States in a fight with the great monarch of earth. Many, no doubt, are anxious to have it begin, that they may make some money out of it. We expect Napoleon will in some way get control of this nation, and attach it to the chariot wheels of his triumph. His plans are laid with great skill, and he seldom makes a failure. When he gets possession of a country, he does not give it up, unless it is for his interest to do so. We do not think he will let go of Mexico, though he may make many promises to that effect, and thus blind the American government, while he is strengthening his hold on this continent. The nations will find at last that he is not bound by his promises any longer than he finds his purposes advanced by keeping them. Like a bankrupt debtor, he promises when he does not intend to keep his word. No man, we think, ever had greater power than Napoleon III. We shall watch his movements with deep interest during the remainder of his wonderful career. We are expecting new developments soon, that will throw additional light on the evidences of the Lord's speedy coming. Let us all watch, and be sober, for it is an hour of peril.

FENIANISM.

We think but few are aware of the character of the "Fenian movement." They do not dream that it is a Catholic device to get control of the government of this country as well as Ireland. If it be said it is not a Catholic movement, because it is not sanctioned by the priesthood, it may be remarked that this is but a part of the whole plan.

The following article from Zion's Herald, of Dec. 6th, 1865, will set the subject before the reader, we think, in its true light:—

FENIANISM, THE NEW MASK OF POPERY.

The African Bushman, when he goes to hunt the ostrich, robes himself in the plumage of one already captured, and by imitating the screams and gambols of his game, succeeds in getting near enough to transfix it with his poisoned arrow. Romanism in the United States is just now busily engaged playing the game of the Bushman decked in the uniform of Fenianism mimicking the songs and sentiments of liberty, she is trying to throw the nation off her guard, that she may pierce her friendly, unsuspecting heart with the poisoned arrows of the Papacy.

Were it not for the malignant and murderous animus of this Fenian movement it would be highly amusing to see the ridiculous figure which it makes to gain the popular favor of the various nations where it has an existence. In America it is democratic down to the soles of its brogans. It makes itself hoarse with hurrahing for liberty and equality. Down with the lazy aristocracy. With pockets filled with the bonds of the Irish Republic, with the stars and stripes at its head, it threatens to drive the Saxon invader from the Emerald gem of the ocean.

In England, it is loyal and royal to the back bone. It whines most piteously over the sorrows of poor Ireland, because her fair soil is so seldom pressed by the foot of her "Most gracious Majesty, Queen Victoria." One of the great farces of the day is to find the London Times, the Jupiter Tonans of humbugs, in a long pompous article give grave consideration to this sad grievance of the sister kingdom, and prescribing as a sovereign remedy for all her woes, that some scion of the blood royal should spend a few weeks every summer in fishing or shooting amongst the beautiful woods and lakes of that sad and neglected island. We fancy we can see the redoubtable Archbishop of Tuam, as he reads this leader in the Times, with a sardonic smile upon his face exclaiming, Why, John Bull, what a huge calf you always are!

In Ireland, but little effort is made to conceal the true character of this movement. Every true son of the order believes as devoutly that Fenianism is Popery, as he does in the real presence of the consecrated wafer. He will curse the Queen of England to a place deeper and hotter than Purgatory. He will hire ballad singers to parade the streets of Romish towns, and bawl their savage song guiltless of poetry or music, but compensating for their absence by breathing out slaughter against Protestantism. Take the following stanza as a specimen:

> Remember well those bloody stripes,
> Remember all you can—
> The flood of tears the orphan wipes,
> Perfidious Orange man.
> To you we owe a host of griefs,
> And griefs we'll e'er deplore,
> But soon led on by our brave chiefs,
> We'll blast you off our shores.

He will pour down his libations of whisky that "never saw the eye of a gauger," and utter sentiments in honor of his co-religionists, that for blood-thirstiness, would send the cold chills through the heart of a Dahomey hangman. Take the following toast as an example: it was found in manuscript in a book, the Minutes of a Fenian Lodge, captured by the British government: "Here's to——, Long may he live; may he live till he sees chapels built ten miles long and seven miles broad; built with Protestant bones; thatched with ministers' skins, whitewashed with their blood, and their back bones for scrapers at their doors."

But you say we must not take such outrageous exaggeration to represent the character of the entire movement, that it is only the language of drunken bombasts. Ah, my dear friend Tenderthought, what would you have said had it been told you two or three years ago, that men regarded by their co-religionists as devout and worthy members of the Roman Catholic church, should attempt the burning of cities, such as New York and Boston, and their depopulation by the introduction of small pox and yellow fever? That all the influence of the Romish Church in the United States should be exerted to save from the gallows the Roman Catholic assassins of the wisest and best statesman of his age, honest Abraham Lincoln? That John Surratt, the only unpunished murderer of the late President, should escape from the hand of justice, by being secreted in a Romish monastery in Canada? In short, that the whole of this conspiracy, from Dr. Blackburn to Wirz, the arch fiend of Andersonville, was concocted and consumated, with but a few exceptions, by Roman Catholics, acting in the interests of a cause recognized, honored and prayed for by the infallible head of the Holy Roman Catholic Church?

If they do these things in a green tree, what will they do in a dry? Should Popery ever gain the power for which it is so eagerly struggling, be assured of the repetition of events which would parallel the massacre of St. Bartholomew's, still a red letter day in the Romish Calendar. The cruelties of Wexford, and the savages of Sculabogue Barn, make the hellish toast, already quoted, no longer a hyperbole.

Wherever there is a chance of attracting the attention of the Protestant world, the priests openly avow themselves hostile to this Fenian movement. They are too crafty to give any public support to an enterprise of such a revolutionary character. It is yet too young and feeble, they prefer that their silly dupes should run all the risk, while they stand ready to grasp all the benefit. If a traitor's halter is to be thrown around anybody's neck, they stand ready to show how zealously they exerted themselves against this unlawful agitation; indeed, some of them have gone so far as to inform the British Government that one item contemplated in the impending Fenian revolt is the indiscriminate slaughter of the Roman Catholic clergy. None but Jesuits could invent so monstrous a lie as this. The world knows that never till Satan casts out Satan will Fenianism prove unfriendly to priestcraft. Just as this cause progresses and gives promise of success, do these reverend gentlemen throw off their reserve, and smile complacently upon it. Fenian lodges are held in vestries connected with Roman Catholic churches. One clergyman, who has been indiscreet in advocating this movement, is openly deprived of his curacy, while another is dispatched as agent of the fraternity to strengthen the hands of the brethren in the old country.

Of late, there has been some terrific noises heard in the direction of the Eternal City. His Holiness has let out his old bull, and set him a blowing at the Free Masons. Do you want to know what this means? If you are a Protestant, it means that His Holiness, like his illustrious predecessors, is the eternal foe of all secret societies. Are you a Roman Catholic, it means, as the American head centre of the order interprets it, that Fenianism is to be let alone. Latterly, however, a letter of the Pope to the Bishop of Baltimore, on the subject of Fenianism, has been published. It contains but a sentence or two, and simply states that Fenianism is not to be encouraged. Why, O! Pio Nino, such fierce wrath fulminated ex-cathedra against Free Masonry, and not one unkind word against this sanguinary organization which threatens to level both church and state, and which, by their own showing, lays plans for a wholesale massacre of every Roman Catholic priest in Ireland? Be assured of this, most reverend prelate, that a live Yankee, with all his appetite for sensation announcements, cannot swallow so monstrous a humbug. He fancies he can see as much sincerity in your opposition to Fenianism as in the hair rump which is worn upon your distinguished person, when borne through the streets of Rome, on the shoulders of your vassals, you sit at your ease, blessing the people who, deceived by your sham appendage, blindly fancying you kneel most devoutly, all the time, while performing this imposing ceremony.

If it is proved that Fenianism is essentially Romish in its character, it follows that it is just as hostile to the Government of the United States as it is to the Government of Great Britain. Romanism ever has and ever will be the deadly antagonist of both civil and religious liberty all the world over. Those very men who are now in this country, such ardent worshipers of liberty, and who are so impatient to draw the sword to secure liberty to the land of their birth, only a little while ago were collecting contributions to fit out the brigade of ragged rascals who left Ireland, bidden and blessed by their priests, on a crusade in favor of the Pope, and against the liberties of Italy. They would rivet the chains of the most degrading and cruel slavery upon the hands of such patriots as Garibaldi, while they would go on their knees to President Johnson to secure the liberation of a rabid pro-slavery traitor like John Mitchell.

We are far from asserting that every Roman Catholic in the land is an enemy to liberty or a traitor to the glorious flag around which so many of them have nobly fought and died; but this we do say, that just to the extent that he is loyal and true to his country, he is false and hostile to the Pope. We are too intently Protestant to countenance the slightest degree of persecution against any man on account of his religious opinions. We claim for our Catholic citizens all the liberties that we demand for ourselves. We would not require his children in our common schools to read from a version of the Scriptures which their priests did not approve, nor repeat the Lord's Prayer or Ten Commandments, in a form unauthorized by their church. But when I hear Fenian orators in the city of Boston, in a public meeting, openly declare that it was the object of their order, not only to liberate their brethren in Ireland but to elect a good Roman Catholic President of these United States; when I see them doing their utmost to involve this nation in a war with England, opening the way for Louis Napoleon to carry out his infamous schemes for securing the supremacy of the Latin race, which means, as practised in the case of Tahiti and Madagascar, the subjugation of the world in the despotism of the Papacy, then we would say to every lover of his country, humanity and God, "Keep your powder dry."

THE FREEDMEN'S MISSION.

The friends of the freedmen may expect to hear from the mission soon. Brn. Himes and Flagg started for the South Dec. 1st, their departure having been delayed beyond the time expected by sickness in Bro. Himes' family. Pray for the mission, brethren.

REPORT OF DANSVILLE MEETING.

As I was appointed Secretary pro. tem. for the Quarterly Christian Conference held in Dansville, N Y., Dec. 7th to 10th, I would say that it was a very precious season to all the pilgrims gathered there. There has not been held a more interesting conference among us in Western New York, perhaps for years. Many of the aged pilgrims said they had never attended a better meeting.

The ordained preachers present were Elds. C. F. Sweet of Albion, C. W. Low of Fredonia, C. B. Turner of So. Butler, and F. Burr of Dansville. Unordained, Bro. C. H. Williams, Clayton, Jefferson Co., and Bro. H. H. Brown, Allen, Alleghany Co., the former being ordained at the close of the conference.

The meetings were largely attended by people of the village who were very sensibly impressed with the spiritual power of the meetings and the deep root which God's truth has taken in the hearts of the Advent people. The truth is working like leaven, and never was there so much interest here as now. And never was there a better chance to labor in Western N. Y. than now. The field is ripe for the harvest, and we hope brethren will take heed to the appeal we make in this paper for help.

At the love feast held on Sunday morning at this conference, over sixty gave in their testimony in about one hour, and it was really a feast of love. The preachers reported the blessing of God upon their labors, and that many open doors in new places were set before them, and the truth is having an unusually good effect. The conference passed the following resolution:—

Whereas, we hear of the recent death of Eld. Webster,—Resolved, That as a conference we deeply feel the loss of Eld. Lawrence Webster of Conesus, and do sympathize with his family and the church in that vicinity in their affliction. As the matter of ministerial support was considered by the conference, Eld. F. Burr and Bro. John Wilkinson were appointed to make an appeal through the papers upon this subject.

At the close of the Sunday evening services Eld. C. H. Williams was ordained to the ministry. The service was solemn and impressive. Thus closed the best conference, in my estimation, ever attended.

A brother in Iowa writes as follows:—"I sent you $2.35, a few weeks ago, to pay up my indebtedness, and ordered the Crisis stopped, on account of poor health and not feeling able to pay for it any longer. Much as I liked it, and loth as I was to part with it, yet I thought I should have to get along without it. But Deacon B—— and his wife called on us, or rather visited us after the manner laid down by St. James, and asked me if I still took the Crisis. I told him that I had ordered it stopped, because I was not able to pay for it, and did not want to burden the office by having my name attached to the free list, but hardly knew how to do without it. He said I should have it another year, and gave me $2.50 to pay for it. May the Lord bless him for his kindness. And now I want you to send me the paper again for another year, and if time lasts, and I live, perhaps the Lord will open a way for me to pay for it hereafter. AN APPEAL

DEAR BRETHREN:—Being appointed by the late conference to make an appeal to you for ministerial support, we solicit your earnest attention to the subject. It demands your attention, and we urge you to awake to an interest in the facts of the case. New fields are continually opening for our ministers to proclaim the truth where they have hitherto been debarred. To attend these calls they must leave their families, and go forth toiling and laboring, and often sorrowing over the straightened circumstances of loved ones at home. And thus, while they are trying to spread God's truth with a liberal hand, they are fettered with the thought of need at their homes. Brethren, this ought not so to be. Think for a moment. Would you go forth under such circumstances, leaving wife and children with little food and fuel, to shift as best they can for weeks, while the husband and father is laboring in the vineyard of the Lord for a mere pittance, when used to support his family? Say, would you do this? Let us think of the wives and children of our ministers, and in God's name let them suffer no longer. We mean you, brother (and the conference knows who you are), who are worth your thousands in this world's estimation, and yet who do almost nothing for the promulgation of the truths you pretend to hold so dear. What are you doing with your money? Giving it to spendthrift sons to waste in midnight carousals,—to giddy daughters to deck themselves in the trappings of hell; hoarding it up against a day of destruction; adding farm to farm and stock to stock; speculating in oil and grain, etc., while angels weep over sinners unconverted, and the world is perishing for the "bread of life."

Shall our ministers stay at home and toil with their hands to support their families? or shall they have our pledges of support that they may go free to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom? Think of this matter. There are many preachers lying idle among us from this very cause, while those at home are fettered. We propose at the next conference to make this matter take a tangible form, and we want you to be there and lend your aid. In the meantime, do not hesitate, but give liberally as stewards of the Lord. Something has been done already in this line. Much is being done by many liberal souls, but much more must be done, and that soon, for the Lord cometh.

The truths which our ministering brethren are bringing out of the great storehouse of truth—the Bible—are of infinite importance; and we, who have become enlightened and instructed therein, cannot but feel that their universal proclamation, belief and obedience, would work great and salutary influence in our world. Such proclamation can only be made by men of like precious faith, and it cannot be done without aid. See to it that the words of the apostle do not apply to you: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for the miseries that shall come upon you," etc.

In behalf of the Christian Conference of Western New York and vicinity.

For the World's Crisis.

FROM BRO. WM. STONE.

BRO. GRANT:—As the great events of prophecy are opening to our view, we may discern the certainty that the fifth kingdom will soon be set up. When Rome comes to an end, that must end the fourth kingdom. I see no space to intervene between the latter and God's everlasting kingdom; therefore, let the reader read the following extracts, and take warning. The Master will soon rise up and shut the door of salvation; then will the filthy "be filthy still"; no change in their condition after that. The "inheritance" must be given to the saints. They will possess it forever. The wicked must be cut off from inheriting the earth. They shall not dwell therein forever. They must give place to the heirs of the kingdom. The Master says, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not" he cometh. Procrastinate a preparation a little, and fearful will be the consequences.

W. C. STONE.

"ITALY.—Victor Emanuel, in a speech at the opening of Parliament, said, time and the force of events would solve the question pending between Italy and Papacy. Italy must remain faithful to the convention of November, which France would completel carry out within the appointed time. Henceforth it would be easy to wait."

"The London Patriot, of Nov. 9th, in a leading editorial, alluding to the evacuation of Rome by the French troops, and the general condition of the Popedom, says: 'The curtain is beginning to lift a little on the great event of the coming year. Great as are the domestic interests of England, France, Germany and America, the main interests of 1866 seem to gather around Rome. There lies the heart of the coming struggle, and the actors are already placing themselves for their several parts.'"

"Later from Rome.—Numerous encounters are reported between the pontifical gens de armes and the brigands, the former displaying great energy."

For the World's Crisis.

EIGHT WEEKS.

(Concluded.)

On Friday evening Brn. W. and L. arrived, and on Saturday we commenced "besieging the city in its gates"; but the resistance was obstinate; all the week, from some cause, then to me unknown, the meeting had dragged. On Friday night Hiram Munger's "Cain family" got up their opposition scheme and had a ball and "a tiger"; the music and dancing within doors, the howling without. The arrangement had been to close the meeting on Sunday night, but on Saturday I providentially discovered the cause of slim meetings.

During the summer a proposition had been extended to me thus:—If I would write the challenge, state the questions, and set the time, the friends of the popular views would present their champion, and we should discuss the questions of the non-immortality of the wicked, literal death of soul and body, the penalty of God's law for sin, and the consequent destruction of the wicked, and the unconscious state of the dead until the resurrection, with the final and everlasting reign of the saints on the earth. This proposition I accepted, fixing on this time of our meeting for the debate; but when up two weeks previous, had been notified, to my chagrin, that no disputant on their side would appear; at which time I notified them publicly from the desk that they must bring forward "their man," or suffer loss. We intended to defeat them, as in any case we had the word of God, the "sword of the Spirit," to do it with. To defeat this, a combination was entered into by the different sects to keep away from the meeting themselves, and influence all others to do so that they could. Pilate and Herod had been made friends.

This combination I providentially discovered, and traced out. On Sunday morning we had a good house, and Bro. Wendell preached one of his best discourses, from Acts 13:40, 41. Bro. King prayed and listened, Bro. L. prayed and watched Bro. W., while I prayed and scanned the countenances of the hearers, as Jonas poured broadside after broadside of shot, shell and shrapnell into their insecure fortress of "the world's conversion before the Lord comes." When Bro. W. laid aside his "port-fire," he had "driven the enemy all into the ditch," and left the gun full shotted with grape and cannister. O how I wanted to fire that gun; but courtesy forbade. It devolved upon me to close the exercises.

I had seen that unless "the combination" was broken up, our meeting would prove a failure, and if broken, truth might be the gainer. There was nothing to lose, but every thing to win; the disease was of a desperate character, and demanded corresponding desperate measures in its treatment. The limb must be amputated, or the patient must die. The desperate situation, and myself only being cognizant of it, gave me a coolness and resolution fitting the emergency, and I resolved to "blow up the magazine," clear the ditch, and hoist the flag of truth on the ramparts, or perish, like a true soldier, in the undertaking.

Taking from my pocket a copy of the Morning Star, printed in Dover, N. H., I read the following article to the congregation:

MORE AWFUL THAN THE JUDGMENT.

A celebrated preacher of the seventeenth century, in a sermon to a crowded audience, described the terrors of the last judgment with such eloquence, pathos, and force of action, that some of his audience not only burst into tears, but sent forth piercing cries, as if the Judge himself had been present, and was about to pass upon them their final sentence. In the height of this excitement the preacher called upon them to dry their tears and cease their cries, as he was about to add something still more awful and astonishing than anything he had yet brought before them. Silence being obtained, he, with an agitated countenance and solemn voice, addressed them thus: "In one quarter of an hour from this time the emotions which you have just now exhibited will be stifled; the remembrance of the fearful

GEO. T. ADAMS, BUSINESS AGENT.

Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine.

They are more simple, durable, and less liable to derangement than others.

They sew with equal facility all fabrics, the most delicate and the heaviest, and with all kinds of thread, silk, cotton, or linen.

The seam is so strong and elastic that, when properly sewed, it will not break, even on the bias.

They fasten both ends of the seam by their own operation.

The seam, though cut at every sixth stitch, remains firm, and neither runs or ravels in wear.

The face stitch is more plump and beautiful, and retains its plumpness and beauty after washing better than any other.

Watching and varying the tensions upon the threads, necessary in other machines, is unnecessary in this. The tension being once adjusted on the GROVER & BAKER machine, any amount of sewing may done without change.

They will make BEAUTIFUL EMBROIDERY without any change of arrangement, simply by inserting threads of suitable sizes and colors for this purpose. These are the only machines that both embroider and sew perfectly.

The Best Book for Every Body.

The new illustrated edition of Webster's Dictionary, containing three thousand engravings, is the best book for every body that the press has produced in the present century, and should be regarded as indispensable to the well-regulated home, reading-room, library, and place of business.—San Francisco Golden Era.

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 20, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

NAMES.

Notwithstanding all we have said to those who send articles for the Crisis, there are some who still neglect to sign their names to their communications. Such must not expect to see their articles in the paper; hence they lose all their labor. When we find no name accompanying an article, we do not usually stop to read it. When a man comes to preach, you do not expect he will withhold his name; if he should do so, you would think something was not right in his case. So when a letter is written to an individual, he expects to find the true name signed at the bottom; if it is not, it looks rather suspicious. Why, then, should christians be ashamed of their names when they write in their family paper, for the comfort and edification of all its readers? Be assured, no one reads an anonymous communication with half the interest that he would if he knew who wrote it.

We have some excellent articles on hand, which we should gladly publish if we only knew who wrote them. Let this false modesty, which causes some to be ashamed of their names, be done away among us. Your friends would read your articles with great interest, if they only knew that you were the writer; and might also receive much benefit, which is all lost without the name. Now, please remember this. Will you?

VISIT TO CONNECTICUT.

Our late visit to Ct. was one of pleasure and profit. On our way, we spent one Lord's day in Springfield. Our meetings were in the Opera Hall. Some seven or eight hundred were out to hear, and gave good attention to discourses on the subject of Spiritualism, and the evidences that Jesus is soon coming. There is evidently a growing interest among those looking for the second advent of our Lord, and new ones are waking up to watch the signs of the times. Our conference meeting at noon was one of the best we have enjoyed for a long time. It seemed like the meetings we used to have twenty years ago. Several young converts were present from different places, who brought in heart cheering testimonies. It was a heavenly place, and we were much cheered by what we heard, saw, and felt.

Our meetings in Newfield, Ct., were very encouraging. This is the first place where we ever held a protracted meeting, which was fifteen years ago, in company with Bro. S. G. Mathewson. A large number were converted at that time, some of whom have fallen asleep in Jesus, others moved away, some have gone back to the world, others are lukewarm, but some are bright and shining lights. During our last meetings, backsliders were reclaimed, new ones resolved to become christians, and the saints were greatly strengthened. The Lord favored us with rich blessings.

On the Lord's day, they came in from ten and twelve miles around, and formed a great congregation. It seemed like meetings held there fourteen years ago. We were thankful for the privilege of seeing so many familiar faces, which we had scarcely met for ten years. We thought of the time when the saints will be gathered into the kingdom to greet all the good that have ever lived. We found the living members of Christ's body strong in the faith that they shall soon see Jesus. We find this the case in all places. There is an increased interest and union of feeling on the subject. The Spirit of the Lord appears to be impressing the minds of all believers that our Savior will soon come to set up his kingdom.

We closed our meetings in N. by the commemoration of the Lord's death and sufferings, hoping to be allowed the blessed privilege of eating with him at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

ONE TENTH.

It was the practice among the Jews to give one tenth of their income, as required by the Lord. The priests also gave one tenth of what was given them. Shall we, who live in these last days, when there are so many ways of doing good, do less than the Jews, who had not half the light and privileges that we enjoy? We think one tenth of all our income is the least that any one should do for the Lord. But let us remember "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver." He does not want what is given grudgingly. He gives freely to us, and wishes us to imitate him, and thus show that we have his Spirit.

According to the Scriptures and facts around us, this is emphatically a covetous generation. Let us all be on the watch lest that withering spirit get possession of us unawares. We think it very important to adopt a plan of systematic benevolence. Let us all give one tenth, at least, of our income to the Lord, during the coming year, and we think many will feel richer at its close, should time continue, than they will to lay it up to perish.

A poor sister writes:—"I and my lame daughter send a mite,—one tenth of what we have earned since campmeeting by taking sewing. . . . We send it to the Freedmen's Mission Fund. . . . We shall send more when we have health to earn it."

Here is a noble example of self-denial for the good of others. This is the way to lay up treasure in heaven. Let us all try to do more for the Lord, and less for ourselves. One man said on his dying bed, "What I have given away I have saved, and what I have kept I have lost." How true the remark. It is high time to begin to lay up something for the life to come.

FRANCE AND MEXICO.

The Mexican question is occupying the attention of Congress, and exciting considerable interest. Some pretty sharp words are being used relative to the French occupation of Mexico. A war cloud is rising between the two countries, that may result in a terrible storm of war.

Says the Boston Daily Herald, of Dec. 13th, 1865:—

"We observe that the first step in the ventilation of the Mexican question has already been taken in Congress, in the shape of a joint resolution protesting against the establishment of a monarchy in Mexico, and requesting the President to take such steps as will vindicate the American policy and protect the honor and interests of the United States. This resolution has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is a fact beyond a question that a large part of the American people look upon the course of Napoleon in this Mexican business as an insult to our government which never would have been offered while we were at peace among ourselves, and for which we should now demand satisfaction. Or, in the pithy words of Gen. Sheridan, they believe that the Mexican empire is a part of the rebellion, and that it should go down with it. Believing as we do in the patriotism of the American people, we cannot doubt that any necessary war for the vindication of the honor or the maintenance of the rights of this country, would be supported by a large majority of the people, and that our flag would gain new laurels in an encounter with any power on earth."

A Paris correspondent, of the 24th ult., gives the other side of the subject, which also looks rather dark and threatening. When referring to the Mexican question, the reporter of the communication from the Paris correspondent says, as published in the Boston Herald of Dec. 13th. "He sends a disquisition by Lamartine on the political affairs of this continent, published in the monthly periodical Entretiens Literateurs. He boldly defends the Emperor Maximilian's policy, and says it is a sublime conception, vast as the ocean, as new as all that which is apropos. A conception of a statesman, a conception of safety for America and the world. The idea of a bold and efficacious position to be taken in Mexico against the usurpation of the United States, is a new but just idea. Europe has the right to take this position. France takes the initiative. He then starts from the position that the new continent of America is the property of Europe, to prove that France has a right to assume this policy, and having shown this to his satisfaction, he draws a picture of Americans as a community and as individuals, which cannot be regarded as very flattering to the United States."

It would take but a little to fan the war smoke to an alarming flame, that would involve the United States in a fight with the great monarch of earth. Many, no doubt, are anxious to have it begin, that they may make some money out of it. We expect Napoleon will in some way get control of this nation, and attach it to the chariot wheels of his triumph. His plans are laid with great skill, and he seldom makes a failure. When he gets possession of a country, he does not give it up, unless it is for his interest to do so. We do not think he will let go of Mexico, though he may make many promises to that effect, and thus blind the American government, while he is strengthening his hold on this continent. The nations will find at last that he is not bound by his promises any longer than he finds his purposes advanced by keeping them. Like a bankrupt debtor, he promises when he does not intend to keep his word. No man, we think, ever had greater power than Napoleon III. We shall watch his movements with deep interest during the remainder of his wonderful career. We are expecting new developments soon, that will throw additional light on the evidences of the Lord's speedy coming. Let us all watch, and be sober, for it is an hour of peril.

FENIANISM.

We think but few are aware of the character of the "Fenian movement." They do not dream that it is a Catholic device to get control of the government of this country as well as Ireland. If it be said it is not a Catholic movement, because it is not sanctioned by the priesthood, it may be remarked that this is but a part of the whole plan.

The following article from Zion's Herald, of Dec. 6th, 1865, will set the subject before the reader, we think, in its true light:—

FENIANISM, THE NEW MASK OF POPERY.

The African Bushman, when he goes to hunt the ostrich, robes himself in the plumage of one already captured, and by imitating the screams and gambols of his game, succeeds in getting near enough to transfix it with his poisoned arrow. Romanism in the United States is just now busily engaged playing the game of the Bushman decked in the uniform of Fenianism mimicking the songs and sentiments of liberty, she is trying to throw the nation off her guard, that she may pierce her friendly, unsuspecting heart with the poisoned arrows of the Papacy.

Were it not for the malignant and murderous animus of this Fenian movement it would be highly amusing to see the ridiculous figure which it makes to gain the popular favor of the various nations where it has an existence. In America it is democratic down to the soles of its brogans. It makes itself hoarse with hurrahing for liberty and equality. Down with the lazy aristocracy. With pockets filled with the bonds of the Irish Republic, with the stars and stripes at its head, it threatens to drive the Saxon invader from the Emerald gem of the ocean.

In England, it is loyal and royal to the back bone. It whines most piteously over the sorrows of poor Ireland, because her fair soil is so seldom pressed by the foot of her "Most gracious Majesty, Queen Victoria." One of the great farces of the day is to find the London Times, the Jupiter Tonans of humbugs, in a long pompous article give grave consideration to this sad grievance of the sister kingdom, and prescribing as a sovereign remedy for all her woes, that some scion of the blood royal should spend a few weeks every summer in fishing or shooting amongst the beautiful woods and lakes of that sad and neglected island. We fancy we can see the redoubtable Archbishop of Tuam, as he reads this leader in the Times, with a sardonic smile upon his face exclaiming, Why, John Bull, what a huge calf you always are!

In Ireland, but little effort is made to conceal the true character of this movement. Every true son of the order believes as devoutly that Fenianism is Popery, as he does in the real presence of the consecrated wafer. He will curse the Queen of England to a place deeper and hotter than Purgatory. He will hire ballad singers to parade the streets of Romish towns, and bawl their savage song guiltless of poetry or music, but compensating for their absence by breathing out slaughter against Protestantism. Take the following stanza as a specimen:

> Remember well those bloody stripes,
> Remember all you can—
> The flood of tears the orphan wipes,
> Perfidious Orange man.
> To you we owe a host of griefs,
> And griefs we'll e'er deplore,
> But soon led on by our brave chiefs,
> We'll blast you off our shores.

He will pour down his libations of whisky that "never saw the eye of a gauger," and utter sentiments in honor of his co-religionists, that for blood-thirstiness, would send the cold chills through the heart of a Dahomey hangman. Take the following toast as an example: it was found in manuscript in a book, the Minutes of a Fenian Lodge, captured by the British government: "Here's to——, Long may he live; may he live till he sees chapels built ten miles long and seven miles broad; built with Protestant bones; thatched with ministers' skins, whitewashed with their blood, and their back bones for scrapers at their doors."

But you say we must not take such outrageous exaggeration to represent the character of the entire movement, that it is only the language of drunken bombasts. Ah, my dear friend Tenderthought, what would you have said had it been told you two or three years ago, that men regarded by their co-religionists as devout and worthy members of the Roman Catholic church, should attempt the burning of cities, such as New York and Boston, and their depopulation by the introduction of small pox and yellow fever? That all the influence of the Romish Church in the United States should be exerted to save from the gallows the Roman Catholic assassins of the wisest and best statesman of his age, honest Abraham Lincoln? That John Surratt, the only unpunished murderer of the late President, should escape from the hand of justice, by being secreted in a Romish monastery in Canada? In short, that the whole of this conspiracy, from Dr. Blackburn to Wirz, the arch fiend of Andersonville, was concocted and consummated, with but a few exceptions, by Roman Catholics, acting in the interests of a cause recognized, honored and prayed for by the infallible head of the Holy Roman Catholic Church?

If they do these things in a green tree, what will they do in a dry? Should Popery ever gain the power for which it is so eagerly struggling, be assured of the repetition of events which would parallel the massacre of St. Bartholomew's, still a red letter day in the Romish Calendar. The cruelties of Wexford, and the savages of Sculabogue Barn, make the hellish toast, already quoted, no longer a hyperbole.

Wherever there is a chance of attracting the attention of the Protestant world, the priests openly avow themselves hostile to this Fenian movement. They are too crafty to give any public support to an enterprise of such a revolutionary character. It is yet too young and feeble, they prefer that their silly dupes should run all the risk, while they stand ready to grasp all the benefit. If a traitor's halter is to be thrown around anybody's neck, they stand ready to show how zealously they exerted themselves against this unlawful agitation; indeed, some of them have gone so far as to inform the British Government that one item contemplated in the impending Fenian revolt is the indiscriminate slaughter of the Roman Catholic clergy. None but Jesuits could invent so monstrous a lie as this. The world knows that never till Satan casts out Satan will Fenianism prove unfriendly to priestcraft. Just as this cause progresses and gives promise of success, do these reverend gentlemen throw off their reserve, and smile complacently upon it. Fenian lodges are held in vestries connected with Roman Catholic churches. One clergyman, who has been indiscreet in advocating this movement, is openly deprived of his curacy, while another is dispatched as agent of the fraternity to strengthen the hands of the brethren in the old country.

Of late, there has been some terrific noises heard in the direction of the Eternal City. His Holiness has let out his old bull, and set him a blowing at the Free Masons. Do you want to know what this means? If you are a Protestant, it means that His Holiness, like his illustrious predecessors, is the eternal foe of all secret societies. Are you a Roman Catholic, it means, as the American head centre of the order interprets it, that Fenianism is to be let alone. Latterly, however, a letter of the Pope to the Bishop of Baltimore, on the subject of Fenianism, has been published. It contains but a sentence or two, and simply states that Fenianism is not to be encouraged. Why, O! Pio Nino, such fierce wrath fulminated ex-cathedra against Free Masonry, and not one unkind word against this sanguinary organization which threatens to level both church and state, and which, by their own showing, lays plans for a wholesale massacre of every Roman Catholic priest in Ireland? Be assured of this, most reverend prelate, that a live Yankee, with all his appetite for sensation announcements, cannot swallow so monstrous a humbug. He fancies he can see as much sincerity in your opposition to Fenianism as in the hair rump which is worn upon your distinguished person, when borne through the streets of Rome, on the shoulders of your vassals, you sit at your ease, blessing the people who, deceived by your sham appendage, blindly fancying you kneel most devoutly, all the time, while performing this imposing ceremony.

If it is proved that Fenianism is essentially Romish in its character, it follows that it is just as hostile to the Government of the United States as it is to the Government of Great Britain. Romanism ever has and ever will be the deadly antagonist of both civil and religious liberty all the world over. Those very men who are now in this country, such ardent worshipers of liberty, and who are so impatient to draw the sword to secure liberty to the land of their birth, only a little while ago were collecting contributions to fit out the brigade of ragged rascals who left Ireland, bidden and blessed by their priests, on a crusade in favor of the Pope, and against the liberties of Italy. They would rivet the chains of the most degrading and cruel slavery upon the hands of such patriots as Garibaldi, while they would go on their knees to President Johnson to secure the liberation of a rabid pro-slavery traitor like John Mitchell.

We are far from asserting that every Roman Catholic in the land is an enemy to liberty or a traitor to the glorious flag around which so many of them have nobly fought and died; but this we do say, that just to the extent that he is loyal and true to his country, he is false and hostile to the Pope. We are too intently Protestant to countenance the slightest degree of persecution against any man on account of his religious opinions. We claim for our Catholic citizens all the liberties that we demand for ourselves. We would not require his children in our common schools to read from a version of the Scriptures which their priests did not approve, nor repeat the Lord's Prayer or Ten Commandments, in a form unauthorized by their church. But when I hear Fenian orators in the city of Boston, in a public meeting, openly declare that it was the object of their order, not only to liberate their brethren in Ireland but to elect a good Roman Catholic President of these United States; when I see them doing their utmost to involve this nation in a war with England, opening the way for Louis Napoleon to carry out his infamous schemes for securing the supremacy of the Latin race, which means, as practised in the case of Tahiti and Madagascar, the subjugation of the world in the despotism of the Papacy, then we would say to every lover of his country, humanity and God, "Keep your powder dry."

THE FREEDMEN'S MISSION.

The friends of the freedmen may expect to hear from the mission soon. Brn. Himes and Flagg started for the South Dec. 1st, their departure having been delayed beyond the time expected by sickness in Bro. Himes' family. Pray for the mission, brethren.

REPORT OF DANSVILLE MEETING.

As I was appointed Secretary pro. tem. for the Quarterly Christian Conference held in Dansville, N. Y., Dec. 7th to 10th, I would say that it was a very precious season to all the pilgrims gathered there. There has not been held a more interesting conference among us in Western New York, perhaps for years. Many of the aged pilgrims said they had never attended a better meeting.

The ordained preachers present were Elds. C. F. Sweet of Albion, C. W. Low of Fredonia, C. B. Turner of So. Butler, and F. Burr of Dansville. Unordained, Bro. C. H. Williams, Clayton, Jefferson Co., and Bro. H. H. Brown, Allen, Alleghany Co., the former being ordained at the close of the conference.

The meetings were largely attended by people of the village who were very sensibly impressed with the spiritual power of the meetings and the deep root which God's truth has taken in the hearts of the Advent people. The truth is working like leaven, and never was there so much interest here as now. And never was there a better chance to labor in Western N. Y. than now. The field is ripe for the harvest, and we hope brethren will take heed to the appeal we make in this paper for help.

At the love feast held on Sunday morning at this conference, over sixty gave in their testimony in about one hour, and it was really a feast of love. The preachers reported the blessing of God upon their labors, and that many open doors in new places were set before them, and the truth is having an unusually good effect. The conference passed the following resolution:—

Whereas, we hear of the recent death of Eld. Webster,—Resolved, That as a conference we deeply feel the loss of Eld. Lawrence Webster of Conesus, and do sympathize with his family and the church in that vicinity in their affliction. As the matter of ministerial support was considered by the conference, Eld. F. Burr and Bro. John Wilkinson were appointed to make an appeal through the papers upon this subject.

At the close of the Sunday evening services Eld. C. H. Williams was ordained to the ministry. The service was solemn and impressive. Thus closed the best conference, in my estimation, ever attended.

A brother in Iowa writes as follows:—"I sent you $2.35, a few weeks ago, to pay up my indebtedness, and ordered the Crisis stopped, on account of poor health and not feeling able to pay for it any longer. Much as I liked it, and loth as I was to part with it, yet I thought I should have to get along without it. But Deacon B—— and his wife called on us, or rather visited us after the manner laid down by St. James, and asked me if I still took the Crisis. I told him that I had ordered it stopped, because I was not able to pay for it, and did not want to burden the office by having my name attached to the free list, but hardly knew how to do without it. He said I should have it another year, and gave me $2.50 to pay for it. May the Lord bless him for his kindness. And now I want you to send me the paper again for another year, and if time lasts, and I live, perhaps the Lord will open a way for me to pay for it hereafter. The Lord has never forsaken me in time of need, and I will try and trust his goodness in time to come.

AN APPEAL

DEAR BRETHREN:—Being appointed by the late conference to make an appeal to you for ministerial support, we solicit your earnest attention to the subject. It demands your attention, and we urge you to awake to an interest in the facts of the case. New fields are continually opening for our ministers to proclaim the truth where they have hitherto been debarred. To attend these calls they must leave their families, and go forth toiling and laboring, and often sorrowing over the straightened circumstances of loved ones at home. And thus, while they are trying to spread God's truth with a liberal hand, they are fettered with the thought of need at their homes. Brethren, this ought not so to be. Think for a moment. Would you go forth under such circumstances, leaving wife and children with little food and fuel, to shift as best they can for weeks, while the husband and father is laboring in the vineyard of the Lord for a mere pittance, when used to support his family? Say, would you do this? Let us think of the wives and children of our ministers, and in God's name let them suffer no longer. We mean you, brother (and the conference knows who you are), who are worth your thousands in this world's estimation, and yet who do almost nothing for the promulgation of the truths you pretend to hold so dear. What are you doing with your money? Giving it to spendthrift sons to waste in midnight carousals,—to giddy daughters to deck themselves in the trappings of hell; hoarding it up against a day of destruction; adding farm to farm and stock to stock; speculating in oil and grain, etc., while angels weep over sinners unconverted, and the world is perishing for the "bread of life."

Shall our ministers stay at home and toil with their hands to support their families? or shall they have our pledges of support that they may go free to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom? Think of this matter. There are many preachers lying idle among us from this very cause, while those at home are fettered. We propose at the next conference to make this matter take a tangible form, and we want you to be there and lend your aid. In the meantime, do not hesitate, but give liberally as stewards of the Lord. Something has been done already in this line. Much is being done by many liberal souls, but much more must be done, and that soon, for the Lord cometh.

The truths which our ministering brethren are bringing out of the great storehouse of truth—the Bible—are of infinite importance; and we, who have become enlightened and instructed therein, cannot but feel that their universal proclamation, belief and obedience, would work great and salutary influence in our world. Such proclamation can only be made by men of like precious faith, and it cannot be done without aid. See to it that the words of the apostle do not apply to you: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for the miseries that shall come upon you," etc.

In behalf of the Christian Conference of Western New York and vicinity.

For the World's Crisis.

FROM BRO. WM. STONE.

BRO. GRANT:—As the great events of prophecy are opening to our view, we may discern the certainty that the fifth kingdom will soon be set up. When Rome comes to an end, that must end the fourth kingdom. I see no space to intervene between the latter and God's everlasting kingdom; therefore, let the reader read the following extracts, and take warning. The Master will soon rise up and shut the door of salvation; then will the filthy "be filthy still"; no change in their condition after that. The "inheritance" must be given to the saints. They will possess it forever. The wicked must be cut off from inheriting the earth. They shall not dwell therein forever. They must give place to the heirs of the kingdom. The Master says, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not" he cometh. Procrastinate a preparation a little, and fearful will be the consequences.

W. C. STONE.

"ITALY.—Victor Emanuel, in a speech at the opening of Parliament, said, time and the force of events would solve the question pending between Italy and Papacy. Italy must remain faithful to the convention of November, which France would completel carry out within the appointed time. Henceforth it would be easy to wait."

"The London Patriot, of Nov. 9th, in a leading editorial, alluding to the evacuation of Rome by the French troops, and the general condition of the Popedom, says: 'The curtain is beginning to lift a little on the great event of the coming year. Great as are the domestic interests of England, France, Germany and America, the main interests of 1866 seem to gather around Rome. There lies the heart of the coming struggle, and the actors are already placing themselves for their several parts.'"

"Later from Rome.—Numerous encounters are reported between the pontifical gens d'armes and the brigands, the former displaying great energy."

For the World's Crisis.

EIGHT WEEKS.

(Concluded.)

On Friday evening Brn. W. and L. arrived, and on Saturday we commenced "besieging the city in its gates"; but the resistance was obstinate; all the week, from some cause, then to me unknown, the meeting had dragged. On Friday night Hiram Munger's "Cain family" got up their opposition scheme and had a ball and "a tiger"; the music and dancing within doors, the howling without. The arrangement had been to close the meeting on Sunday night, but on Saturday I providentially discovered the cause of slim meetings.

During the summer a proposition had been extended to me thus:—If I would write the challenge, state the questions, and set the time, the friends of the popular views would present their champion, and we should discuss the questions of the non-immortality of the wicked, literal death of soul and body, the penalty of God's law for sin, and the consequent destruction of the wicked, and the unconscious state of the dead until the resurrection, with the final and everlasting reign of the saints on the earth. This proposition I accepted, fixing on this time of our meeting for the debate; but when up two weeks previous, had been notified, to my chagrin, that no disputant on their side would appear, at which time I notified them publicly from the desk that they must bring forward "their man," or suffer loss. We intended to defeat them, as in any case we had the word of God, the "sword of the Spirit," to do it with. To defeat this, a combination was entered into by the different sects to keep away from the meeting themselves, and influence all others to do so that they could. Pilate and Herod had been made friends.

This combination I providentially discovered, and traced out. On Sunday morning we had a good house, and Bro. Wendell preached one of his best discourses, from Acts 13: 40, 41. Bro. King prayed and listened, Bro. L. prayed and watched Bro. W., while I prayed and scanned the countenances of the hearers, as Jonas poured broadside after broadside of shot, shell and shrapnell into their insecure fortress of "the world's conversion before the Lord comes." When Bro. W. laid aside his "port-fire," he had "driven the enemy all into the ditch," and left the gun full shotted with grape and cannister. O how I wanted to fire that gun; but courtesy forbade. It devolved upon me to close the exercises.

I had seen that unless "the combination" was broken up, our meeting would prove a failure, and if broken, truth might be the gainer. There was nothing to lose, but every thing to win; the disease was of a desperate character, and demanded corresponding desperate measures in its treatment. The limb must be amputated, or the patient must die. The desperate situation, and myself only being cognizant of it, gave me a coolness and resolution fitting the emergency, and I resolved to "blow up the magazine," clear the ditch, and hoist the flag of truth on the ramparts, or perish, like a true soldier, in the undertaking.

Taking from my pocket a copy of the Morning Star, printed in Dover, N. H., I read the following article to the congregation:

MORE AWFUL THAN THE JUDGMENT.

A celebrated preacher of the seventeenth century, in a sermon to a crowded audience, described the terrors of the last judgment with such eloquence, pathos, and force of action, that some of his audience not only burst into tears, but sent forth piercing cries, as if the Judge himself had been present, and was about to pass upon them their final sentence. In the height of this excitement the preacher called upon them to dry their tears and cease their cries, as he was about to add something still more awful and astonishing than anything he had yet brought before them. Silence being obtained, he, with an agitated countenance and solemn voice, addressed them thus: "In one quarter of an hour from this time the emotions which you have just now exhibited will be stifled; the remembrance of the fearful truths which excited them will vanish; you will return to your carnal occupations or sinful pleasures with your usual avidity, and you will treat all you have heard 'as a tale that is told'!"

Then turning to the audience I addressed them thus: "And now I am going to tell you something more awful than that; something at which I do not guess, but which I know, having seen it with my eyes and heard it with my own ears. A majority of this congregation profess to believe that the souls of all men are immortal and are conscious in death; that when a good man dies he goes right straight to heaven and is happy in glory, and when a bad man dies he goes right straight to hell and is miserable in torment beyond the power of language to describe. I shall not quarrel with you on these points, but take you on your own ground. I have been watching your countenances while my Bro. here has been presenting the mass of evidence contained in the prophecies, which the Jews had as signs of Christ's first advent; and have seen conviction stealing upon your faces while the more overwhelming testimony was offered to us as signs of his second coming. Yet in view of all this, and notwithstanding you believe your children and your neighbors, if they die out of Christ, die unconverted, will wail in torment to all eternity, will be lost forever, yet in the face of this you have entered into a combination to keep these children and neighbors, as well as yourselves, away from this meeting, lest they should be converted and saved under our instrumentality; preferring that they should die and go to hell than have them saved through any other than your own denominational preaching.

"Now I want to say to you that, should they die unconverted in consequence of your keeping them away, and go into everlasting torment in misery, they will curse you to your faces when they stand together with you at the judgment, and God will require the blood of their souls at your hands. But this, tho' altogether too bad, is not the worst of it. Since my coming here, every time I have spoken to one of the unconverted upon the subject of their salvation, they turn right around and point me to men professing christianity, and members of churches, who will during the week get drunk, fight, carouse, lie, swear and cheat, and then on Sunday present themselves at the communion table and eat the Lord's Supper; furthermore they tell me that every liquor seller in town is a professor of religion and a member of some church, who stays away from meeting to deal out liquid death and damnation to their customers, putting the price of a dram of whiskey against the loss of an immortal soul.

Now I say this in sorrow and not in anger, but you know it is true. There are men sitting before me at this very moment, whom I heard talking of this combination, which I have traced three miles out of town, and who know I speak the truth; but you have no need to fear. I am not going to expose you by calling your names. But you may say, What shall we do? I answer, when you have taken the wrong road, turn about and take the back track. Break up your unhallowed combination, leave off your bad habits, or leave the church; do not stay there as stumbling blocks, standing in the way of sinners, while they are stumbling over you into hell. Better, ten thousand times better, both for you and them, to make no profession, than be in the church and not try to live what you profess. Quit your traffic in that which sinners are ashamed to engage in. Arrange your business so as to shut up your stores and shops in the evening; come to meeting yourselves, and bring your sons and daughters; try to have your neighbors come; get your own souls blessed, and go to work as christians ought to, for the conversion and salvation of all in the place, that righteousness may run down your streets like rivers, all groggeries be driven from among you, and every house become a house of prayer. The meeting will go on another week.

It did go. The gun was fired, the leg was cut off, the magazine was exploded, the ditch was clear, the combination was broken up, and in the name of the God of hosts we set up our banners; the flag of truth waved in triumph over the ramparts of the enemy.

In the afternoon Bro. Langarl took up the morning thread of discourse in continuation, showing us now to be in "the time of the end," and near the coming of the Lord. I went over to the "Union church" in Eden to fill the three P. M. appointment, and adjourn the meeting over to Thursday night, and then returned to N., where we all remained working in sweet concert and harmony, without any hobbies to ride, until Thursday, when Bro. L. started for Pittsburgh and the East, and myself for Eden, to work alone in the cold, until another fire should be kindled into a living flame by the word of the Lord, accompanied by his Spirit. Bro. W. remained with Bro. King, to roll on the chariot at Nevada.

On Thursday night, Oct. 19th, I began at the Union, and from the start had good congregations, which increased nightly until Sunday, when our house, commodious as it is, was too small to seat the hearers comfortably. On Monday, sent a note to Brn. W. and King to come over on Tuesday, to assist me in the ordnance of baptism. They closed the meeting at N. on Sunday evening at "full tide."

Bro. W. informed me that on Saturday, after I left, the circuit preachnr of the M. E. C. came to Bro. Walker's, where he was stopping, and put up. As was very natural, for two of a trade never agree, they soon got at "loggerheads"; when Bro. W. proposed to settle their little differences by meeting, like men of honor, not in deadly conflict, but honorable debate, and discuss the questions of difference before the people, allowing them to act as umpire in the case. But no, he could not "stoop so low."

At the Union in Eden (Seal P. O.), there was one of the prettiest sights at our baptism that I ever witnessed. Seven in all were there baptized, six of whom belonged to one family. First came old Father Mackey in his gray hairs, then his two sons, next the son's wives, and then his only daughter. An entire family "planted in the likeness of Christ's death," together may they so remain, and be found growers together in that likeness of his resurrection. Some five others are also committed for baptism at this same place. Probably these all are the fruit of seed sown by Bro. Homer King in former years, but now made manifest. To God be all the glory.

On Thursday night closed the meeting in a rain storm, as we had to return to Nevada on Friday, so as to take the cars on Saturday for Mansfield, where I had arranged for Bro. W. to preach in the old Baptist church, while I went on to Independence to fill an engagement. Found a beautiful hill country, with clear, limpid water courses, and a very pleasant home at Bro. J. Miller's, of the Protestant Methodist church, during my sojourn in the village, which continued over Tuesday night, leaving on Wednesday, having preached four times, and got clear of a troublesome cough, through the kindness of good Sister Miller. May the Lord reward them for their kindness to the stranger whom they took in. Hope to renew their acquintance in the kingdom of God.

Nov. 2d, went to Bucynes, to hold a meeting there, while Bro. Jones came to Norwalk to preach Saturday and Sunday, 4th and 5th, and see old friends before going home.

Finding myself about worn out, I closed the meeting at B., and on Monday started for home in Olena, where we arrived on Tuesday, Nov. 7th, at 11 o'clock A. M., after an absence of six weeks, and a constant, continued labor of eight.

Before closing, I desire to make my acknowledgments to the friends in Nevada for their pleasant gifts, which were very acceptable. We shall pray and labor for each and all of these dear friends, that they in return may be clothed with fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of the saints, and with us have an abundant entrance ministered unto them into the everlasting kingdom of God. G. W. STETSON.

Olena, O.

"WATCHMAN! WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand." "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly." "For when they shall say Peace and Safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, . . . and they shall not escape."

The stirring proclamation is, as the prophet declares, "Prepare war; wake up the mighty men. . . . Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe, . . . for their wickedness is great." O earth, thou hast borne the curse of God for long ages past; thy final travail shall speedily come. Thy inhabitants are, and are to be, unconscious of the nearness of that day—not from lack of evidence, but lack of faith. Men are not necessarily in darkness, "that that day should overtake them as a thief . . ." The bursting buds of the forest trees are not more unmistakable indications of the approach of summer, than the signs of these times are of the speedy consummation of the present age.

The child of God is warned to KNOW, by these unmistakable tokens, that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. But what availeth warning? Did it save the Antediluvians? Did it save the Sodomites? Did it save Jerusalem? And will it save this present generation? Of what avail are the signs and tokens given; the unparalelled phenomena witnessed in the heavens by the present generation—so strikingly fulfilling the prophetic word of God; the great tribulation, followed by the darkening of the sun and moon; the falling of the stars, and distress of nations with perplexity, that now pervades the world? These wonderful signs and tokens are in the past, and warnings have been given, yet, as in the days of Noah and Lot, men still mock on, riot on, and will dream on, until that awful day shall suddenly surprise and overwhelm them. Scoffers, in mockery, are saying,—"Where is the promise of his coming? . . . all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."

The world's concluding history, from inspiration, is dark and cheerless. Yes, the world has grown old, and careless, and proud, and lustful, and covetous, corrupt and violent, cruel and oppressive, violent and secure. Sodom's pride—yes, pride and haughtiness, fulness of bread and abundance of idleness, cruelty to the poor, licentiousness, infidelity, unbelief and impiety, now mark the perilous times that should be IN THE LAST DAYS. Yes, iniquity abounds, while the love of many waxes cold. Instead of giving meat in due season, the servants now say—"My Lord delayeth his coming"; they smite their fellow servants, and eat and drink with the drunken. A lukewarm church now join the world in carnal and festive scenes, while revelry, pride, fashion and pleasure rule the hour. They have a form of godliness, without the power—the apostle says, "from such turn away." They do not "discern the signs of the times," but "willingly are ignorant" of the same. The world remains secure and careless. The whirlwind rises from the coasts of the earth; the unclean spirits gather the nations to battle; yes, a sin-cursed world, long under sentence of condemnation, is fast hastening to its day of retribution. The night grows darker, the clouds thicker, the storm fiercer, until, like the lightning along the darkened heavens, in flaming fire, the Son of God is revealed with the mighty angels—"as a thief in the night,"—in the midst of earth's carnal and ungodly slumber, the avenging Judge and reckoning day will come—a day of joy to the saints of all ages, and terror to the sinner.

O world-conformed professor, awake! lest your appointed portion be with the hypocrites and unbelievers. "Many will say in that day, Lord, Lord," to whom he will reply, "I never knew you." "Repent"; "anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see." Secure a wedding garment, lest thou be found naked. "Take heed lest that day come upon you unawares," "for as a snare shall it come." Awake! vain worldling; probation's day will close, perdition's day is near, sentence is already passed, the day of execution hastens. Awake! ere you cry to rocks and mountains for shelter then. Like a calm which precedes the storm, your continued unbelief and thoughts and words of "peace and safety" but adds to the mass of evidence that the day is near that will suddenly surprise you, and you shall not escape, "to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever." Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

Awake! O earth; hear ye not that voice—"Thrust in thy sickle and reap; for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe." "Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn."

BARKER. Died in Oquawka, Ill., Nov. 1st, 1865, after an illness of ten days from typhoid fever and bloody dysentery, Bro. John Barker, late of Exeter, Me., aged thirty-nine years.

I know of no event in my experience that has so forcibly reminded me of the uncertainty of life as the death of Bro. Barker, in view of the attending circumstances. How true it is that "we know not what shall be on the morrow." He started with his family from here on Sept. 11th, to spend the few remaining days, till the Lord comes, in Illinois. His chief hope in the change was to improve his wife's health. He saw, too, the danger of being overcharged if he liked there; hence he hesitated between hope and fear for some months, continually seeking the Lord's guidance in the matter. I think he was without any will of his own, desiring that the Lord's will alone should be done. As the time approached every thing seemed to favor his going, and they started amid the farewells of many friends, and reached their destined point in safety. They were much encouraged with the prospect when they found the country all they had hoped, and saw Sr. Barker's health evidently improving. But a gloom was soon cast over their prospects. Disease invades their home, selects the staff and support of the family, and in ten short days hurries him to the silent tomb, leaving a wife and four children to mourn the loss of a worthy husband and father. It was a grief to his family to endure the trial; it was a shock to their friends here to hear of his death, and it is an admonition to us all, that "we know not what a day may bring forth."

Bro. Barker commenced his christian course in the time movement of '54. He started at a sacrifice of property, privilege, and friends, and felt it was a privilege to give all for Christ. He maintained the even tenor of his way amidst many trials and discouragements since then. If he partook in degree of the general dearth among us, he was not lacking in the principles of religion, nor in a resolution to keep himself and his all on the altar. He was candid and deliberate in his judgment, and in discerning between the true and false in religion, he possessed more discrimination than most any other one of my acquaintance. He was a model of precision and punctuality in his business, an estimable citizen, a kind father, an affectionate husband, and an exemplarary christian. His death makes the blessed hope still more dear, in view of the prospect of an early and an eternal meeting. As he was unconscious most of the time during the last three days before he died, he was not aware of the approach of death.

A prayer was made at the house by the Methodist minister of the place, and he was laid away to sleep till Jesus comes. I. K. LOMBARD.

WEBSTER. Died in Conesus, N. Y., Dec. 1st, 1865, Elder Lawrence Webster, aged fifty eight years and nine months.

Bro. Webster, in the commencement of his christian profession, was connected with the Baptists; but on hearing the glorious news of the Second Advent, he embraced them, and confessed and walked as a pilgrim and stranger until his death. He labored several years in preaching the word, but, because of difficulties and trials through which the Lord called him to pass, he was not ordained until last spring, at the South Butler Conference. And now, as he saw the work of God reviving around him, and doors of usefulness opening and inviting him to enter, he is laid away in death. All true christians who knew him will mourn for him, and the Adventists especially, for he was an unflinching advocate of the truth on the nature of man, near coming of Christ, and destruction of the wicked. On his death bed he gave continued testimony of his love for Bible truth, and of his unwavering faith in the promises of God. He was sick about three weeks. His disease was an unnamed one, but commenced with a carbuncle on his back, and when he died had spread into one corrupt sore from crown to sole. He suffered intensely.

A large concourse assembled at his funeral, and were addressed from Num. 23: 10—"Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." May the God of Israel comfort the mourning friends. F. BURR.

SMYTH. Died at Worcester, Mass., Dec. 5th, 1865, Mrs. Abba B. Smyth, aged thirty-seven years.

Sister Symth early embraced the Savior, and made profession of her faith in him at the age of fourteen years, which profession she maintained till her death. She was interested in the faith of our Lord's near coming, and the resurrection from the dead, which constituted her hope. Three years ago she was suddenly seized with paralysis, which shattered her entire constitution, so that she was a mere wreck of her former self; yet the Lord was with her in the furnace of the toil to the end, and she retained strong faith in Him.

Sister Smyth will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends, as well as of the poor, infirm, and sick. Even in her own feebleness she was ready to administer to the comfort and relieve the wants of those in any trial. Her record is on high, and treasured in the memory of many afflicted ones.

Her widowed mother, who mourns her loss, has now followed to the grave five children within five years—surviving all her family save one daughter. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn her absence. The surviving relatives, however, are greatly supported and cheered in this hour of bereavement by the "blessed hope" which the gospel affords.

By her own request, made many months ago, I preached her funeral sermon. Text,—"That blessed hope." O. H. FASSETT.

JENKINS. Died at his residence near Madison, Wis., Nov. 13th, 1865, Bro. Joseph Jenkins, aged sixty-four years.

Bro. Jenkins was a native of Lee, N. H., but after his marriage moved to Bangor, Me., where he early embraced the Second Advent sentiments, was very zealous in private circles, and labored some in public to disseminate those views he held with such confidence. In 1850, he with his family removed to this state and settled near Madison, remaining a firm believer in the general views of the Second Advent people, and seemed ready always to give to others a reason for the hope he so dearly cherished. Notwithstanding the responsibilities and obligations of a husband and father held him for a while, he finally resigned all to sleep a short season till Jesus should call him to his reward. He leaves a wife and several children to weep as Rachel wept—because he is not.

ROBERTS. Julia, wife of Bro. C. Roberts, after a lingering consumption of nearly two years, quietly fell asleep in Jesus, on the evening of the 7th inst., at their residence in Windsor, Ct., aged forty-one years.

The subject of this notice, in the early days of Adventism, became interested in the near coming of the Lord, and embraced him as her only hope of future life and immortality, and identified herself as an Advent believer, in which faith and hope she continued until the day of her death.

During her sickness (especially the latter part), she suffered much in breathing, and extreme nervousness, yet her mind was as much stayed on the Lord as could reasonably be expected in such sufferings, which she bore with christian patience. The writer often visited her in the few last mouths of her sickness, and always found her confidence in the Lord, the evidence of her acceptance brightening, and all earthly glories fading, until nothing was cheering but the hope of immortality, and the glories of the kingdom of God, which she only expected to reach through a resurrection from the dead by Jesus Christ, "who is the resurrection and the life." S. COOPER.

Our sister was converted little more than a year ago, under the labors of Bro. H. K. Flagg, since which, according to the testimony of her numerous friends, she has been an active, consistent, devoted disciple of the Savior, striving ever to promote his cause, and live in obedience to his requirements. Possessed of large benevolence, she was a Dorcas in the community where she lived. She is laid in her last resting place, but lives still in the memory of those who loved her, and in her pure, bright, christian example. Her funeral was attended by the writer.

"Libbie, we miss thee while thou art in Jesus sweetly sleeping,
Yet that blessed hope in our hearts we still are keeping.
We miss thy gentle voice, which we never more shall hear,
Until the Savior in the clouds of heaven shall appear.
Sickness, pain, and death shall vanish in that bright morn,
And the sting of death itself shall be withdrawn;
Shout for gladness, ye that lie in dust and clay,
And hail with joy the resurrection day."

IRA MORGAN.

DAVIS. Died, also, Aug. 9th, 1865, at the same place, Bro. Samuel Davis, formerly from the State of Maine, father of Sister Jenkins, in the eighty-sixth year of his age.

Also, a son of Bro. and Sr. Jenkins, died at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., July 10th, 1863, Amos F. Jenkins, aged twenty-seven years.

Our last duties were peformed for these friends, now silently sleeping in death's cold embrace, before a respectable and attentive audience, Nov. 27th, 1865. Text, 1 Thess. 4: 18.

N. A. HITCHCOCK.

CLARK. Died in South Hawley, Mass., Dec. 11th, 1865, Josephine Isabel, daughter of Bro. Nathan Clark, aged thirteen months and eleven days.

It will be well with the child, for she sleeps in Jesus. RUFUS STARKS.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool, Nov. 30. There is no news of Stephens, the Fenian Head Centre of Ireland. The Governor of the prison, from which he escaped, has been suspended.

The Fenian trials are progressing. Capt. Corbett who commanded the pirate Shenandoah at the time of her transfer, is being tried at Queenstown for breach of the foreign enlistment act.

There is no additional news from Spain or Chili.

The Morning Herald says the feeling in the city relative to American affairs is not altogether satisfactory.

Princess Helena of England is to be betrothed to Prince Christian of Augustenburg.

It is asserted that on the opening of the Hungarian Diet a general amnesty will be promulgated in Hungary.

The deaths from cholera in France during the month of October were 4020, and 379 from the 6th to the 12th of November.

Liverpool Dec. 8th, Queenstown 8th.

News unimportant.

O'Leary, the Fenian, had been found guilty. He made a speech denying that he was a traitor. He declared he owed no allegiance to the Queen of England, nor obedience to British laws. He was sentenced to twenty years' penal servitude.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Dec. 12. The Times' Paris correspondence of the 24th ult. sends a disquisition by Lamartine on the political affairs of this continent, published in the monthly periodical, Les Entretienes Litterarerers.

He boldly defends the Emperor Maximilian's policy, and says it is a sublime conception, vast as the ocean, as new as all that which is apropos—a conception of safety for America and the world. The idea of a bold and efficacious position to be taken in Mexico against the usurpation of the United States is a new but just idea. Europe has the right to take this position. France takes the initiative. He then starts from the position that the new continent of America is the property of Europe to prove that France has a right to assume this policy. And having shown this to his satisfaction, he draws a picture of Americans as a community, and as individuals, which cannot be regarded as very flattering to the United States.

The Herald's special Washington dispatch says it is rumored that the French Minister, who is now in New York, is much displeased with the Congressional action on the Mexican question, and has decided not to return to Washington unless some explanation is given to him.

MEXICAN QUESTION.—During the week preceding the 23d ultimo 2200 French troops arrived at Vera Cruz, and 3000 more were expected to be on the way there from Brest. It is reported that the French officers speculate freely on the the object contemplated by their government in sending them there. They seem to think that they will have no difficulty in whipping the Yankees, and believe that, in the event of war between France and the United States on account of Mexican affairs, the Southern States will again break out in rebellion, when the North will be crushed out, a Southern republic inaugurated, and Maximilian be firmly established on the throne of Mexico. Notwithstanding the reinforcements from France, Americans in Mexico think the Imperial cause rather a gloomy one at present. The French soldiers brought the cholera to Vera Cruz, and sundry deaths had taken place in the city.

THE CATTLE PLAGUE.—Latest foreign advices indicate no abatement of the plague among the cattle, which threatens now such a curtailment of the ordinary supply of animal food throughout Great Britain, as must inevitably affect the provision markets. In the course of the past month the increase of the disease had been most marked. During that period the attacks have risen, from a previous monthly average, from 14,000 to upward of 27,000, and the deaths, destruction included, to upward of 21,000.

Between the 4th and the 11th of November the number of cases increased by fifty per cent. In the ensuing week things were not quite so bad, but there was a further increase still. The London Times assumes that the deaths, instead of 700 a week, are at least four times that number, and if winter does not bring a change for the better the losses may be 5000 or 6000 a week before Christmas.

ITEMS.

☞ New York has one policeman for every 400 residents; Boston one for every 500; Chicago one for every 656; Baltimore one for every 800; Philadelphia one for every 1050.

☞ The death of Leopold, King of the Belgians, is announced in our foreign news.

☞ It appears that those who have suffered most from cholera in Paris are the ragmen and the street-sweepers. On the former class it has fallen so heavily that there is some intention of suppressing the trade altogether. It is said that one hundred and fifteen thousand persons fled from Paris within ten days to avoid the epidemic.

☞ In a Fenian book found in Tyrone, Ireland, besides a list of names, was the following toast: "Here's to ——. Long may he live; may he live till he sees chapels built ten miles long, and seven broad—built with Protestant bones, thatched with ministers' skins, whitewashed with their blood, and their backbones for scrapers at the doors."

☞ The leaves of the elder, if strewn among corn or other grain when it is put into the bin, will effectually preserve it from the ravages of the weevil. The juice will also kill bed bugs and magots. Insects never touch elder bushes. The leaves of the elder scattered over cabbages, cucumbers, squashes and other plants subject to the ravages of insects, effectually shield them.

☞ The cholera was brought to New York in 1848 by the steamer New York, which arrived at that port on Nov. 9th, with 400 passengers from Havre. By a singular coincidence, it is again introduced there in the same month, and by a similar steamer, coming from the same port.

☞ The Russian papers announce that the cholera, which appeared two months since in the southern provinces of the empire, is advancing north; and, notwithstanding the cold weather, it has arrived at Berdytchen, in Russian Poland, a town of forty thousand souls, mostly Jews.

☞ Some of the principal New York hotels talk of raising the price of board to $6 per day. There are families in the Fifth avenue who give $500 or $600 a week for their mere lodging and boarding privilege, while their "extras" will reach $300 or $400 more.

☞ A middle aged man was drugged while on the cars between New York and Bridgeport, and robbed of $1200 in gold. He had recently arrived from England, and was en route to Boston to meet his wife. The money he had with him was all he possessed.

☞ Another great artesian well, flowing 200,000 gallons daily, was struck at Chicago last week. Its diameter is five inches, though the intention is to enlarge it to twenty inches, at which size it will have a discharge capacity of 18,000,000 gallons daily.

truths which excited them will vanish; you will return to your carnal occupations or sinful pleasures with your usual avidity, and you will treat all you have heard 'as a tale that is told'!"

Then turning to the audience I addressed them thus: "And now I am going to tell you something more awful than that; something at which I do not guess, but which I know, having seen it with my eyes and heard it with my own ears. A majority of this congregation profess to believe that the souls of all men are immortal and are conscious in death; that when a good man dies he goes right straight to heaven and is happy in glory, and when a bad man dies he goes right straight to hell and is miserable in torment beyond the power of language to describe. I shall not quarrel with you on these points, but take you on your own ground. I have been watching your countenances while my Bro. here has been presenting the mass of evidence contained in the prophecies, which the Jews had as signs of Christ's first advent; and have seen conviction stealing upon your faces while the more overwhelming testimony was offered to us as signs of his second coming. Yet in view of all this, and notwithstanding you believe your children and your neighbors, if they die out of Christ, die unconverted, will wail in torment to all eternity, will be lost forever, yet in the face of this you have entered into a combination to keep these children and neighbors, as well as yourselves, away from this meeting, lest they should be converted and saved under our instrumentality; preferring that they should die and go to hell than have them saved through any other than your own denominational preaching.

"Now I want to say to you that, should they die unconverted in consequence of your keeping them away, and go into everlasting torment in misery, they will curse you to your faces when they stand together with you at the judgment, and God will require the blood of their souls at your hands. But this, tho' altogether too bad, is not the worst of it. Since my coming here, every time I have spoken to one of the unconverted upon the subject of their salvation, they turn right around and point me to men professing christianity, and members of churches, who will during the week get drunk, fight, carouse, lie, swear and cheat, and then on Sunday present themselves at the communion table and eat the Lord's Supper; furthermore they tell me that every liquor seller in town is a professor of religion and a member of some church, who stays away from meeting to deal out liquid death and damnation to their customers, putting the price of a dram of whiskey against the loss of an immortal soul.

Now I say this in sorrow and not in anger, but you know it is true. There are men sitting before me at this very moment, whom I heard talking of this combination, which I have traced three miles out of town, and who know I speak the truth; but you have no need to fear. I am not going to expose you by calling your names. But you may say, What shall we do? I answer, when you have taken the wrong road, turn about and take the back track. Break up your unhallowed combination, leave off your bad habits, or leave the church; do not stay there as stumbling blocks, standing in the way of sinners, while they are stumbling over you into hell. Better, ten thousand times better, both for you and them, to make no profession, than be in the church and not try to live what you profess. Quit your traffic in that which sinners are ashamed to engage in. Arrange your business so as to shut up your stores and shops in the evening; come to meeting yourselves, and bring your sons and daughters; try to have your neighbors come; get your own souls blessed, and go to work as christians ought to, for the conversion and salvation of all in the place, that righteousness may run down your streets like rivers, all groggeries be driven from among you, and every house become a house of prayer. The meeting will go on another week.

It did go. The gun was fired, the leg was cut off, the magazine was exploded, the ditch was clear, the combination was broken up, and in the name of the God of hosts we set up our banners; the flag of truth waved in triumph over the ramparts of the enemy.

In the afternoon Bro. Langarl took up the morning thread of discourse in continuation, showing us now to be in "the time of the end," and near the coming of the Lord. I went over to the "Union church" in Eden to fiill the three P. M. appointment, and adjourn the meeting over to Thursday night, and then returned to N., where we all remained working in sweet concert and harmony, without any hobbies to ride, until Thursday, when Bro. L. started for Pittsburgh and the East, and myself for Eden, to work alone in the cold, until another fire should be kindled into a living flame by the word of the Lord, accompanied by his Spirit. Bro. W. remanied with Bro. King, to roll on the chariot at Nevada.

On Thursday night, Oct. 19th, I began at the Union, and from the start had good congregations, which increased nightly until Sunday, when our house, commodious as it is, was too small to seat the hearers comfortably. On Monday, sent a note to Brn. W. and King to come over on Tuesday, to assist me in the ordnance of baptism. They closed the meeting at N. on Sunday evening at "full tide."

Bro. W. informed me that on Saturday, after I left, the circuit preachnr of the M. E. C. came to Bro. Walker's, where he was stopping, and put up. As was very natural, for two of a trade never agree, they soon got at "loggerheads"; when Bro. W. proposed to settle their little differences by meeting, like men of honor, not in deadly conflict, but honorable debate, and discuss the questions of difference before the people, allowing them to act as umpire in the case. But no, he could not "stoop so low."

At the Union in Eden (Seal P. O.), there was one of the prettiest sights at our baptism that I ever witnessed. Seven in all were there baptized, six of whom belonged to one family. First came old Father Mackey in his gray hairs, then his two sons, next the son's wives, and then his only daughter. An entire family "planted in the likeness of Christ's death," together may they so remain, and be found growers together in that likeness of his resurrection. Some five others are also committed for baptism at this same place. Probably these all are the fruit of seed sown by Bro. Homer King in former years, but now made manifest. To God be all the glory.

On Thursday night closed the meeting in a rain storm, as we had to return to Nevada on Friday, so as to take the cars on Saturday for Mansfield, where I had arranged for Bro. W. to preach in the old Baptist church, while I went on to Independence to fill an engagement. Found a beautiful hill country, with clear, limpid water courses, and a very pleasant home at Bro. J. Miller's, of the Protestant Methodist church, during my sojourn in the village, which continued over Tuesday night, leaving on Wednesday, having preached four times, and got clear of a troublesome cough, through the kindness of good Sister Miller. May the Lord reward them for their kindness to the stranger whom they took in. Hope to renew their acquintance in the kingdom of God.

Nov. 2d, went to Bucynes, to hold a meeting there, while Bro. Jones came to Norwalk to preach Saturday and Sunday, 4th and 5th, and see old friends before going home.

Finding myself about worn out, I closed the meeting at B., and on Monday started for home in Olena, where we arrived on Tuesday, Nov. 7th, at 11 o'clock A. M., after an absence of six weeks, and a constant, continued labor of eight.

Before closing, I desire to make my acknowledgments to the friends in Nevada for their pleasant gifts, which were very acceptable. We shall pray and labor for each and all of these dear friends, that they in return may be clothed with fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of the saints, and with us have an abundant entrance ministered unto them into the everlasting kingdom of God. G. W. STETSON.

Olena, O.

"WATCHMAN! WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand." "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly." "For when they shall say Peace and Safety,' then sudden destruction cometh upon them, . . . and they shall not escape."

The stirring proclamation is, as the prophet declares, "Prepare war; wake up the mighty men. . . . Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe, . . . for their wickedness is great." O earth, thou hast borne the curse of God for long ages past; thy final travail shall speedily come. Thy inhabitants are, and are to be, unconscious of the nearness of that day—not from lack of evidence, but lack of faith. Men are not necessarily in darkness, "that that day should overtake them as a thief . . ." The bursting buds of the forest trees are not more unmistakable indications of the approach of summer, than the signs of these times are of the speedy consummation of the present age.

The child of God is warned to KNOW, by these unmistakable tokens, that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. But what availeth warning? Did it save the Antediluvians? Did it save the Sodomites? Did it save Jerusalem? And will it save this present generation? Of what avail are the signs and tokens given; the unparalelled phenomena witnessed in the heavens by the present generation—so strikingly fulfilling the prophetic word of God; the great tribulation, followed by the darkening of the sun and moon; the falling of the stars, and distress of nations with perplexity, that now pervades the world? These wonderful signs and tokens are in the past, and warnings have been given, yet, as in the days of Noah and Lot, men still mock on, riot on, and will dream on, until that awful day shall suddenly surprise and overwhelm them. Scoffers, in mockery, are saying,—"Where is the promise of his coming? . . . all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."

The world's concluding history, from inspiration, is dark and cheerless. Yes, the world has grown old, and careless, and proud, and lustful, and covetous, corrupt and violent, cruel and oppressive, violent and secure. Sodom's pride—yes, pride and haughtiness, fulness of bread and abundance of idleness, cruelty to the poor, licentiousness, infidelity, unbelief and impiety, now mark the perilous times that should be IN THE LAST DAYS. Yes, iniquity abounds, while the love of many waxes cold. Instead of giving meat in due season, the servants now say—"My Lord delayeth his coming"; they smite their fellow servants, and eat and drink with the drunken. A lukewarm church now join the world in carnal and festive scenes, while revelry, pride, fashion and pleasure rule the hour. They have a form of godliness, without the power—the apostle says, "from such turn away." They do not "discern the signs of the times," but "willingly are ignorant" of the same. The world remains secure and careless. The whirlwind rises from the coasts of the earth; the unclean spirits gather the nations to battle; yes, a sin-cursed world, long under sentence of condemnation, is fast hastening to its day of retribution. The night grows darker, the clouds thicker, the storm fiercer, until, like the lightning along the darkened heavens, in flaming fire, the Son of God is revealed with the mighty angels—"as a thief in the night,"—in the midst of earth's carnal and ungodly slumber, the avenging Judge and reckoning day will come—a day of joy to the saints of all ages, and terror to the sinner.

O world-conformed professor, awake! lest your appointed portion be with the hypocrites and unbelievers. "Many will say in that day, Lord, Lord," to whom he will reply, "I never knew you." "Repent"; "anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see." Secure a wedding garment, lest thou be found naked. "Take heed lest that day come upon you unawares," "for as a snare shall it come." Awake! vain worldling; probation's day will close, perdition's day is near, sentence is already passed, the day of execution hastens. Awake! ere you cry to rocks and mountains for shelter then. Like a calm which precedes the storm, your continued unbelief and thoughts and words of "peace and safety" but adds to the mass of evidence that the day is near that will suddenly surprise you, and you shall not escape, "to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever." Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

Awake! O earth; hear ye not that voice—"Thrust in thy sickle and reap; for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe." "Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn."

Obituaries.

BARKER. Died in Oquawka, Ill., Nov. 1st, 1865, after an illness of ten days from typhoid fever and bloody dysentery, Bro. John Barker, late of Exeter, Me., aged thirty-nine years.

I know of no event in my experience that has so forcibly reminded me of the uncertainty of life as the death of Bro. Barker, in view of the attending circumstances. How true it is that "we know not what shall be on the morrow." He started with his family from here on Sept. 11th, to spend the few remaining days, till the Lord comes, in Illinois. His chief hope in the change was to improve his wife's health. He saw, too, the danger of being overcharged if he liked there; hence he hesitated between hope and fear for some months, continually seeking the Lord's guidance in the matter. I think he was without any will of his own, desiring that the Lord's will alone should be done. As the time approached every thing seemed to favor his going, and they started amid the farewells of many friends, and reached their destined point in safety. They were much encouraged with the prospect when they found the country all they had hoped, and saw Sr. Barker's health evidently improving. But a gloom was soon cast over their prospects. Disease invades their home, selects the staff and support of the family, and in ten short days hurries him to the silent tomb, leaving a wife and four children to mourn the loss of a worthy husband and father. It was a grief to his family to endure the trial; it was a shock to their friends here to hear of his death, and it is an admonition to us all, that "we know not what a day may bring forth."

Bro. Barker commenced his christian course in the time movement of '54. He started at a sacrifice of property, privilege, and friends, and felt it was a privilege to give all for Christ. He maintained the even tenor of his way amidst many trials and discouragements since then. If he partook in degree of the general dearth among us, he was not lacking in the principles of religion, nor in a resolution to keep himself and his all on the altar. He was candid and deliberate in his judgment, and in discerning between the true and false in religion, he possessed more discrimination than most any other one of my acquaintance. He was a model of precision and punctuality in his business, an estimable citizen, a kind father, an affectionate husband, and an exemplarary christian. His death makes the blessed hope still more dear, in view of the prospect of an early and an eternal meeting. As he was unconscious most of the time during the last three days before he died, he was not aware of the approach of death.

A prayer was made at the house by the Methodist minister of the place, and he was laid away to sleep till Jesus comes. I. K. LOMBARD.

WEBSTER. Died in Conesus, N. Y., Dec. 1st, 1865, Elder Lawience Webster, aged fifty eight years and nine months.

Bro. Webster, in the commencement of his christian profession, was connected with the Baptists; but on hearing the glorious news of the Second Advent, he embraced them, and confessed and walked as a pilgrim and stranger until his death. He labored several years in preaching the word, but, because of difficulties and trials through which the Lord called him to pass, he was not ordained until last spring, at the South Butler Conference. And now, as he saw the work of God reviving around him, and doors of usefulness opening and inviting him to enter, he is laid away in death. All true christians who knew him will mourn for him, and the Adventists especially; for he was an unflinching advocate of the truth on the nature of man, near coming of Christ, and destruction of the wicked. On his death bed he gave continued testimony of his love for Bible truth, and of his unwavering faith in the promises of God. He was sick about three weeks. His disease was an unnamed one, but commenced with a carbuncle on his back, and when he died had spread into one corrupt sore from crown to sole. He suffered intensely.

A large concourse assembled at his funeral, and were addressed from Num. 23: 10:—"Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." May the God of Israel comfort the mourning friends. F. BURR.

SMYTH. Died at Worcester, Mass., Dec. 5th, 1865, Mrs. Abba B. Smyth, aged thirty-seven years.

Sister Symth early embraced the Savior, and made profession of her faith in him at the age of fourteen years, which profession she maintained till her death. She was interested in the faith of our Lord's near coming, and the resurrection from the dead, which constituted her hope. Three years ago she was suddenly seized with paralysis, which shattered her entire constitution, so that she was a mere wreck of her former self; yet the Lord was with her in the furnace of the toil to the end, and she retained strong faith in Him.

Sister Smyth will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends, as well as of the poor, infirm, and sick. Even in her own feebleness she was ready to administer to the comfort and relieve the wants of those in any trial. Her record is on high, and treasured in the memory of many afflicted ones.

Her widowed mother, who mourns her loss, has now followed to the grave five children within five years—surviving all her family save one daughter. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn her absence. The surviving relatives, however, are greatly supported and cheered in this hour of bereavement by the "blessed hope" which the gospel affords.

By her own request, made many months ago, I preached her funeral sermon. Text,—"That blessed hope." O. H. FASSETT.

JENKINS. Died at his residence near Madison, Wis., Nov. 13th, 1865, Bro. Joseph Jenkins, aged sixty-four years.

Bro. Jenkins was a native of Lee, N. H., but after his marriage moved to Bangor, Me., where he early embraced the Second Advent sentiments, was very zealous in private circles, and labored some in public to disseminate those views he held with such confidence. In 1850, he with his family removed to this state and settled near Madison, remaining a firm believer in the general views of the Second Advent people, and seemed ready always to give to others a reason for the hope he so dearly cherished. Notwithstanding the responsibilities and obligations of a husband and father held him for a while, he finally resigned all to sleep a short season till Jesus should call him to his reward. He leaves a wife and several children to weep as Rachel wept—because he is not.

ROBERTS. Julia, wife of Bro. C. Roberts, after a lingering consumption of nearly two years, quietly fell asleep in Jesus, on the evening of the 7th inst., at their residence in Windsor, Ct., aged forty-one years.

The subject of this notice, in the early days of Adventism, became interested in the near coming of the Lord, and embraced him as her only hope of future life and immortality, and identified herself as an Advent believer, in which faith and hope she continued until the day of her death.

During her sickness (especially the latter part), she suffered much in breathing, and extreme nervousness, yet her mind was as much stayed on the Lord as could reasonably be expected in such sufferings, which she bore with christian patience. The writer often visited her in the few last mouths of her sickness, and always found her confidence in the Lord, the evidence of her acceptance brightening, and all earthly glories fading, until nothing was cheering but the hope of immortality, and the glories of the kingdom of God, which she only expected to reach through a resurrection from the dead by Jesus Christ, "who is the resurrection and the life." S. COOPER.

Our sister was converted little more than a year ago, under the labors of Bro. H. K. Flagg, since which, according to the testimony of her numerous friends, she has been active, consistent, devoted disciple of the Savior, striving ever to promote his cause, and live in obedience to his requirements. Possessed of large benevolence, she was a Dorcas in the community where she lived. She is laid in her last resting place, but lives still in the memory of those who loved her, and in her pure, bright, christian example. Her funeral was attended by the writer.

"Libbie, we miss thee while thou art in Jesus sweetly sleeping,
Yet that blessed hope in our hearts we still are keeping.
We miss thy gentle voice, which we never more shall hear,
Until the Savior in the clouds of heaven shall appear.
Sickness, pain, and death shall vanish in that bright morn,
And the sting of death itself shall be withdrawn;
Shout for gladness, ye that lie in dust and clay,
And hail with joy the resurrection day."

IRA MORGAN.

DAVIS. Died, also, Aug. 9th, 1865, at the same place, Bro. Samuel Davis, formerly from the State of Maine, father of Sister Jenkins, in the eighty-sixth year of his age.

Also, a son of Bro. and Sr. Jenkins, died at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., July 10th, 1863, Amos F. Jenkins, aged twenty-seven years.

Our last duties were peformed for these friends, now silently sleeping in death's cold embrace, before a respectable and attentive audience, Nov. 27th, 1865. Text, 1 Thess. 4: 18. N. A. HITCHCOCK.

CLARK. Died in South Hawley, Mass., Dec. 11th, 1865, Josephine Isabel, daughter of Bro. Nathan Clark, aged thirteen months and eleven days.

It will be well with the child, for she sleeps in Jesus. RUFUS STARKS.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool, Nov. 30. There is no news of Stephens, the Fenian Head Centre of Ireland. The Governor of the prison, from which he escaped, has been suspended.

The Fenian trials are progressing. Capt. Corbett who commanded the pirate Shenandoah at the time of her transfer, is being tried at Queenstown for breach of the foreign enlistment act.

There is no additional news from Spain or Chili.

The Morning Herald says the feeling in the city relative to American affairs is not altogether satisfactory.

Princess Helena of England is to be betrothed to Prince Christian of Augustenburg.

It is asserted that on the opening of the Hungarian Diet a general amnesty will be promulgated in Hungary.

The deaths from cholera in France during the month of October were 4020, and 379 from the 6th to the 12th of November.

Liverpool Dec. 8th, Queenstown 8th.

News unimportant.

O'Leary, the Fenian, had been found guilty. He made a speech denying that he was a traitor. He declared he owed no allegiance to the Queen of England, nor obedience to British laws. He was sentenced to twenty years' penal servitude.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Dec. 12. The Times' Paris correspondence of the 24th ult. sends a disquisition by Lamartine on the political affairs of this continent, published in the monthly periodical, Les Eutretiences Litteraruers.

He boldly defends the Emperor Maximilian's policy, and says it is a sublime conception, vast as the ocean, as new as all that which is apropos—a conception of safety for America and the world. The idea of a bold and efficacious position to be taken in Mexico against the usurpation of the United States is a new but just idea. Europe has the right to take this position. France takes the initiative. He then starts from the position that the new continent of America is the property of Europe to prove that France has a right to assume this policy. And having shown this to his satisfaction, he draws a picture of Americans as a community, and as individuals, which cannot be regarded as very flattering to the United States.

The Herald's special Washington dispatch says it is rumored that the French Minster, who is now in New York, is much displeased with the Congressional action on the Mexican question, and has decided not to return to Washington unless some explanation is given to him.

MEXICAN QUESTION.—During the week preceding the 23d ultimo 2200 French troops arrived at Vera Cruz, and 3000 more were expected to be on the way there from Brest. It is reported that the French officers speculate freely on the object contemplated by their government in sending them there. They seem to think that they will have no difficulty in whipping the Yankees, and believe that, in the event of war between France and the United States on account of Mexican affairs, the Southern States will again break out in rebellion, when the North will be crushed out, a Southern republic inaugurated, and Maximilian be firmly established on the throne of Mexico. Notwithstanding the reinforcements from France, Americans in Mexico think the Imperial cause rather a gloomy one at present. The French soldiers brought the cholera to Vera Cruz, and sundry deaths had taken place in the city.

THE CATTLE PLAGUE.—Latest foreign advices indicate no abatement of the plague among the cattle, which threatens now such a curtailment of the ordinary supply of animal food throughout Great Britain, as must inevitably affect the provision markets. In the course of the past month the increase of the disease had been most marked. During that period the attacks have risen, from a previous monthly average, from 14,000 to upward of 27,000, and the deaths, destruction included, to upward of 21,000.

Between the 4th and the 11th of November the number of cases increased by fifty per cent. In the ensuing week things were not quite so bad, but there was a further increase still. The London Times assumes that the deaths, instead of 700 a week, are at least four times that number, and if winter does not bring a change for the better the losses may be 5000 or 6000 a week before Christmas.

ITEMS.

☞ New York has one policeman for every 400 residents; Boston one for every 500; Chicago one for every 656; Baltimore one for every 800; Philadelphia one for every 1050.

☞ The death of Leopold, King of the Belgians, is announced in our foreign news.

☞ It appears that those who have suffered most from cholera in Paris are the ragmen and the street-sweepers. On the former class it has fallen so heavily that there is some intention of suppressing the trade altogether. It is said that one hundred and fifteen thousand persons fled from Paris within ten days to avoid the epidemic.

☞ In a Fenian book found in Tyrone, Ireland, besides a list of names, was the following toast: "Here's to ——. Long may he live; may he live till he sees chapels built ten miles long, and seven broad—built with Protestant bones, thatched with ministers' skins, whitewashed with their blood, and their backbones for scrapers at the doors."

☞ The leaves of the elder, if strewn among corn or other grain when it is put into the bin, will effectually preserve it from the ravages of the weevil. The juice will also kill bed bugs and magots. Insects never touch elder bushes. The leaves of the elder scattered over cabbages, cucumbers, squashes and other plants subject to the ravages of insects, effectually shield them.

☞ The cholera was brought to New York in 1848 by the steamer New York, which arrived at that port on Nov. 9th, with 400 passengers from Havre. By a singular coincidence, it is again introduced there in the same month, and by a similar steamer, coming from the same port.

☞ The Russian papers announce that the cholera, which appeared two months since in the southern provinces of the empire, is advancing north; and, notwithstanding the cold weather, it has arrived at Berdytchen, in Russian Poland, a town of forty thousand souls, mostly Jews.

☞ Some of the principal New York hotels talk of raising the price of board to $6 per day. There are families in the Fifth avenue who give $500 or $600 a week for their mere lodging and boarding privilege, while their "extras" will reach $300 or $400 more.

☞ A middle aged man was drugged while on the cars between New York and Bridgeport, and robbed of $1200 in gold. He had recently arrived from England, and was en route to Boston to meet his wife. The money he had with him was all he possessed.

☞ Another great artesian well, flowing 200,000 gallons daily, was struck at Chicago last week. Its diameter is five inches, though the intention is to enlarge it to twenty inches, at which size it will have a discharge capacity of 18,000,000 gallons daily.

THE HEAVENLY FRIEND.

There is a friend above,
Whose pure affection far transcends all others;
No earthly kindred, parents, sisters, brothers,
Like Jesus' love.

His friendship is sincere,
And firm and changeless; not like meteors gleaming,
But on his ransomed ones 'tis ever beaming,
Bright, calm and clear.

He is a faithful friend,
In him the trembling soul, in hope confiding,
May safely trust,—his love is e'er abiding,
Even to the end.

His sympathy, how sweet!
Like softest music o'er the spirit stealing,
It soothes the troubled heart with heavenly healing,
And joy complete.

His words of glorious truth,
Like cadences of love from heaven descending,
Allure and guide to scenes of bliss unending,
And fadeless youth.

He with almighty power
Can give support when earthly hopes are dying;
And safe is every soul, to Jesus flying
In trial's hour.

O! give that gracious Guest
A throne in every heart, earth's sons and daughters;
His friendship is a fount of living waters,
And heavenly rest.

For the World's Crisis.

CANADA TOUR AND NOTES BY THE WAY.

As many months have elapsed since I have written any way-sketches, and thinking my numerous friends and acquaintances would like to hear of my prosperity in the good cause of my Master, I will pen a few notes by the way, and drop a line or two from each place in my journeyings.

First, Alton Bay Campmeeting, Sept. 3d, Sunday evening meeting, closed with a shower of heavenly grace. A few hours rest, and the bell rang at three for those who were going on the boat across the lake. We were ready in a short time. Then come the parting, the "good-byes," and hundreds were on board the Lady of the Lake, and she sailed pleasantly away. We went upon deck to view the scenery around, and our voices were soon sounding out to those along shore,—

"Get on board, get on board,
For there's room for many more."

But none made the attempt to come, for it was too late then. While the noble steamer ploughed through the waves, we sang to the waters, and to each other. In a few hours we were all safely landed at the Weirs Station to await the cars. As we had to wait some hours, our brethren found us a good place to dine, and we sat down to a good dinner, and refreshed ourselves, not expecting to eat again until we passed the Canada line. When the cars arrived, we were all on board, and moved onward.

On arriving at Plymouth, N. H., a brother came into the cars, and stopped me by the way, saying I was expected at Holderness the following Sunday, and the people would be disappointed,—so good-bye, Canada brethren, I could gladly accompany you on to Canada, but if duty requires me to tarry by the way, I must submit, and will find my way alone to your province in three or four weeks, if the Lord will.

Bro. Emery, with his companion, took me to his home in Holderness, where I rested for a few days, and then commenced my labors again.

Sunday I was at the brick school-house. Bro. J. Smith, a Freewill Baptist preacher, from New Hampton, preached in the morning, and I improved the time in the afternoon. Subject, "The kingdom of God, or the new heaven and the new earth, the saints everlasting, abiding home." 2 Pet. 3: 13. Praise the Lord, I had much freedom in preaching his word. As I was in Holderness and vicinity last March, at the time of the great thaw and melting of the deep snows, I was unable to fulfill a number of appointments. I now had the opportunity to fill them. I went over the mountain to a school-house, which was well filled in the afternoon, and had good freedom in preaching Christ and his second coming. The people were attentive and solemn, and some wiped the falling tear while I warned them that the judgment is close at hand.

Next at Hawkins' Meeting-house, in an adjoining town, in the evening. The people turned out to hear, and God was with me, but the people seemed afraid of me, as they were mostly Freewill Baptists. But I sowed seed in tears, and leave the event with the Lord. Rode four miles after meeting with an Advent brother, where I had a good pilgrim home for the night.

Sunday morning came, and I found myself in East Holderness meeting-house. Preached the word to a crowd of people, and Eld. Hiram Stephens (Freewill Baptist) administered the sacrament. A good time. May the Lord seal his precious truth to some unbelieving heart.

Monday, Oct. 2d, I took my leave of the friends in Holderness, and started on my way to Lisbon and Sugar Hill, my former residence for ten years. At five in the evening I found myself at the Lisbon depot all safe. A brother was waiting with his carriage to take me to Sugar Hill,—distance seven miles. On my arrival, I found my son there from Nova Scotia, whom I had not seen for over a year. Our meeting was quite unexpected, yet very agreeable. We were together but one day, when we parted, and he started for Nova Scotia, and I on my way to Canada.

Old neighbors, brethren and sisters greeted me once more very cordially on Sugar Hill, but reflections of the past always bring sadness to my heart. I had one evening meeting. Found the church rather low, but some are still holding on to the "blessed hope" of the Master's soon return. Sold quite a number of my books, made fifteen calls in one day, bade them all adieu, and then started for the conference at Whitefield. I arrived in the evening at Bro. Joseph Colby's. O how thankful I was to meet my old neighbors, brethren and sisters, with their families, again. Many years had passed since we last met. How many changes since last we greeted each other. Loved ones had been laid away in the grave, and I return to them a lone widow. Here is where I first gave my heart to the Lord, and drank from the fountain of life, and breathed the balmy air of heavenly love, and tasted the sweets of pardoning grace. O how sweet their memory still.

We had a good conference meeting. God was with us by his blessed Spirit; and it was cheering to hear the voices of my brethren and sisters in prayer and praise once more. The church in Whitefield is in quite a prosperous state under the labors of Bro. Cleaveland. "The World's Crisis" is now taken, which advocates the same views for which we, as a little church, were excommunicated from the Freewill Baptist quarterly meeting in 1841. It was good enough, thank the Lord. Truth will live, although its advocates may die. Our dear and much esteemed brother, Ira Bolles, is now dead, and laid away to rest till the voice of the archangel and the trump of God shall awake him. Although still in death, he yet speaketh, as his little works will show.

The brethren helped me on my way, for which I feel very grateful. They bought a goodly number of my books. I bade them good-bye, and a brother took me to Northumberland in his carriage, sixteen miles, where I found the Grand Trunk Railroad, and took the cars for a few miles, and then the stage for Colebrook, where I made a halt and had two evening meetings. Next to Stewardstown, one evening, and then over the line to Harriford one evening. In these three places, together with Canaan, where Bro. Hastings and others have labored, there are a goodly number who are looking for the blessed hope, and waiting for the Lord. I had good freedom among them in preaching the glad tidings of the coming kingdom. In each place they helped me on my journey with their prayers. A brother with his team took me on to Canada through the Harriford woods, and after some hours of toilsome journeyings through mud and a rocky road, we find ourselves safely landed in Compton, at the big house of cousin Burton Harvey's.

Saturday evening, at the school-house, I found Bro. Seavey, from New Hampshire. We preached the present truth, and the church were fed. We had a good meeting. O how much I have to praise my heavenly Father for health and strength to journey, and a heart to do what I can in the vineyard, while I find good friends, who see that my wants are all supplied, so that I lack for nothing.

Sunday, Oct. 8th. According to my appointment, I found myself in the Harvey school-house. Here I met with brethren and sisters in Compton and adjoining towns, with six or seven preachers, and some relatives who were not only cousins, but brothers and sisters in the Lord. I spoke with much freedom through the day upon one text of Scripture, found in Hebrew 9: 28,—"So Christ was offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Many warm friends greeted me very cordially, and the falling tear for the absent one, who had so often expressed her desire to see cousin Abby, now cold in death, made me feel a secret wish that cruel death was destroyed. Bro. Porter came from Danville, forty miles, to hear and to invite me to his place. Bro. McKinstry and others were present to invite me to other places. I shall have work enough to do in Canada to last awhile.

Sunday, Oct. 16th, at Hatley meeting. Good freedom, and an old-fashioned, noisy meeting. Praise the Lord. It was good to be there. Although a rainy day, some came ten or twelve miles to the meeting. There were Adventists there of the old '43 stamp,—the true coin.

Barnston, C. E., Sunday, Oct. 22d. A crowd of people gathered in a large school-house, and as strangers came in one after another, the old familiar face of our much esteemed Bro. S. Thurbur appeared in view. I knew the countenance, and the shake of the hand told the story. Bro. Samuel is the same warm-hearted brother he was twenty years ago, when at our pilgrim home on Sugar Hill. What a privilege among strangers, in a strange land, to find an old acquaintance, and a brother in Christ. The Lord graced the meeting with his Holy Spirit, and it was good to be there. But oh, if sinners could be reached, and brought to Christ, how much it would add to the interest of our meetings.

Danville, Sunday, Oct. 29th. Here I found a church of believers in the near coming of the Lord, with Bro. J. Porter as their pastor, and a nice little chapel to worship in. With what freedom I poured forth with my full soul the plain truths of the precious Bible to both saints and sinners. The brethren received me as did the church at Cenchrea a Phebe, who was not only a sister, but a servant of the church, to whom the apostle Paul gave a letter of recommendation to the church at Rome. Here I found a brother who was converted under the labors of a female, and had been very anxious, with others, that God would send me to Danville. The brother expressed a great desire that our sisters, who are in the gospel field, should give their full names to their appointments in the Crisis. Will you do so, sisters? I am willing for one, and I trust no more will be deceived in coming to hear Eld. Mussey preach, when they learn it is only Abigail.

A pleasant week in Danville. Meetings every evening to good acceptance, with Bro. Porter, his family and church. I left them, and started on my way, a lone pilgrim, for the great city of Montreal. I passed over the Victoria iron bridge, and through the dark tunnel, in the night, two miles, fearing and trembling, lest some accident might happen, and I finally be picked up in the bottom of the St. Lawrence, and none to tell who I was, or from whence I came; but I gave myself unto God and to prayer, and my merciful Preserver carried me safely through, and I was landed safely in the depot at Montreal, at nine o'clock, among strangers. Not a person in that great city that I had ever seen; but my trust was in Him who had said, go and I will go with thee. I sat solitary and a lone one, wondering if I should be called for, and when a few moments had elapsed, the door opened, and my name was called. Never, in all my life, was I more willing to answer at the call of Mrs. Mussey. Three brethren were there waiting for the cars to arrive; and Bro. G. Smith soon conveyed me to his house and pilgrim home, and I was a glad child with a thankful heart.

Montreal, Sunday, Nov. 5th. As I entered their pleasant hall, there was already gathered a little group of brethren and sisters, having their Sunday morning prayer meeting. Here, thought I, is the fruit of Bro. Grant's trials and labors in Montreal. Thank God, I am here, and while I listened to their songs and prayers, and especially did each one pray for the sister that had come among them, ere I was aware, the tears were fast falling, while my mind flits over the past, for a moment, thinking of Bro. Grant's conflicts while baffling with the enemy almost alone, and standing so boldly for God and his truth, where the fog of mysticism and unbelief was so thick that he was almost blinded, and the ice so deep and thick he was almost fearful he would not break through; but, by the help of God, the little David succeeded, and victory has turned on the side of truth, while his opponent has been arrested for stealing books. Truth is gaining ground. Thank God, no weapon formed against the truth or God's people will prosper. And since Bro. Grant has broken the ice here, Brn. Hastings and Taylor have done much in melting it away, and, by the help of God, I can do a little. Our meetings were well attended. The hall was so full at times, that many had to stand, while I spoke to them three Sabbaths, and almost every evening for two weeks.

I never had better freedom in preaching the word, or greater access to the people, than in Montreal, and I trust that God has some dear children there, who will be found watching when the Master comes; and the favored instrument, who through God planted the church in Montreal, will not have to wear a starless crown.

I made some visits among the friends, looked around the city, went into the great French Cathedral, and other Catholic churches, saw their paintings, which were beautiful, especially the paintings of Christ from the babe to the cross; but their manner of worship was all folly to me. Went to the jail to see a man hung, which was a sad spectacle to me. I felt thankful indeed that God had given me his Holy Spirit, so that I have no desire to murder for money, the love of which is the root of all evil.

Monday evening, we had our last meeting, and we bade good-bye to our brethren in Montreal, hoping we may meet them in the kingdom of God soon. They gave me an urgent invitation to return and spend the winter with them. I gave some encouragement that I would; and thus I leave them, with many thanks for their liberal donation.

I returned through the dark tunnel, as I came, leaving many warm friends behind me. Stopped at Melbourne, had two evening meetings and one in the afternoon. God never led me out deeper into his truth than while at Melbourne. A few there love God and his truth, and may I meet them when the reaping time shall come, and angels shout the harvest home. Returned to Compton and Hatley, where I am now holding a protracted meeting, and may God bless the feeble means to the salvation of some souls. I shall return to the States in a few weeks. Brethren in Massachusetts and Rhode Island are not forgotten. I will be there ere the winter is gone, if the Lord will. Pray for me.

ABIGAIL MUSSEY.

REJOICE!

Rejoice! dear scattered band. Your sufferings are almost over. It is but a little while —such a little while now, until the once pierced feet shall stand upon Olivet's cleaving brow, and the dear hands once nailed to the cross wave a sceptre of righteousness over all the earth. O Palestina, rejoice! Rejoice! beautiful, historic land, for thou wilt soon be redeemed from the curse. The conflicts that have raged within thy borders for so many ages past will soon be over. The Roman will despoil Jerusalem no more. No more will the Crusader and the Saracen meet in deadly conflict upon thy shores, oh beautiful lakes of the Holy Land. Not much longer will the crowned monarchs of earth dispute each other's right to the possession. The city of God will shine like a resplendent gem within thee, and the glory of the nations and their honor will be there. The covenant that God made with Abraham will be a sure covenant. The renewed Canaan will be his for an everlasting possession, and Jesus, our Savior, will reign!

He is coming soon, oh, he is coming! Our best Friend, who died for us! How the glories of this world pale before that one thought. It is all vanity. Why should we toil so earnestly for its treasures? We are on our way home. And our Elder Brother is going to meet us and escort us to our Father's house. Let not the wild, surging waves of earth sweep any away from the Rock. Sow the good seed with untiring diligence. The Master tarrieth but a little while longer. There remaineth for the faithful, rest, and a crown. REJOICE!

"THE SEA OF GLASS."—Rev. 15: 2.

"And I saw as it were a sea of glass, mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory, over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass."

The sea of glass is connected with the seven last plagues, which I believe are in the future, and will be poured out in connection with the deliverance of God's people, as the antitype of the plagues of Egypt. Also, the plagues will make a prominent part of the "time of trouble" just before us; and as these plagues symbolize the judgments of God which are to be poured upon the earth, so "the sea of glass" symbolizes a place of safety for the children of God in this time of trouble.

The idea of being caught away to regions beyond, is fanciful and unscriptural. But the promise is, "Thou shalt not be afraid of the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day, nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee; only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked." Psa. 91: 5–8.

The good Lord foresaw we should need a place of safety in this time of trouble. Here it is. What is it? or what does the sea of glass symbolize? The word of God can only settle this matter. We read in Rev. 12: 1, "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet; and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." All will agree that the woman symbolizes the church. The sun must symbolize her clothing, and the moon her foundation. What is this foundation? Paul says, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid." 1 Cor. 31: 11. Again, Paul says, "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Eph. 2: 20. The moon, then, must symbolize the word of God, and the sun the Spirit of God, with which the church is clothed. And now as there can be no other foundation, the sea of glass must symbolize the word of God.

Where are we in the prophecy? In the end of the sixth seal. And when the sixth seal ends, probation ends; and then the seventh seal will open, and that will open the book. Now what are the peculiar qualities of glass? Transparency is one quality. Can we not see through it? And when the seventh seal is open, can we not see through the word? Daniel says, "The wise shall understand." The book has been opening since the first seal was taken off, and cannot be said to be fully open until the seventh seal is taken off. The seventh seal is about to be opened, and probation end. Then the "time of trouble" will be fully entered upon.

Are we on the foundation? Have we Christ formed within the hope of glory? Have we the victory over self, over the world, the flesh and the devil? Are we holy? Do we bridle our tongues? Do we pray much, and watch constantly? May God help us all to be good.

For the World's Crisis.

VOLTAIRE'S TESTIMONY OF THE WALDENSES.

"In the twelfth century," says Voltaire, "there was one Peter Waldo, a rich merchant of Lyons, whose piety and errors are said to have given rise to the Vaudois (Waldenses.) This man, having retired with several poor people, whom he maintained, to the desert valleys betwixt Provence and Dauphin, acted both as their high-priest and father, instructing them in his doctrine, in which he differed very little from the Albigenses, or from Wickliff, John Huss, Luther, and Zunglius, in regard to several of the chief articles.

These men lived a great while in obscurity, busied in the culture of barren lands, which with indefatigable industry they rendered fit for corn and pasture,—a proof of our being greatly to blame if, through neglect, we suffer any part of France to be uncultivated. The neighboring grounds were let to them on leases; and they improved by their labor so as to maintain themselves, and to enrich their landlords, who never complained of their behavior. In the space of two hundred and fifty years their number increased to eighteen thousand, who were dispersed in thirty small towns, besides hamlets. All this was the fruit of their industry. There were no priests among them, no quarrels about religious worship, no lawsuits; they determined their differences among themselves. None but those who repaired to the neighboring cities knew that there existed any such thing as mass or bishops.

They prayed to God in their own jargon,* and being continually employed, they had the happiness to know no vice. This peaceful state they enjoyed for above two hundred years, since the wars against Albigences, with which the nations had been wearied. When mankind have long rioted in cruelty, their fury abates and sinks into languor and indifference, as we see constantly verified both in the case of individuals and whole nations. Such was the tranquility which the Waldenses enjoyed, when the reformers of Germany and Geneva came to hear that there were others of the same persuasion as themselves. Immediately they sent some of their ministers (a name given to the curates of the Protestant churches) to visit them, and since then the Waldenses are too well known."

Considering the principles of the author, the above is candid.

A. ROSS.

* What Voltaire means by this uncouth speech is, the Waldenses had no liturgy, or forms of public prayer.

A BOOK.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to write a book. Not to make a display, but with a single eye to the glory of God. I have for years thought of publishing a history of my travels and adventures by land and sea; but my present desire is considerably modified. If my personal history is brought into the book at all, it must hold a secondary place, and only furnish matter for reflection, and occasions of praise to Him who has led me through dangers seen and unseen.

I have resided in all of the six New England States, and in New York and Pennsylvania. Have also been some time in Australia and the East Indies. I have seen South America, Africa, and Asia, and have sailed some fifty thousand miles "o'er the dark blue sea." I have had very fair advantages also for obtaining a common education.

Let all this stand in the background, and let the glory of God be the first and foremost object in writing. I aim at the ESSENTIAL TRUTH. On those points of doctrine in regard to which honest, earnest christians differ, I prefer to be silent. If in any case such points must be brought forward, I would do it cautiously, and not in an overbearing, positive manner.

I think I am entirely resigned to the will of the Lord in this. If the way opens for me to write and publish the book, all praise and glory be to His name. And if "I die and make no sign," I make no complaint, but expect to praise him still forevermore.

If any who read this feel interested enough to write to me, I should be thankful to hear from them. And I feel that I owe a debt of gratitude to all men. As Paul says, "I am a debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, both to the wise and the unwise"; so I would acknowledge my indebtedness to all. And if I can by any means benefit any, it is my earnest desire to do so. I trust my friends will often pray for me, that I may be enabled to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling," and not only gain the blest haven myself, but lead others also to the Redeemer.

"Praise him with cheerful spirit
Who filleth to the brim,
That every saint may hear it
Who is looking now for him.
He comes with succor speedy
To those who suffer wrong;
He helps the poor and needy,
And bids the weak be strong."

Sutton, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

CONSIDER THE SINS OF THINE HEART.

It is to little purpose to lop off the branches while the root of corruption remains untouched. In vain do men lave out the streams, when the fountain is running which fills up all again. Let the axe of thy repentance, with David's, go to the root of sin. Study how deep, how permanent is thy natural pollution, how universal it is, till thou dost cry out, with Paul, upon thy body of death. The heart is never thoroughly broken till thoroughly convinced of the heinousness of its original and deep-rooted depravity. Here fix thy thoughts; this is that which makes thee backward to all good, and prone to all evil; that sheds blindness, pride, prejudice, and unbelief into thy mind; enmity, inconstancy, and obstinacy into thy will; inordinate heat and cold into thy affections; insensibleness and unfaithfulness into thy conscience; slipperiness into thy memory; and in a word hath put every wheel of the soul out of order, and made it, from a habitation of holiness, to become a very hell of iniquity. This is what has defiled and perverted all thy members, and turned them into weapons of unrighteousness and servants of sin; that hath filled the head with carnal and corrupt designs, the hand with sinful practices, the eyes with wandering and wantonness, the tongue with deadly poison; that hath opened the ears to tales, flattery, and filthy communication, and shut them against the instructions of life, and hath rendered thy heart the source of all deadly imaginations, so that it poureth out all its wickedness without ceasing even as naturally as a fountain doth pour forth its waters, or as the raging sea doth cast forth mire and dirt. And wilt thou yet be in love with thyself, and tell us any longer of thy good heart? O, never leave meditating on the desperate contagion, the original corruption of thy heart, till, with Ephraim, thou bemoan thyself; and with the deepest shame and sorrow smite on thy breast as the publican; and with Job abhor thyself, and repent in dust and ashes.

Consider the particular evil that thou art most addicted to; find out all its aggravations; set home upon thy heart all God's threats against it: repentance drives before it the whole herd, but especially sticks the arrow in the beloved sin, and singles this out above the rest to run it down. O, labor to make this sin odious to thy soul, and double thy guard and resolutions against it, because this doth most dishonor God and endanger thee.—Ex.

A GENTLE WORD IS NEVER LOST.

A gentle word is never lost!
Oh! never, then, refuse one;
It cheers the heart with sorrow tossed,
And lulls the cares that bruise one.
It scatters sunshine o'er our way,
And turns our thorns to roses;
It changes weary night to day,
And hope and love discloses.

A gentle word is never lost!
Thy fallen sister needs it;
How easy said! how small the cost!
With peace and comfort speeds it.
Then drive the shadow from thy cheeks,
A smile can well replace it;
Our voice is music when we speak
With gentle words to grace it.

FAMILY GOVERNMENT.

Much of the family government at the present time appears to be sadly defective, and growing worse. "Young America" is becoming very uncontrolable, and very disagreeable in manners, and exceedingly corrupt in morals. The youthful recklessness is truly alarming. Some of the very worst rowdies in our land are but mere boys, scarcely into their teens. They trample all laws under their feet, and respect no one but their associates in crime.

Why this sad change in the conduct of the youth of these last days? We think there is more blame resting on the parents than many suppose.

The following from the pen of Dr. Dio Lewis, published in the Home Monthly, is to the point, and deserves a careful consideration. He says:—

Those who would sacrifice a child's lasting good for present gratification may be kind-hearted, but they are most assuredly false to parental responsibilities.

MOTHERS.

I know a bright little mother, always running over with good sense and womanly courage, who constantly seeks opportunities to teach her children lessons of self-denial. When a delicious dessert makes its appearance on the table, something of which her children are particularly fond, and she observes them gazing at it with childish eagerness, she will sometimes say,—

"Now, my dear ones, I wish you would leave the table without touching this. Let no one ask a question or make a complaint."

Again music is heard in the street, and they all rush toward the window. On such an occasion she may check them with a request to resume whatever may have been occupying their attention, and deny themselves the pleasure of seeing the pretty trainers. Numberless occasions afford opportunities for the same invaluable lesson.

TWILIGHT INSTRUCTIONS.

In the quiet evenings, before the little ones are put away in their nests, she tells them in a loving and serious voice, that in all this self-denial they are fitting themselves to withstand the temptations of life; that, by and by, when they are grown, rum, tobacco, and all other vices will have no power over them, if now, while they are children, they learn to govern their appetites and evil inclinations.

RESULTS.

In this beautiful family the fruits of this wise training are most satisfactory. When all are gathered in the small but neat, orderly parlor, that pleasant easy-chair in the corner on the soft rug is not, as is so common, the subject of angry contention, but one of touching, unselfish emulation.

Each prefers to have another occupy it. Blessed mother! . . . Thus early in life is she giving her offspring that priceless treasure which all the learning of this world cannot give its votaries; namely, the very essence of the christian religion.

A CONTRAST.

See that worn-out mother who is always studying to gratify every whim and appetite of her children. How distressed and care-worn are her features! Anxiety is so plainly written on her face that every passer-by can read it. Her Charley wants a cake, then candy, then raisins, now preserves, and before these are disposed of, he must have a whip in the parlor, and then his drum, which will interrupt all conversation. Soon a chair which is occupied by some other person must be vacated for his convenience; then he will amuse himself by pulling a dog's ear or a cat's tail, thus distressing the poor dumb animals, as well as annoying human beings. Then, while eating a greasy doughnut, he will climb up into a visitor's lap, and so on, ad infinitum. And this poor deluded mother constantly cries,—

"Oh, let him, let him! He wants to!"

Let us thank God that such unrestrained indulgence of passion and appetite generally kills children early. The unreasonable, petulant, selfish character, evoked from such thoughtless, unintentional cruelty, does not often remain to curse the world through a long life.

I shall not argue a proposition which only needs to be stated; namely, that the most obligatory and holy duty pressing upon those who have the charge of children is to teach this lesson of self-denial. All others are as nothing compared with this. And when we remember that this invaluable lesson, if taught in the restraints of table appetites,—which is the point upon which, as a physiologist, I would more particularly insist,—is an indispensable means of health and vigor of both body and soul, its value and importance are doubly enhanced.

SELF-RELIANCE.

Teach children to rely upon their own efforts. Give them an object to live for, and let them work for it.

Thousands of men and women, who are the slaves of appetite and passion, might have become noble and useful citizens, had they been thrown upon their own resources in childhood or youth. Many noble mothers are the authors of all that is noble and good in their offspring; yet I conscientiously believe that, with our loose American notions on the training of children, a large majority of Young America, both male and female, would have their chances for a vigorous manhood and womanhood greatly improved if deprived of the protection of their parents in early childhood, and taught, amid all sorts of hardships, the great lessons of self-denial and industry.

Blessed be God, with a mother in whom there is a happy mingling of stern conscience and tender affections, tracing as I do, all that I am and all that I have to that mother, it is hard for me to think that the loss of a mother could, under any circumstances, prove an advantage: but I have been forced to this opinion from witnessing daily and hourly the ruinous results of that unchecked indulgence and pampering which have become the almost universal custom in American houses.

FATHERS AND MOTHERS OF NEW ENGLAND.

You who have retained so much of Plymouth Rock in your compositions have now begun to fall into this unhappy error. Indeed, many of you begin already to justify yourselves by urging the sacred individuality of every human being. One eminent educator has said, "to break the will of a child is to destroy the lever of all his future conquests." Numberless parents have resolved never again to resort to corporal punishment with their children.

Without bringing forward the numerous testimonies from the sacred Scriptures which unequivocally sustain the doctrine of discipline and government, without an attempt to echo the voice of history, it is enough to say that the new doctrine has already produced that impertinent, lawless "Young America" which has become the disgrace of our land, and may, I fear, destroy all law and order.

OBEDIENCE—PROMPT, UNCONDITIONAL.

This should be resolutely enforced by every parent. The means should be of the gentle and purely moral character so far as possible. But subordination must be secured. To secure it, when moral suasion fails, the parent who will not resort to corporal force on account of some fine theory about "sacred individuality" is false to his obligations.

DISCIPLINE IN SCHOOLS.

In common with all earnest educators, I have considered it much. During a long intercourse with schools, the incomparable importance of thorough discipline has been constantly thrust upon me. I do not believe the value of such discipline has been overrated.

For the World's Crisis.

THE RIGHT WAY.

"There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."—PROV. 14: 12.

Thousands there are in this world who think their ways are perfectly right. They pass along with unbroken pace through life, thinking most assuredly they cannot be wrong. They allow themselves to be guided by the dictates of their own conscience, which becomes as hard as a flint. If they cheat, lie, steal, slander, or even doubt the existence of an overruling God, their way still seems right to them. But is it right? No, because it ends in death. Therefore it must be wrong. The way that is right will never end in death. Jesus saith, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh to the Father but by me." Therefore if a man follow in the way of Christ, whether it seemeth right or not, it will surely end in life. Seek to enter in at the straight gate, for there is but one way that leadeth there.

SANFORD HART.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

POISONS IN DAILY USE.

Poisons are introduced into the system by various means. They are often concealed in food by the ignorant cook or housekeeper, and as ignorantly partaken of by herself and others. Pickles are often poisoned by being scalded in brass or copper kettles. It makes them look green, but that very greenness renders them poison. Brass or copper kettles ought not to be used for any purpose unless they are previously scoured very bright. It is better for health to avoid their use for cooking purposes. Brass wash dishes ought never to be used; they cause sore eyes, eruptions, etc. Water is poisoned by being conveyed in lead pipes, or standing in pails painted on the inside. Milk is poisoned by having such pails for milking. Cheese is often poisoned in the same way, and by using in its manufacture brass, copper or wooden tubs, painted inside. Ignorance often conceals a deadly weapon in our best articles of food, but selfishness does the same thing more frequently. Candies, toys and cakes are often ornamented or colored with various poisons. The blending of colors in these articles makes them attractive to the eye, but destructive to the health of those that use them. Highly colored candies and cakes, so attractive to children, cause decayed teeth, canker, intestinal inflammation, nauseating headache, colic, spasms, and often convulsions. Confectionary may be prepared without coloring material so as to be wholesome. Gay colors are made of poisonous materials, that ought never to be introduced into food or drinks. Wall paper ornamented with beautiful green, pretty yellow, and lively red, sometimes diffuses through sleeping and sitting rooms, an atmosphere impregnated with a poisonous vapor, that causes headache, nausea, dryness of the mouth and throat, cough, boils, watery swellings of the face, cutaneous affections and inflammation of the eyes. These occur in more serious forms in apartments that are not constantly and thoroughly ventilated.

SUNSHINE.

By the use of this term we do not mean sunlight, but the direct rays or shine of the sun. Mankind are dying for the want of it. We build our houses, to be sure, with a world of windows, but they are chiefly put in to make a handsome display outside. We are careful to curtain them inside and blind them outside so as to shut out the precious rays of the sun. It is a good argument in favor of curtains and blinds, that if the light be let in too strongly it will fade the carpet. So far as carpets are concerned this is true, as they are generally made, but can we have no colors in carpets which the light will not seriously affect? If carpets fade by letting the light in, there is another thing that fades by keeping the light out, viz., the human being.

On the shady side of the street, the hospital and prison, cholera, scrofula, billious complaints, and nervous diseases are more frequent and fatal than on the sunny side. We advise everybody to live on the sunny side of their houses. The room in which the family spends most of its time should be on the side where the sun can find its way into it. Let the parlor, if it be seldom used, be on the shady side. We observe that there is not a cottager so ignorant that will not set her plants, if she have taste enough to grow them, in the east window in the morning, and at noon carry them to a south window, and in the afternoon put them in a west window. But perhaps she is careful to keep her children in the shade, and her precious self, so far as possible, out of the rays of the sun. The plants in obedience to natural law are kept healthy, while the children and mother being kept in the shade, suffer in consequence.

Light is beginning to be considered a great curative agent, and we apprehend that the time is not far distant when there will be sun-baths. Corridors with glass roofs will be so adjusted that persons can properly remove their clothing and take a bath in the sun for an hour or two, much to the improvement of their health. The chief advantage of going to the country is to get into the sunshine, and to be in the pure breezes. If we desired merely to keep cool, we should stay in the shady city. People talk of "hot walls" and "burning pavements;" it is much hotter in the country, for the breeze that plays there in mid-day brings only heated air from outdoors. But in the city the breeze brings air in from the shady side of the street, and the lower rooms of a city house are consequently much cooler in mid-day than the exposed houses of the country.

Our soldiers, who were able to bear the labor and fatigue of war, are invigorated by the out-door life they lived. We know a young man in New York who came back from the war and resumed his former occupation of book-keeping, and lost thirty pounds' weight in six weeks. It would do him good to be a farmer.

Parents can do nothing better for their puny sick boys than to put them on a farm for three or four summers and let the sun bathe them the livelong day. They will, by such a life, grow rapidly, and become tough, brawny, and broad. We have seen this tried to the highest advantage in more than one instance under our advice.—Phrenological Journal.

BREATHING THRO' THE MOUTH.

Man seems to be the only animal that is given to this most unphysiological habit. The common habit of sleeping with the mouth open, is often very annoying to those so afflicted, and generally requires quite an effort to break it up. The following notice of some of the effects produced, may induce persons to try and see what can be done by a little resolution and perseverance in overcoming the evil.

Air taken into the lungs through the mouth, produces injurious effects in two ways. Firstly, the lining membrane of the mouth is dried and parched by the absorbing action of the air, and the natural secretion of the parts is arrested, causing much discomfort. Secondly, the air is taken into the lungs in what might be termed a "raw state," thereby causing irritation of the lung membrane by the cold, and also from the action of dust and other injurious substances that are drawn into the pulmonary cells. Probably, nearly every one has noticed the almost painful sensations experienced by rapidly breathing through the mouth large quantities of cold air on a frosty morning. This cold air is invigorating if taken in through the proper passage, and so warmed and tempered before reaching the delicate membrane of the lungs. In the best constructed steam-engines of the present day, the cold water is warmed by the waste heat before it is introduced into the boiler. The same thing is also done in some kinds of iron furnaces; the air which blows the fire is heated before entering the furnace. By these methods, the central mass of fire or water, is more easily kept at the necessary high temperature. The effect of breathing cold air into the lungs without this previous heating which is done in the natural air passages, is to rob the central organs of the respiratory apparatus, of a large amount of heat, and thus chill them below their natural temperature.—Ex.

MEDICAL DRUNKARDS.

Let me say that of all persons who have not yet become drunkards, the most pitiable are they who are drinking intoxicating liquor under medical advice. Others drink it upon their own responsibility, and therefore with more or less caution. But these drink it upon the highest authority, and therefore with no fear of consequences. Other tipplers often restrain their appetite through shame of being seen to indulge it. But these indulge it boldly under the impervious plea that they are but taking medicine. Other tipplers are open to admonition and reformation. But these have infallible doctors to shield them from ignorant admonition, and exempt them from all sense of their need of reformation. In a word, whilst the one, drinking intoxicating liquor without excuse, and therefore against conscience—against that voice of God in the soul—may stop ere it be too late; the other, drinking it for health, and therefore with an approving conscience, will, probably, never stop until life stops. Emphatically true is it that no other tippler is going so surely to the drunkard's grave as the one who lets his doctor lead him to it.—Gerritt Smith.

DRESS AND DISEASE.

There is no truth more firmly established among medical men than that disease follows fashion as much as bonnets do. When thin shoes prevail, consumption is the prevailing epidemic with females in every fashionable community of the country. When low-necked dresses are in the ascendant, sore throat and quinsy are the raging maladies. When bustles and bishops made their appearance, spinal affections became the "ton." The reign of corsets is denoted by collapsed lungs, dyspepsia, and a general derangement of the digestive organs. Indeed, so immediately are dress and disease connected, that a doctor says that all he needs to determine what a majority of the women are dying of, is to have an inventory of their wardrobe handed to him.

☞ There is no form of mere neuralgia but may be cured in a reasonable time by strict personal cleanliness, loosening food, and breathing pure air.

THE HEAVENLY FRIEND.

There is a friend above,
Whose pure affection far transcends all others;
No earthly kindred, parents, sisters, brothers,
Like Jesus' love.

His friendship is sincere,
And firm and changeless; not like meteors gleaming,
But on his ransomed ones 'tis ever beaming,
Bright, calm and clear.

He is a faithful friend,
In him the trembling soul, in hope confiding,
May safely trust,—his love is e'er abiding,
Even to the end.

His sympathy, how sweet!
Like softest music o'er the spirit stealing,
It soothes the troubled heart with heavenly healing,
And joy complete.

His words of glorious truth,
Like cadences of love from heaven descending,
Allure and guide to scenes of bliss unending,
And fadeless youth.

He with almighty power
Can give support when earthly hopes are dying;
And safe is every soul, to Jesus flying
In trial's hour.

O! give that gracious Guest
A throne in every heart, earth's sons and daughters;
His friendship is a fount of living waters,
And heavenly rest.

CANADA TOUR AND NOTES BY THE WAY.

As many months have elapsed since I have written any way-sketches, and thinking my numerous friends and acquaintances would like to hear of my prosperity in the good cause of my Master, I will pen a few notes by the way, and drop a line or two from each place in my journeyings.

First, Alton Bay Campmeeting, Sept. 3d, Sunday evening meeting, closed with a shower of heavenly grace. A few hours rest, and the bell rang at three for those who were going on the boat across the lake. We were ready in a short time. Then come the parting, the "good-byes," and hundreds were on board the Lady of the Lake, and she sailed pleasantly away. We went upon deck to view the scenery around, and our voices were soon sounding out to those along shore,—

"Get on board, get on board,
For there's room for many more."

But none made the attempt to come, for it was too late then. While the noble steamer ploughed through the waves, we sang to the waters, and to each other. In a few hours we were all safely landed at the Weirs Station to await the cars. As we had to wait some hours, our brethren found us a good place to dine, and we sat down to a good dinner, and refreshed ourselves, not expecting to eat again until we passed the Canada line. When the cars arrived, we were all on board, and moved onward.

On arriving at Plymouth, N. H., a brother came into the cars, and stopped me by the way, saying I was expected at Holderness the following Sunday, and the people would be disappointed,—so good-bye, Canada brethren, I would gladly accompany you on to Canada, but if duty requires me to tarry by the way, I must submit, and will find my way alone to your province in three or four weeks, if the Lord will.

Bro. Emery, with his companion, took me to his home in Holderness, where I rested for a few days, and then commenced my labors again.

Sunday I was at the brick school-house. Bro. J. Smith, a Freewill Baptist preacher, from New Hampton, preached in the morning, and I improved the time in the afternoon. Subject, "The kingdom of God, or the new heaven and the new earth, the saints everlasting, abiding home." 2 Pet. 3 : 13. Praise the Lord, I had much freedom in preaching his word. As I was in Holderness and vicinity last March, at the time of the great thaw and melting of the deep snows, I was unable to fulfill a number of appointments. I now had the opportunity to fill them. I went over the mountain to a school-house, which was well filled in the afternoon, and had good freedom in preaching Christ and his second coming. The people were attentive and solemn, and some wiped the falling tear while I warned them that the judgment is close at hand.

Next at Hawkins' Meeting-house, in an adjoining town, in the evening. The people turned out to hear, and God was with me, but the people seemed afraid of me, as they were mostly Freewill Baptists. But I sowed seed in tears, and leave the event with the Lord. Rode four miles after meeting with an Advent brother, where I had a good pilgrim home for the night.

Sunday morning came, and I found myself in East Holderness meeting-house. Preached the word to a crowd of people, and Eld. Hiram Stephens (Freewill Baptist) administered the sacrament. A good time. May the Lord seal his precious truth to some unbelieving heart.

Monday, Oct. 2d, I took my leave of the friends in Holderness, and started on my way to Lisbon and Sugar Hill, my former residence for ten years. At five in the evening I found myself at the Lisbon depot all safe. A brother was waiting with his carriage to take me to Sugar Hill,—distance seven miles. On my arrival, I found my son there from Nova Scotia, whom I had not seen for over a year. Our meeting was quite unexpected, yet very agreeable. We were together but one day, when we parted, and he started for Nova Scotia, and I on my way to Canada.

Old neighbors, brethren and sisters greeted me once more very cordially on Sugar Hill, but reflections of the past always bring sadness to my heart. I had one evening meeting. Found the church rather low, but some are still holding on to the "blessed hope" of the Master's soon return. Sold quite a number of my books, made fifteen calls in one day, bade them all adieu, and then started for the conference at Whitefield. I arrived in the evening at Bro. Joseph Colby's. O how thankful I was to meet my old neighbors, brethren and sisters, with their families, again. Many years had passed since we last met. How many changes since last we greeted each other. Loved ones had been laid away in the grave, and I return to them a lone widow. Here is where I first gave my heart to the Lord, and drank from the fountain of life, and breathed the balmy air of heavenly love, and tasted the sweets of pardoning grace. O how sweet their memory still.

We had a good conference meeting. God was with us by his blessed Spirit; and it was cheering to hear the voices of my brethren and sisters in prayer and praise, once more. The church in Whitefield is in quite a prosperous state under the labors of Bro. Cleaveland. "The World's Crisis" is now taken, which advocates the same views for which we, as a little church, were excommunicated from the Freewill Baptist quarterly meeting in 1841. It was good enough, thank the Lord. Truth will live, although its advocates may die. Our dear and much esteemed brother, Ira Bolles, is now dead, and laid away to rest till the voice of the archangel and the trump of God shall awake him. Although still in death, he yet speaketh, as his little works will show.

The brethren helped me on my way, for which I feel very grateful. They bought a goodly number of my books. I bade them good-bye, and a brother took me to Northumberland in his carriage, sixteen miles, where I found the Grand Trunk Railroad, and took the cars for a few miles, and then the stage for Colebrook, where I made a halt and had two evening meetings. Next to Stewardstown, one evening, and then over the line to Harriford one evening. In these three places, together with Canaan, where Bro. Hastings and others have labored, there are a goodly number who are looking for the blessed hope, and waiting for the Lord. I had good freedom among them in preaching the glad tidings of the coming kingdom. In each place they helped me on my journey with their prayers. A brother with his team took me on to Canada through the Harriford woods, and after some hours of toilsome journeyings through mud and a rocky road, we find ourselves safely landed in Compton, at the big house of cousin Burton Harvey's.

Saturday evening, at the school-house, I found Bro. Seavey, from New Hampshire. We preached the present truth, and the church were fed. We had a good meeting. O how much I have to praise my heavenly Father for health and strength to journey, and a heart to do what I can in the vineyard, while I find good friends, who see that my wants are all supplied, so that I lack for nothing.

Sunday, Oct. 8th. According to my appointment, I found myself in the Harvey school-house. Here I met with brethren and sisters in Compton and adjoining towns, with six or seven preachers, and some relatives who were not only cousins, but brothers and sisters in the Lord. I spoke with much freedom through the day upon one text of Scripture, found in Hebrew 9 : 28,—"So Christ was offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Many warm friends greeted me very cordially, and the falling tear for the absent one, who had so often expressed her desire to see cousin Abby, now cold in death, made me feel a secret wish that cruel death was destroyed. Bro. Porter came from Danville, forty miles, to hear and to invite me to his place. Bro. McKinstry and others were present to invite me to other places. I shall have work enough to do in Canada to last awhile.

Sunday, Oct. 16th, at Hatley meeting. Good freedom, and an old-fashioned, noisy meeting. Praise the Lord. It was good to be there. Although a rainy day, some came ten or twelve miles to the meeting. There were Adventists there of the old '43 stamp,—the true coin.

Barnston, C. E., Sunday, Oct. 22d. A crowd of people gathered in a large school-house, and as strangers came in one after another, the old familiar face of our much esteemed Bro. S. Thurbur appeared in view. I knew the countenance, and the shake of the hand told the story. Bro. Samuel is the same warm-hearted brother he was twenty years ago, when at our pilgrim home on Sugar Hill. What a privilege among strangers, in a strange land, to find an old acquaintance, and a brother in Christ. The Lord graced the meeting with his Holy Spirit, and it was good to be there. But oh, if sinners could be reached, and brought to Christ, how much it would add to the interest of our meetings.

Danville, Sunday, Oct. 29th. Here I found a church of believers in the near coming of the Lord, with Bro. J. Porter as their pastor, and a nice little chapel to worship in. With what freedom I poured forth with my full soul the plain truths of the precious Bible to both saints and sinners. The brethren received me as did the church at Cenchrea a Phebe, who was not only a sister, but a servant of the church, to whom the apostle Paul gave a letter of recommendation to the church at Rome. Here I found a brother who was converted under the labors of a female, and had been very anxious, with others, that God would send me to Danville. The brother expressed a great desire that our sisters, who are in the gospel field, should give their full names to their appointments in the Crisis. Will you do so, sisters? I am willing for one, and I trust no more will be deceived in coming to hear Eld. Mussey preach, when they learn it is only Abigail.

A pleasant week in Danville. Meetings every evening to good acceptance, with Bro. Porter, his family and church. I left them, and started on my way, a lone pilgrim, for the great city of Montreal. I passed over the Victoria iron bridge, and through the dark tunnel, in the night, two miles, fearing and trembling, lest some accident might happen, and I finally be picked up in the bottom of the St. Lawrence, and none to tell who I was, or from whence I came; but I gave myself unto God and to prayer, and my merciful Preserver carried me safely through, and I was landed safely in the depot at Montreal, at nine o'clock, among strangers. Not a person in that great city that I had ever seen; but my trust was in Him who had said, go and I will go with thee. I sat solitary and a lone one, wondering if I should be called for, and when a few moments had elapsed, the door opened, and my name was called. Never, in all my life, was I more willing to answer at the call of Mrs. Mussey. Three brethren were there waiting for the cars to arrive; and Bro. G. Smith soon conveyed me to his house and pilgrim home, and I was a glad child with a thankful heart.

Montreal, Sunday, Nov. 5th. As I entered their pleasant hall, there was already gathered a little group of brothren and sisters, having their Sunday morning prayer meeting. Here, thought I, is the fruit of Bro. Grant's trials and labors in Montreal. Thank God, I am here, and while I listened to their songs and prayers, and especially did each one pray for the sister that had come among them, ere I was aware, the tears were fast falling, while my mind flits over the past, for a moment, thinking of Bro. Grant's conflicts while baffling with the enemy almost alone, and standing so boldly for God and his truth, where the fog of mysticism and unbelief was so thick that he was almost blinded, and the ice so deep and thick he was almost fearful he would not break through; but, by the help of God, the little David succeeded, and victory has turned on the side of truth, while his opponent has been arrested for stealing books. Truth is gaining ground. Thank God, no weapon formed against the truth or God's people will prosper. And since Bro. Grant has broken the ice here, Brn. Hastings and Taylor have done much in melting it away, and, by the help of God, I can do a little. Our meetings were well attended. The hall was so full at times, that many had to stand, while I spoke to them three Sabbaths, and almost every evening for two weeks.

I never had better freedom in preaching the word, or greater access to the people, than in Montreal, and I trust that God has some dear children there, who will be found watching when the Master comes; and the favored instrument, who through God planted the church in Montreal, will not have to wear a starless crown.

I made some visits among the friends, looked around the city, went into the great French Cathedral, and other Catholic churches, saw their paintings, which were beautiful, especially the paintings of Christ from the babe to the cross; but their manner of worship was all folly to me. Went to the jail to see a man hung, which was a sad spectacle to me. I felt thankful indeed that God had given me his Holy Spirit, so that I have no desire to murder for money, the love of which is the root of all evil.

Monday evening, we had our last meeting, and we bade good-bye to our brethren in Montreal, hoping we may meet them in the kingdom of God soon. They gave me an urgent invitation to return and spend the winter with them. I gave some encouragement that I would; and thus I leave them, with many thanks for their liberal donation.

I returned through the dark tunnel, as I came, leaving many warm friends behind me. Stopped at Melbourne, had two evening meetings and one in the afternoon. God never led me out deeper into his truth than while at Melbourne. A few there love God and his truth, and may I meet them when the reaping time shall come, and angels shout the harvest home. Returned to Compton and Hatley, where I am now holding a protracted meeting, and may God bless the feeble means to the salvation of some souls. I shall return to the States in a few weeks. Brethren in Massachusetts and Rhode Island are not forgotten. I will be there ere the winter is gone, if the Lord will. Pray for me.

ABIGAIL MUSSEY.

REJOICE!

Rejoice! dear scattered band. Your sufferings are almost over. It is but a little while —such a little while now, until the once pierced feet shall stand upon Olivet's cleaving brow, and the dear hands once nailed to the cross wave a sceptre of righteousness over all the earth. O Palestina, rejoice! Rejoice! beautiful, historic land, for thou wilt soon be redeemed from the curse. The conflicts that have raged within thy borders for so many ages past will soon be over. The Roman will despoil Jerusalem no more. No more will the Crusader and the Saracen meet in deadly conflict upon thy shores, oh beautiful lakes of the Holy Land. Not much longer will the crowned monarchs of earth dispute each other's right to the possession. The city of God will shine like a resplendent gem within thee, and the glory of the nations and their honor will be there. The covenant that God made with Abraham will be a sure covenant. The renewed Canaan will be his for an everlasting possession, and Jesus, our Savior, will reign!

He is coming soon, oh, he is coming! Our best Friend, who died for us! How the glories of this world pale before that one thought. It is all vanity. Why should we toil so earnestly for its treasures? We are on our way home. And our Elder Brother is going to meet us and escort us to our Father's house. Let not the wild, surging waves of earth sweep any away from the Rock. Sow the good seed with untiring diligence. The Master tarrieth but a little while longer. There remaineth for the faithful, rest, and a crown. REJOICE!

"THE SEA OF GLASS."—Rev. 15 : 2.

"And I saw as it were a sea of glass, mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass."

The sea of glass is connected with the seven last plagues, which I believe are in the future, and will be poured out in connection with the deliverance of God's people, as the antitype of the plagues of Egypt. Also, the plagues will make a prominent part of the "time of trouble" just before us; and as these plagues symbolize the judgments of God which are to be poured upon the earth, so "the sea of glass" symbolizes a place of safety for the children of God in this time of trouble.

The idea of being caught away to regions beyond, is fanciful and unscriptural. But the promise is, "Thou shalt not be afraid of the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day, nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee; only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked." Psa. 91 : 5–8.

The good Lord foresaw we should need a place of safety in this time of trouble. Here it is. What is it? or what does the sea of glass symbolize? The word of God can only settle this matter. We read in Rev. 12 : 1, "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet; and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." All will agree that the woman symbolizes the church. The sun must symbolize her clothing, and the moon her foundation. What is this foundation? Paul says, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid." 1 Cor. 31 : 11. Again, Paul says, "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Eph. 2 : 20. The moon, then, must symbolize the word of God, and the sun the Spirit of God, with which the church is clothed. And now as there can be no other foundation, the sea of glass must symbolize the word of God.

Where are we in the prophecy? In the end of the sixth seal. And when the sixth seal ends, probation ends; and then the seventh seal will open, and that will open the book.

Now what are the peculiar qualities of glass? Transparency is one quality. Can we not see through it? And when the seventh seal is open, can we not see through the word? Daniel says, "The wise shall understand." The book has been opening since the first seal was taken off, and cannot be said to be fully open until the seventh seal is taken off. The seventh seal is about to be opened, and probation end. Then the "time of trouble" will be fully entered upon.

Are we on the foundation? Have we Christ formed within the hope of glory? Have we the victory over self, over the world, the flesh and the devil? Are we holy? Do we bridle our tongues? Do we pray much, and watch constantly? May God help us all to be good. J. K. BELLOWS.

VOLTAIRE'S TESTIMONY OF THE WALDENSES.

"In the twelfth century," says Voltaire, "there was one Peter Waldo, a rich merchant of Lyons, whose piety and errors are said to have given rise to the Vaudois (Waldenses.) This man, having retired with several poor people, whom he maintained, to the desert valleys betwixt Provence and Dauphin, acted both as their high-priest and father, instructing them in his doctrine, in which he differed very little from the Albigenses, or from Wickliff, John Huss, Luther, and Zunglius, in regard to several of the chief articles.

These men lived a great while in obscurity, busied in the culture of barren lands, which with indefatigable industry they rendered fit for corn and pasture,—a proof of our being greatly to blame if, through neglect, we suffer any part of France to be uncultivated. The neighboring grounds were let to them on leases; and they improved by their labor so as to maintain themselves, and to enrich their landlords, who never complained of their behavior. In the space of two hundred and fifty years their number increased to eighteen thousand, who were dispersed in thirty small towns, besides hamlets. All this was the fruit of their industry. There were no priests among them, no quarrels about religious worship, no lawsuits; they determined their differences among themselves. None but those who repaired to the neighboring cities knew that there existed any such thing as mass or bishops.

They prayed to God in their own jargon,* and being continually employed, they had the happiness to know no vice. This peaceful state they enjoyed for above two hundred years, since the wars against Albigences, with which the nations had been wearied. When mankind have long rioted in cruelty, their fury abates and sinks into languor and indifference, as we see constantly verified both in the case of individuals and whole nations. Such was the tranquility which the Waldenses enjoyed, when the reformers of Germany and Geneva came to hear that there were others of the same persuasion as themselves. Immediately they sent some of their ministers (a name given to the curates of the Protestant churches) to visit them, and since then the Waldenses are too well known."

* What Voltaire means by this uncouth speech is, the Waldenses had no liturgy, or forms of public prayer.

A BOOK.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to write a book. Not to make a display, but with a single eye to the glory of God. I have for years thought of publishing a history of my travels and adventures by land and sea; but my present desire is considerably modified. If my personal history is brought into the book at all, it must hold a secondary place, and only furnish matter for reflection, and occasions of praise to Him who has led me through dangers seen and unseen.

I have resided in all of the six New England States, and in New York and Pennsylvania. Have also been some time in Australia and the East Indies. I have seen South America, Africa, and Asia, and have sailed some fifty thousand miles "o'er the dark blue sea." I have had very fair advantages also for obtaining a common education.

Let all this stand in the background, and let the glory of God be the first and foremost object in writing. I aim at the ESSENTIAL TRUTH. On those points of doctrine in regard to which honest, earnest christians differ, I prefer to be silent. If in any case such points must be brought forward, I would do it cautiously, and not in an overbearing, positive manner.

I think I am entirely resigned to the will of the Lord in this. If the way opens for me to write and publish the book, all praise and glory be to His name. And if "I die and make no sign," I make no complaint, but expect to praise him still forevermore.

If any who read this feel interested enough to write to me, I should be thankful to hear from them. And I feel that I owe a debt of gratitude to all men. As Paul says, "I am a debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, both to the wise and the unwise"; so I would acknowledge my indebtedness to all. And if I can by any means benefit any, it is my earnest desire to do so. I trust my friends will often pray for me, that I may be enabled to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling," and not only gain the blest haven myself, but lead others also to the Redeemer.

"Praise him with cheerful spirit
Who filleth to the brim,
That every saint may hear it
Who is looking now for him.
He comes with succor speedy
To those who suffer wrong;
He helps the poor and needy,
And bids the weak be strong."

Sutton, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

CONSIDER THE SINS OF THINE HEART.

It is to little purpose to lop off the branches while the root of corruption remains untouched. In vain do men lave out the streams, when the fountain is running which fills up all again. Let the axe of thy repentance, with David's, go to the root of sin. Study how deep, how permanent is thy natural pollution, how universal it is, till thou dost cry out, with Paul, upon thy body of death. The heart is never thoroughly broken till thoroughly convinced of the heinousness of its original and deep-rooted depravity. Here fix thy thoughts; this is that which makes thee backward to all good, and prone to all evil; that sheds blindness, pride, prejudice, and unbelief into thy mind; enmity, inconstancy, and obstinacy into thy will; inordinate heat and cold into thy affections; insensibleness and unfaithfulness into thy conscience; slipperiness into thy memory; and in a word hath put every wheel of the soul out of order, and made it, from a habitation of holiness, to become a very hell of iniquity. This is what has defiled and perverted all thy members, and turned them into weapons of unrighteousness and servants of sin; that hath filled the head with carnal and corrupt designs, the hand with sinful practices, the eyes with wandering and wantonness, the tongue with deadly poison; that hath opened the ears to tales, flattery, and filthy communication, and shut them against the instructions of life, and hath rendered thy heart the source of all deadly imaginations, so that it poureth out all its wickedness without ceasing even as naturally as a fountain doth pour forth its waters, or as the raging sea doth cast forth mire and dirt. And wilt thou yet be in love with thyself, and tell us any longer of thy good heart? O, never leave meditating on the desperate contagion, the original corruption of thy heart, till, with Ephraim, thou bemoan thyself; and with the deepest shame and sorrow smite on thy breast as the publican; and with Job abhor thyself, and repent in dust and ashes.

Consider the particular evil that thou art most addicted to; find out all its aggravations; set home upon thy heart all God's threats against it: repentance drives before it the whole herd, but especially sticks the arrow in the beloved sin, and singles this out above the rest to run it down. O, labor to make this sin odious to thy soul, and double thy guard and resolutions against it, because this doth most dishonor God and endanger thee.—Ex.

A GENTLE WORD IS NEVER LOST.

A gentle word is never lost!
Oh! never, then, refuse one;
It cheers the heart with sorrow tossed,
And lulls the cares that bruise one.
It scatters sunshine o'er our way,
And turns our thorns to roses;
It changes weary night to day,
And hope and love discloses.

A gentle word is never lost!
Thy fallen sister needs it;
How easy said! how small the cost!
With peace and comfort speeds it.
Then drive the shadow from thy cheeks,
A smile can well replace it;
Our voice is music when we speak
With gentle words to grace it.

FAMILY GOVERNMENT.

Much of the family government at the present time appears to be sadly defective, and growing worse. "Young America" is becoming very uncontrolable, and very disagreeable in manners, and exceedingly corrupt in morals. The youthful recklessness is truly alarming. Some of the very worst rowdies in our land are but mere boys, scarcely into their teens. They trample all laws under their feet, and respect no one but their associates in crime.

Why this sad change in the conduct of the youth of these last days? We think there is more blame resting on the parents than many suppose.

The following from the pen of Dr. Dio Lewis, published in the Home Monthly, is to the point, and deserves a careful consideration. He says:—

Those who would sacrifice a child's lasting good for present gratification may be kind-hearted, but they are most assuredly false to parental responsibilities.

MOTHERS.

I know a bright little mother, always running over with good sense and womanly courage, who constantly seeks opportunities to teach her children lessons of self-denial. When a delicious dessert makes its appearance on the table, something of which her children are particularly fond, and she observes them gazing at it with childish eagerness, she will sometimes say,—

"Now, my dear ones, I wish you would leave the table without touching this. Let no one ask a question or make a complaint."

Again music is heard in the street, and they all rush toward the window. On such an occasion she may check them with a request to resume whatever may have been occupying their attention, and deny themselves the pleasure of seeing the pretty trainers. Numberless occasions afford opportunities for the same invaluable lesson.

TWILIGHT INSTRUCTIONS.

In the quiet evenings, before the little ones are put away in their nests, she tells them in a loving and serious voice, that in all this self-denial they are fitting themselves to withstand the temptations of life; that, by and by, when they are grown, rum, tobacco, and all other vices will have no power over them, if now, while they are children, they learn to govern their appetites and evil inclinations.

RESULTS.

In this beautiful family the fruits of this wise training are most satisfactory. When all are gathered in the small but neat, orderly parlor, that pleasant easy-chair in the corner on the soft rug is not, as is so common, the subject of angry contention, but one of touching, unselfish emulation.

Each prefers to have another occupy it. Blessed mother! . . . Thus early in life is she giving her offspring that priceless treasure which all the learning of this world cannot give its votaries; namely, the very essence of the christian religion.

A CONTRAST.

See that worn-out mother who is always studying to gratify every whim and appetite of her children. How distressed and care-worn are her features! Anxiety is so plainly written on her face that every passer-by can read it. Her Charley wants a cake, then candy, then raisins, now preserves, and before these are disposed of, he must have a whip in the parlor, and then his drum, which will interrupt all conversation. Soon a chair which is occupied by some other person must be vacated for his convenience; then he will amuse himself by pulling a dog's ear or a cat's tail, thus distressing the poor dumb animals, as well as annoying human beings. Then, while eating a greasy doughnut, he will climb up into a visitor's lap, and so on, ad infinitum. And this poor deluded mother constantly cries,—

"Oh, let him, let him! He wants to!"

Let us thank God that such unrestrained indulgence of passion and appetite generally kills children early. The unreasonable, petulant, selfish character, evoked from such thoughtless, unintentional cruelty, does not often remain to curse the world through a long life.

I shall not argue a proposition which only needs to be stated; namely, that the most obligatory and holy duty pressing upon those who have the charge of children is to teach this lesson of self-denial. All others are as nothing compared with this. And when we remember that this invaluable lesson, if taught in the restraints of table appetites,—which is the point upon which, as a physiologist, I would more particularly insist,—is an indispensable means of health and vigor of both body and soul, its value and importance are doubly enhanced.

SELF-RELIANCE.

Teach children to rely upon their own efforts. Give them an object to live for, and let them work for it.

Thousands of men and women, who are the slaves of appetite and passion, might have become noble and useful citizens, had they been thrown upon their own resources in childhood or youth. Many noble mothers are the authors of all that is noble and good in their offspring; yet I conscientiously believe that, with our loose American notions on the training of children, a large majority of Young America, both male and female, would have their chances for a vigorous manhood and womanhood greatly improved if deprived of the protection of their parents in early childhood, and taught, amid all sorts of hardships, the great lessons of self-denial and industry.

Blessed be God, with a mother in whom there is a happy mingling of stern conscience and tender affections, tracing as I do, all that I am and all that I have to that mother, it is hard for me to think that the loss of a mother could, under any circumstances, prove an advantage: but I have been forced to this opinion from witnessing daily and hourly the ruinous results of that unchecked indulgence and pampering which have become the almost universal custom in American houses.

FATHERS AND MOTHERS OF NEW ENGLAND.

You who have retained so much of Plymouth Rock in your compositions have now begun to fall into this unhappy error. Indeed, many of you begin already to justify yourselves by urging the sacred individuality of every human being. One eminent educator has said, "to break the will of a child is to destroy the lever of all his future conquests." Numberless parents have resolved never again to resort to corporal punishment with their children.

Without bringing forward the numerous testimonies from the sacred Scriptures which unequivocally sustain the doctrine of discipline and government, without an attempt to echo the voice of history, it is enough to say that the new doctrine has already produced that impertinent, lawless "Young America" which has become the disgrace of our land, and may, I fear, destroy all law and order.

OBEDIENCE—PROMPT, UNCONDITIONAL.

This should be resolutely enforced by every parent. The means should be of the gentle and purely moral character so far as possible. But subordination must be secured. To secure it, when moral suasion fails, the parent who will not resort to corporal force on account of some fine theory about "sacred individuality" is false to his obligations.

DISCIPLINE IN SCHOOLS.

In common with all earnest educators, I have considered it much. During a long intercourse with schools, the incomparable importance of thorough discipline has been constantly thrust upon me. I do not believe the value of such discipline has been overrated.

THE RIGHT WAY.

"There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."—PROV. 14 : 12.

Thousands there are in this world who think their ways are perfectly right. They pass along with unbroken pace through life, thinking most assuredly they cannot be wrong. They allow themselves to be guided by the dictates of their own conscience, which becomes as hard as a flint. If they cheat, lie, steal, slander, or even doubt the existence of an overruling God, their way still seems right to them. But is it right? No, because it ends in death. Therefore it must be wrong. The way that is right will never end in death. Jesus saith, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh to the Father but by me." Therefore if a man follow in the way of Christ, whether it seemeth right or not, it will surely end in life. Seek to enter in at the straight gate, for there is but one way that leadeth there. SANFORD HART.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

POISONS IN DAILY USE.

Poisons are introduced into the system by various means. They are often concealed in food by the ignorant cook or housekeeper, and as ignorantly partaken of by herself and others. Pickles are often poisoned by being scalded in brass or copper kettles. It makes them look green, but that very greenness renders them poison. Brass or copper kettles ought not to be used for any purpose unless they are previously scoured very bright. It is better for health to avoid their use for cooking purposes. Brass wash dishes ought never to be used; they cause sore eyes, eruptions, etc. Water is poisoned by being conveyed in lead pipes, or standing in pails painted on the inside. Milk is poisoned by having such pails for milking. Cheese is often poisoned in the same way, and by using in its manufacture brass, copper or wooden tubs, painted inside. Ignorance often conceals a deadly weapon in our best articles of food, but selfishness does the same thing more frequently. Candies, toys and cakes are often ornamented or colored with various poisons. The blending of colors in these articles makes them attractive to the eye, but destructive to the health of those that use them. Highly colored candies and cakes, so attractive to children, cause decayed teeth, canker, intestinal inflammation, nauseating headache, colic, spasms, and often convulsions. Confectionary may be prepared without coloring material so as to be wholesome. Gay colors are made of poisonous materials, that ought never to be introduced into food or drinks. Wall paper ornamented with beautiful green, pretty yellow, and lively red, sometimes diffuses through sleeping and sitting rooms, an atmosphere impregnated with a poisonous vapor, that causes headache, nausea, dryness of the mouth and throat, cough, boils, watery swellings of the face, cutaneous affections and inflammation of the eyes. These occur in more serious forms in apartments that are not constantly and thoroughly ventilated.

SUNSHINE.

By the use of this term we do not mean sunlight, but the direct rays or shine of the sun. Mankind are dying for the want of it. We build our houses, to be sure, with a world of windows, but they are chiefly put in to make a handsome display outside. We are careful to curtain them inside and blind them outside so as to shut out the precious rays of the sun. It is a good argument in favor of curtains and blinds, that if the light be let in too strongly it will fade the carpet. So far as carpets are concerned this is true, as they are generally made, but can we have no colors in carpets which the light will not seriously affect? If carpets fade by letting the light in, there is another thing that fades by keeping the light out, viz., the human being.

On the shady side of the street, the hospital and prison, cholera, scrofula, billious complaints, and nervous diseases are more frequent and fatal than on the sunny side. We advise everybody to live on the sunny side of their houses. The room in which the family spends most of its time should be on the side where the sun can find its way into it. Let the parlor, if it be seldom used, be on the shady side. We observe that there is not a cottager so ignorant that will not set her plants, if she have taste enough to grow them, in the east window in the morning, and at noon carry them to a south window, and in the afternoon put them in a west window. But perhaps she is careful to keep her children in the shade, and her precious self, so far as possible, out of the rays of the sun. The plants in obedience to natural law are kept healthy, while the children and mother being kept in the shade, suffer in consequence.

Light is beginning to be considered a great curative agent, and we apprehend that the time is not far distant when there will be sun-baths. Corridors with glass roofs will be so adjusted that persons can properly remove their clothing and take a bath in the sun for an hour or two, much to the improvement of their health. The chief advantage of going to the country is to get into the sunshine, and to be in the pure breezes. If we desired merely to keep cool, we should stay in the shady city. People talk of "hot walls" and "burning pavements;" it is much hotter in the country, for the breeze that plays there in mid-day brings only heated air from out-doors. But in the city the breeze brings air in from the shady side of the street, and the lower rooms of a city house are consequently much cooler in mid-day than the exposed houses of the country.

Our soldiers, who were able to bear the labor and fatigue of war, are invigorated by the out-door life they lived. We know a young man in New York who came back from the war and resumed his former occupation of book-keeping, and lost thirty pounds' weight in six weeks. It would do him good to be a farmer.

Parents can do nothing better for their puny sick boys than to put them on a farm for three or four summers and let the sun bathe them the livelong day. They will, by such a life, grow rapidly, and become tough, brawny, and broad. We have seen this tried to the highest advantage in more than one instance under our advice.—Phrenological Journal.

BREATHING THRO' THE MOUTH.

Man seems to be the only animal that is given to this most unphysiological habit. The common habit of sleeping with the mouth open, is often very annoying to those so afflicted, and generally requires quite an effort to break it up. The following notice of some of the effects produced, may induce persons to try and see what can be done by a little resolution and perseverance in overcoming the evil.

Air taken into the lungs through the mouth, produces injurious effects in two ways. Firstly, the lining membrane of the mouth is dried and parched by the absorbing action of the air, and the natural secretion of the parts is arrested, causing much discomfort. Secondly, the air is taken into the lungs in what might be termed a "raw state," thereby causing irritation of the lung membrane by the cold, and also from the action of dust and other injurious substances that are drawn into the pulmonary cells. Probably, nearly every one has noticed the almost painful sensations experienced by rapidly breathing through the mouth large quantities of cold air on a frosty morning. This cold air is invigorating if taken in through the proper passage, and so warmed and tempered before reaching the delicate membrane of the lungs. In the best constructed steam-engines of the present day, the cold water is warmed by the waste heat before it is introduced into the boiler. The same thing is also done in some kinds of iron furnaces; the air which blows the fire is heated before entering the furnace. By these methods, the central mass of fire or water, is more easily kept at the necessary high temperature. The effect of breathing cold air into the lungs without this previous heating which is done in the natural air passages, is to rob the central organs of the respiratory apparatus, of a large amount of heat, and thus chill them below their natural temperature.—Ex.

MEDICAL DRUNKARDS.

Let me say that of all persons who have not yet become drunkards, the most pitiable are they who are drinking intoxicating liquor under medical advice. Others drink it upon their own responsibility, and therefore with more or less caution. But these drink it upon the highest authority, and therefore with no fear of consequences. Other tipplers often restrain their appetite through shame of being seen to indulge it. But these indulge it boldly under the impervious plea that they are but taking medicine. Other tipplers are open to admonition and reformation. But these have infallible doctors to shield them from ignorant admonition, and exempt them from all sense of their need of reformation. In a word, whilst the one, drinking intoxicating liquor without excuse, and therefore against conscience—against that voice of God in the soul—may stop ere it be too late; the other, drinking it for health, and therefore with an approving conscience, will, probably, never stop until life stops. Emphatically true is it that no other tippler is going so surely to the drunkard's grave as the one who lets his doctor lead him to it.—Gerritt Smith.

DRESS AND DISEASE.

There is no truth more firmly established among medical men than that disease follows fashion as much as bonnets do. When thin shoes prevail, consumption is the prevailing epidemic with females in every fashionable community of the country. When low-necked dresses are in the ascendant, sore throat and quinsy are the raging maladies. When bustles and bishops made their appearance, spinal affections became the "ton." The reign of corsets is denoted by collapsed lungs, dyspepsia, and a general derangement of the digestive organs. Indeed, so immediately are dress and disease connected, that a doctor says that all he needs to determine what a majority of the women are dying of, is to have an inventory of their wardrobe handed to him.

EARTH'S DEATH STRUGGLE.

Soon with fitful, wild commotion,
Earth will close her sad career,
All her elements in motion,
What a scene, how dark and drear;
Then the thought—'tis almost here!

See, the heavens gather blackness,
Hark! the dismal thunders roar,
Lightnings gleam amidst the darkness,
Such as ne'er were seen before—
Now the day of mercy's o'er!

See huge stones come down in showers,
Spreading ruin all around,
While with wild terrific glare
Fire and brimstone reach the ground—
Refuge then cannot be found!

Earthquake shocks in hideous clamor
Constantly convulse the land,
While the sea, pent up no longer,
Madly foams without a strand—
Who'll be able then to stand?

O the pestilence, how dreadful,
Worse than cancer does it eat;
See the flesh fall off by handsful,
While they stand upon their feet!
Who can the Most High defeat?

Worse than all, behold the tumult
From the Lord among them now;
Each man's hand against his brother,
Hear them make the horrid vow,—
Oh, the frightful carnage now!

May we not escape such sorrows?
Is there not some safe retreat?
Must we undergo such horrors?
Must we all these judgments meet,
When escape would seem so sweet?

Yes, a hope sweet mercy offers,
While stern justice stays the blow;
God through Christ full freedom proffers,
Free to all who to him go,
Haste, then, sinner, shun such woe.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER ONE.

It may seem superfluous for me to undertake to give a critical exposition of this chapter, after so many brethren of marked ability have written, and correctly in the main, if not altogether. But I am induced by the hope of benefitting the household of faith, to use my feeble pen, hoping, by the assistance of God, that with the vast amount of old things others have brought out, I may be able to add enough of the new to make the subject sufficiently interesting to read again.

The twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew has been truthfully called the Savior's great prophecy. My object in giving an exposition of this prophecy will be,

I. To define its character.

II. To show its natural divisions.

III. To define the events embodied in this chapter, as to their time and order.

1. This prophecy, in character, is consecutive to a great extent, although one portion of it may be looked upon as complete.

A consecutive prophecy is one, the events of which follow in unbroken or successive order.

II. The natural divisions of this chapter are,

1. From the first to the fourteenth verse, covering a period from the time of Christ's public ministry to the end of the dispensation.

2. From the fifteenth to the twenty-eighth verse the subject is somewhat complex.

3. From the twenty-ninth verse to the end of the chapter, we have presented the signs of the near approach of the advent, characteristics of the time of the end, and what the duty of the people of God will be when those signs are developed.

With these preliminary thoughts suggested, we will enter upon our third proposition, which is to define the events of this prophecy.

Commencing, then, with the chapter, we read (vers. 1, 2),—"And Jesus went out and departed from the temple; and his disciples came to him for to show unto him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down."

In the above we have the destruction of the Jewish temple predicted, which led the disciples to ask three questions, recorded in the following verse: "And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?"

It is to be presumed that those who said, "Tell us when shall these things be," had it in their minds that the temple would endure so long as time should last. Hence, when the prediction was made, "There shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down," the disciples who inquired concerning the time of the accomplishment of these things associated the destruction of the temple with the coming of the Lord in judgment, and the end of the world. But the manner in which the Savior answers the above questions, makes them separate and distinct as to the time of their fulfilment.

This discourse opens with a caution against human deception as follows (vers. 4, 5): "And Jesus answered and said unto them, take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name saying I am Christ, and shall deceive many." In the fifth verse we see what the nature of the deception is, coming from a human source, by which so many will be misguided. It is many coming in the name of Jesus of Nazareth, saying, "I am Christ."

It is generally claimed that this prediction of many false Christs had its fulfilment between the middle of the second century and the beginning of the sixteenth. Buck, in his Theological Dictionary, enumerates twenty-four as having appeared between those two points, at different times, and led away many of the Jewish people after them. But the false Messiahs, appearing to the Jews, could not fulfill the Savior's prediction, for the following reasons:

1. Christ is specially cautioning his church against deception.

2. The followers of Jesus have never stood affected by the false pretensions of those who have appeared to the Jewish people.

3. Twenty-four cannot by any consistent method of reasoning be called many.

4. The false Messiahs came in their own name, entirely ignoring the Prophet of Nazareth; whereas, Jesus said to his people, that many should come to them saying, I am Christ. Or, according to the version of an English author, which I apprehend expresses in clearer light the sentiment of the text, "Many shall come in my name saying, I am for or instead of Christ, and shall deceive many."

With this view the text has had a most remarkable fulfillment right in the professed christian church. Many have indeed come to the congregation bearing the name of Christ, and saying I am for and instead of Christ, arrogating names, titles, and a work which alone belong to the Son of God. The extended catalogue of supreme pontiffs who have filled the Roman See, have all in their turn claimed to be Christ's Vicegerent, or Vice Christ; that is, one for, or instead of, Christ.

Again, the Roman church recognizes a human mediatorship, and a power vested in man to expiate transgression. Its confessors claim that they have power to grant absolution to the penitent, for, and instead of, Christ, or as his divinely appointed agent. But the gospel reveals the fact that Christ is the the only head of the church, and the only mediator of the New Testament, and the sole intercessor between God and man, "The man Christ Jesus."

Oh, what a deception has been the great Western Apostasy. How many blind votaries of christened idolatry, or papal superstition, have for the last thirteen hundred years come bending at the shrine of the image of the Virgin, and committed their souls to human hands. Every functionary in the Romish church, from the pope down to the humblest friar, claims to stand instead of Christ, as mediator to the church on earth, and thus the abomination of desolation stands in the holy place. And have there not been many who have claimed to occupy the before named relationship of mediator to the Christian church? and have not many been deceived? If so, the prophecy has met with a fulfillment in those false mediators, which we cannot possibly find in the false Messiahs of which Buck speaks as having appeared in every instance to the apostate Jews between the middle of the second and beginning of the sixteenth centuries.

The next events predicted by the Savior are recorded in verses 6, 7: "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. See that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass; but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famines and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places." The sixth verse must have had its fulfillment in the barbarian incursions from the North.

Alaric, with his hordes of warriors, swept in like a storm of fire and hail about the last of the fourth century, desolating Gaul, causing the seat of empire to be removed from Rome to Bavaria, and the sacking of the city of the Czars; and this was followed by the naval wars of the Vandals, under Genececic, who, under the symbolic representation of a burning mountain cast into the sea, took Carthage, ravaged the Mediterranean shores, and destroyed the Roman fleet at Majorian; and all this was followed by the aggressive wars of Atilla, the king of the Huns, and of Odoacer, king of the Ostrogoths, who succeeded in extinguishing the imperial government in the West. "Nation against nation," etc., seems to have had its fulfilment subsequent to the breaking up of the Roman empire, when the barbarians established themselves as distinct kingdoms upon its ruins.

In this particular prediction of nation against nation, there is something peculiarly striking. For Jesus says when such things occur the end is not yet. And still, in various other portions of the prophecy, we are plainly taught that the last part of the gospel age is to be signalized by wars and agitations among the nations of earth. But it is plain from the reading of the above, that the difference between the wars realized subsequent to the breaking up of the Roman empire, and those which are to designate the time of the end, is to be seen in this respect. Nation against nation implies wars of an aggressive nature; while those which will cause men's hearts to fail them for fear and for looking after those things coming on the earth, to be realized in the last end of time, will be of a domestic or civil character.

"And there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places." I understand this to have had its fulfillment in the reign of the Emperor Justin, of Constantinople, as may be seen by the following quotation from Gibbon. In the concluding part of the forty-third chapter of his "Decline and Fall, he says:

"The near approach of a comet may injure or destroy the globe which we inhabit; but the changes on its surface have been hitherto produced by the action of volcanoes and earthquakes. The nature of the soil may indicate the countries most exposed to these formidable concussions, since they are caused by subterranean fires, and such fires are kindled by the union and fermentation of iron and sulphur. But their times and effects appear to lie beyond the reach of human curiosity; and the philosopher will discreetly abstain from the prediction of earthquakes till he has counted the drops of water that silently filtrate on the inflammable mineral, and measured the caverns which increase by the explosion of the imprisoned air.

Without assigning the cause, history will distinguish the periods in which these calamitous events have been rare or frequent, and will observe that this fever of the earth raged with uncommon violence during the reign of Justinian. Each year is marked by the repitition of earthquakes of such duration that Constantinople has been shaken above forty days, of such extent that the shock has been communicated to the whole surface of the globe, or at least of the Roman empire. An impulsive or vibratory motion was felt, enormous chasms were opened, huge and heavy bodies were discharged into the air, the sea alternately advanced and retreated beyond its ordinary bounds, and a mountain was torn from Libanus and cast into the waves, where it protected as a mole the new harbor of Botrys in Phœnicia. . . . Two hundred and fifty persons are said to have perished in the earthquake of Antioch, whose domestic multitude was swelled by the conflux of strangers to the festival of the Ascension."

Again, the same author, in speaking of the pestilences which characterized the reign of Justinian, says:

"Ethiopia and Egypt have been stigmatized in every age as the original source and seminary of the plague. In a damp, hot, stagnating air, this African fever is generated from the putrefaction of animal substances, and especially from the swarms of locusts, not less destructive to mankind in their death than in their lives.

The fatal disease which depopulated the earth in the time of Justinian and his successors, first appeared in the neighbordood of the Pelusium, between the Serbonian bog and the eastern channel of the Nile. From thence, tracing as it were a double path, it spread to the East, over Syria, Persia, and the Indies, and penetrated to the West, along the coast of Africa, and over the continent of Europe. In the spring of the second year, Constantinople, during three or four months, was visited by the pestilence; and Procopius, who observed its progress and symptoms with the eyes of a physician, has emulated the skill and diligence of Thucydides, in the description of the plague of Athens. The infection was sometimes announced by the visions of a distempered fancy, and the victim despaired as soon as he had the menace and felt the stroke of an invisible spectre. But the greater number, in their beds, in the streets, in their usual occupation, were surprised by a slight fever; so slight, indeed, that neither the pulse nor the color of the patient gave any signs of approaching danger. The same, the next, or the succeeding day, it was declared by the swelling of the glands, particuly those of the groin, of the armpits, and under the ears; and when these buboes or tumors were opened, they were found to contain a coal, or black substance, of the size of a lentil. If the tumor came to a just swelling and suppuration, the patient was saved by this kind and natural discharge of the morbid humor. But if they continued hard and dry, a mortification quickly ensued, and the fifth day was commonly the term of his life. The fever was often accompanied with lethargy or delirium; the bodies of the sick were covered with black pustules, or carbuncles, the symptoms of immediate death, and in the constitutions too feeble to produce an irruption, the vomiting of blood was followed by a mortification of the bowels. . . . Youth was the most perilous season; the female sex was less susceptible than the male; but every rank and profession was attacked with indiscriminate rage, and many of those who escaped were deprived of their speech, without being secure from a return of the disorder.

The physicians of Constantinople were zealous and skillful; but their art was baffled by the various symptoms and pertinacious vehemence of the disease: the same remedies were productive of contrary effects, and the events capriciously disappointed their prognostics of death or recovery.

The order of funerals, and the right of sepulchres were confounded: those who were left without friends or servants lay unburied in the streets, or in their desolate houses, and a magistrate was authorized to collect the promiscuous heaps of dead bodies, to transport them by land or water, and to inter them in deep pits beyond the precincts of the city.

Their own danger, and the prospect of public distress awakened some rumors in the minds of the most vicious of mankind; the confidence of health again revived their passions and habits; but philosophy must disdain the observation of Procopius, that the lives of such men were guarded by the peculiar favor of fortune or Providence. He forgot, or perhaps he secretly recollected, that the plague had touched the person of Justinian himself; but the abstemious diet of the emperor may suggest, as in the case of Socrates, a more rational and honorable cause for his recovery. During his sickness, the public consternation was expressed in the habits of the citizens; and thus idleness and despondency occasioned a general scarcity in the capital of the East.

Contagion is the inseparable symptom of plague, which by mutual respiration is transferred from the infected persons to the lungs and stomach of those who approach them. While philosophers believe and tremble, it is singular that the existence of a real danger should have been denied by a people most prone to vain and imaginary terrors. Yet the fellow citizens of Procopius were satisfied, by some short and partial experience, that the infection could not be gained by the closest conversation; and this persuasion might support the assiduity of friends and physicians in the care of the sick, whom inhuman prudence would have condemned to solitude and despair.

But the fatal security, like the predestination of the Turks, must have aided the progress of the contagion; and those salutary precautions, to which Europe is indebted for her safety, were unknown to the government of Justinian.

No restraints were imposed on the free and frequent intercourse of the Roman provinces; from Persia to France the nations were mingled and infected by wars and emigrations, and the pestilential odor which lurks for years in a bale of cotton, was imported by the abuse of trade into the most distant regions.

The mode of its propagation is explained by the remark of Procopius himself, that it always spread from the sea-coast to the inland country; the most sequestered islands and mountains were successively visited; the places which had escaped the fury of its first passage were alone exposed to the contagion of the ensuing year.

The wind might diffuse that subtle venom; but unless the atmosphere be previously disposed for its reception, the plague would soon expire in the cold or temperate climates of the earth.

Such was the universal corruption of the air, that the pestilence which burst forth in the fifteenth year of Justinian was not checked or alleviated by any difference of the seasons. In time, its first malignity was abated and dispersed; the disease alternately languished; but it was not till the end of a calamitous period of fifty-two years that mankind recovered their health, or the air resumed its pure and salubrious quality. No facts have been preserved to sustain an account, or even a conjecture of the numbers that perished in this extraordinary mortality. I only find that for months, five, and at length ten thousand persons died each day in Constantinople; that many cities of the East were left vacant, and that in several districts of Italy the harvest and the vintage withered on the ground. The triple scourge of war, pestilence and famine afflicted the subjects of Justinian, and his reign is disgraced by a visible disease of the human species, which has never been repaired in some of the fairest countries of the globe."

It appears to me that there cannot be found a more striking fulfillment of Christ's prophecy of pestilence and earthquake, than what is furnished in the foregoing extract from Gibbon. A. ROSS.

For the World's Crisis.

THE EARTH THE HOME OF THE SAINTS.

We can prove it by the word of God. And why a single doubt should linger in the mind of any in regard to so comprehensive a subject, is more than the writer of this is able to account for. And yet there are thousands, even in this "age of gospel light and religious liberty," who not only entertain doubts, but repudiate the idea. They have been taught by their fathers that such a doctrine was "fallacious," and are willing to adhere to their "say so," rather than to investigate the matter for themselves. So, on the whole, we attribute it more to willing than to wilful ignorance.

By Heb. 9: 15, we learn that the "called" according to the prophecy of God, have the promise of "an eternal inheritance." In Gal. 8: 16, we read,—"Now to Abraham and his seed (which the apostle informs us in the same verse is Christ), were the promises made." Here is not only a promise brought to view, but promises—implying more than one; but that the promise of the inheritance is included is evident from the eighteenth verse: "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise."

So Abraham and Christ have the promise of an eternal inheritance—not according to modern theology, but "according to the apostle Paul." And in verse twenty-nine he says: "If ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." So you see, dear reader, you and I, if we are Christ's, are "heirs of an eternal inheritance," also.

In Rom. 4: 13, we learn where this inheritance is located: "For the promise that he should be heir of (heaven?) the world (kosmos, earth) was not to Abraham, or his seed (Christ), through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." It must be obvious to all intelligent minds that the foregoing connected links of divine testimony teach us beyond all cavil, "that Abraham and his seed through Christ Jesus, have the promise of this earth for an eternal inheritance."

Some people think the idea a preposterous one, that the saints should ever inherit the earth; but what do we know about the future, except what we read? And if the Word teaches that the saints are going to inherit the earth, who is going to controvert it? We think the earth was good enough for man's inheritance before the curse was stamped upon it; and if, as all must admit, "it was his adherence to Satanic falsehood which brought the curse upon the earth," when the seed of the woman bruises the head of the old arch demon, will it not restore this planet to its pristine beauty, and redeem it from the curse?

In Luke 19: 10, we read: "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." We know that God made man a happy being, and gave him "dominion over the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fish of the sea, and over the whole earth." See Gen. 1: 28. We also know that "that dominion was lost." In Micah 4: 8, Christ has the promise of the first dominion. We read of no dominion prior to that given to Adam. Will Christ ever receive that? If any one should have any misgivings in regard to the matter, let them turn with me to David's language in the 8th Psalm, and to Paul's application of it in Heb. 2d, and such misgivings will cease to perplex his mind. David says: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels (remember, Christ took not on the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham), and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou hast made him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet: all sheep and oxen; yea, and the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea."

Is not this precisely the dominion given to Adam? But Paul quotes this language of David, and applies it to "Christ, in the world (oikoumenen, habitable earth) to come." He says: "But unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak;" and then referring to David's language, in the 8th Psalm, and quoting it almost verbatim, adds: "But now we see not yet (in this dispensation), all things (spoken of by David) put under him," but will in the world to come, whereof we are speaking.

Dear reader, you cannot fail to see that Christ is to receive the first dominion—the identical one given to Adam—"in the world to come." But before Adam transgressed the righteous law of God, and lost his dominion, "the beasts of the field, which now prowl in the wilderness, seeking to devour each other, lay subordinate and submissive at his feet." Even thus it will be in the world to come, under the dominion of "the second Adam"—Christ; for even thus the holy prophet hath predicted: "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; the calf and the young lion, and the fattling together, and the little child shall lead them."—Isa. 11: 6.

In those days of primeval innocence, when man talked face to face with his Creator, and inhaled the spicy breezes which waved the mellow fruits of life's fair tree, the "thorn" and "thistle" which now infest the fields, had no place in all that vast domain. . . . Neither will they have in the bright world to come. They are a mark of the curse. The Almighty said to Adam, after he had transgressed his law: "Cursed is the ground for your sake: thorns and thistles shall it bring forth," etc.; but the prophet, contemplating its restitution, says: "Instead of the thorn shall come the fir tree; and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be unto the Lord for a name, and for an everlasting sign, which shall not be cut off."—Isa. 55: 13.

So it will be seen that the "blighting robe of curse which now envelops the earth," will be entirely withdrawn. No shadow of its ghostly form will ever more be seen. And how, it may be asked, is all this great change brought about? We answer, "Through the atoning blood of Christ." It may appear strange to some that the crimson blood, which dyed the soil of Calvary's brow, should effect this earth; but, strange as it may appear, we think it is susceptible of proof.

Christ, in the parable of "a treasure hid in a field," beautifully illustrates the plan of redeeming this rebellious planet: "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a treasure hid in a field, the which, when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth the field." Matt. 13: 44. The kingdom of heaven, like all other kingdoms, in order to exist, must be composed of at least four "parts," or "elements." These "parts," or "elements," we think are all brought to view in this chapter, under different metaphors, or parables; and as Christ declares, in verse thirty-eight, that the field is the world (kosmos, earth; the same promised to Abraham), the element brought to view in the foregoing parable must be "the subjects," the "SAINTS OF GOD," as they, and they alone, can be said to be "hid in the . . . earth." The saints are literally hid (buried) in the earth; and Christ saw them as a treasure, and selling all that he had, even his last drop of blood, that he might make sure of the treasure, "purchased the field which contained it."

And Paul tells us in Eph. 1: 12, 13, that we are even now sealed "by the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest (foretaste) of our inheritance, UNTIL the redemption of the PURCHASED POSSESSION." We have a "foretaste of the glory which is to be revealed unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ;" yea, we have "tasted the good word, and the powers of the world to come," and soon we shall receive the full reward of our labors, in the kingdom of God—"the purchased possession."

But this is not all the evidence we have that the earth is to be the home of the saints. God has declared it by the mouth of his holy prophets, in language so explicit that none need be mistaken; and even Christ himself vindicated the same truth. In Matt. 5: 5, he says, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall INHERIT THE EARTH." He does not say, "they do inherit it"; nay, many of them have not where to lay their head in this life; but they shall, in future, "inherit the earth." The meek! Moses was a very meek man, therefore he will inherit the earth; then if orthodoxy succeeds in getting away to some unknown clime, they will lose the society of meek old Moses. Give me the society of Moses and Abraham and all the holy prophets, together with the Son of God, on a renewed and redeemed earth, and you are welcome to your Elysian fields afar off, and all you can get there with you.

This language of Christ only corroborates the testimony of David, in the 8th Psalm. At the 9th verse he says: "For evil doers shall be cut off; but they that wait upon the Lord they shall INHERIT THE EARTH." Evil doers are not cut off yet, nor will they be till the Lord comes; but on the contrary, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse," until that event; then they shall be cut off, and they that wait upon the Lord "shall inherit the earth." 11th verse: "But the meek shall INHERIT THE EARTH, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Is this true of the meek in this life? Do they delight themselves in the abundance of peace? Answer, ye who can. At the 18th verse he says, "The Lord knoweth the days of the upright, that their inheritance shall be forever." 22d,—"For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and such as be cursed of him shall be cut off." 29th,—"The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever." 34th,—"Wait upon the Lord, and keep his way (not your own), and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land."

We think the foregoing ought to convince any one, even the most skeptical, that this planet is destined to be the eternal abode of the saints; but line upon line, and precept upon precept is needed now-a-days, to convince people (and then they are not convinced) of, not only this, but any truth which seems to clash with preconceived opinions. Therefore we will add the testimony of one whose wisdom once attracted the attention of a foreign queen, but would, no doubt, if living in this age of divine knowledge, be branded as a fanatic or something worse. "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it."—Prov. 2: 21, 22. "Behold, the righteous SHALL NEVER BE REMOVED; but the wicked SHALL NOT INHABIT THE EARTH."—Prov. 10: 30. Behold, the righteous shall be RECOMPENSED IN THE EARTH; much more the WICKED AND THE SINNER."—Prov. 11: 31.

This last quotation shows that the whole human family are to receive their recompense in the earth; and Christ says (Luke 14: 13) that the righteous are recompensed "at the resurrection of the just." Therefore they are to dwell in the earth, in their resurrected state. But if the wicked are recompensed in the earth, as Solomon declares in ch. 18: 30, "They shall not inhabit it"; and in chap. 2: 23,—"They shall be rooted out of it," we leave the advocates of endless woe to say what is to become of them. If they have any perplexity, however, in finding an answer, we will refer them to Malachi, who flourished as a writer nearly four hundred years before Christ. His writings are preserved, and may be found in the last part of the Old Testament: "For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

As "the wages of sin is death (Rom. 6: 22), we think the wicked can receive their reward in the earth, and at the same time be "cut off from it," be "rooted out of it," and "not inhabit it"; but if it were "endless woe," we could not conceive the place of their habitation. Let us be prepared to avert their awful doom. J. W. TAYLOR.

MANNER OF CHRIST'S COMING.

The manner of the coming of the Lord is thus described in Scripture. When Jesus returns to earth, a grand retinue of angels forms his escort from his Father's throne to a locality in the heavens, termed by Isaiah, the "chamber" (ch. 26: 20); by Paul, "the air" (1 Thess. 4: 17); by John, the "sea of glass" (Rev. 15: 2), as is evident from Matt. 16: 27: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels," etc. So, also, ch. 25: 31, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." At this point in the celestial journey a delegation, comprising the saints of all ages, meets the King of Glory, and the second stage of the journey is made with the glorified saints as a retinue. See Zach. 14: 5;—"And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee."

When King Immanuel comes to reign, he will not come alone, nor unattended. We can form no conception of the coronation glories when Messiah is invested with dominion under the whole heaven. All the holy angels escort him to some locality in the empyrean, where the flame-colored crystal—"the sea of glass mingled with fire"—is located. The transition from the Father's throne to this gemmed crystalline expanse, in the deep æther, is made without being known to the inhabitants of earth. His ministering angels gather to this Crystal Palace all the "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty," "his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other," to receive their crowns of glory, and robes of honor and beauty, preparatory to sharing kingly and priestly dignities with Jesus in God's kingdom. This gathering, too, is made unknown to the careless, ungodly world.

So far Jesus "comes as a thief": yes, while the ungodly are working, and heartless professors joining in scoffing at the advent and its kindred doctrines, Jesus has silently, unobservedly, come to mid-heaven and gathered his saints—two are in the field, one is taken and the other left—two are in one bed, one is taken and the other left—two women are at the mill, one is taken and the other left. Gone, like Enoch from the antediluvian world, and like Elijah from wicked Israel.

From the grave, too, all the jewels are rifled. The treasures are taken from those dark, secret safes, as some saints were taken when the Lord arose; and foolish virgins, cold professors, and an ungodly world, first became aware of the change, by the absence of "the pure, the good, and the holy." The heralds of the advent no more proclaim "the Coming One." The little broken bands that loved the theme of the Lord's appearing are mysteriously gone. Some mouldering heaps in the "green grassy grave-yards," where past generations have lain down, bear witness that buried treasures have been unearthed, and all these arrayed in white robes come up to share with Jesus in his triumph. After receiving their crowns and royal and priestly appointments for the "world to come," the apostles receive the thrones of Israel, and other honored ones receive authority over ten cities, and five, as the case may be, and the last stages of the advent journey are made.

"The Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." "The Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee." Olivet cleaves asunder as the once-pierced feet light upon it. From the sea of glass to Olivet is the open, visible stage of the journey of the King of kings, when every eye sees him. Thence from Olivet to Zion. And how different from the scenes when Jesus was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." The agonies of a world's redemption once pressed Jesus here. Now an eternal weight of glory rests upon earth's royal king.

To conclude this hasty outline, the coming of the Lord seems thus arranged: From the Father's throne to a locality in the deep aerial, attended by the angels only; here all the saints meet him, and the cabinet of God's kingdom is organized; from the aerial he comes to Olivet (and some mysterious passages, like Isaiah 63: 1, and Habakkuk 3: 3, and others, show that his journey is made by Sinai, Paran, Edom, and Bozrah, destroying his enemies in his way. See, also, Rev. 19: 20, 21; Ezra 38: 22, and others), when the great physical convulsion of Zach. 14: 4–8, take place; thence to Zion, where he is seated on David's throne to reign forever. Rest finally comes to poor, groaning creation, and an oppressed world enjoys righteous rule at last. This coming is a proximate event. Man has long ruled the world with an oppressive sceptre; but the successions of earthly dynasties have nearly run their course. The long periods are nearing a termination, and the signs have specially been displayed for the warning, of this now-passing generation.—Prophetic Times.

"IS COMING UP."

What is coming up? "The cause of Christ is coming up." Where? "In Hoosick, N. Y." Who said so? "Eld. Charles E. Piper and other ministers of the gospel, who have labored within the last few weeks acceptably in this place, in the word and doctrine. They were convinced from what their eyes saw, their ears heard, and what the Spirit of God whispered in their hearts, that the church was getting up on higher ground; was waking out of sleep, and putting on the armor of God, that they may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

This is truth, and I write it to encourage some who have assisted in sowing the good seed here, in other days, who may have been somewhat discouraged about us; while iniquity did abound, and the love of many waxed cold, and might almost be ready to say that their labor had been in vain in the Lord; and to strengthen some other portions of the scattered flock, who are still trying to be righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, as did Zacharias and Elizabeth (Luke 1: 6), but are opposed in every step of progress (as we have been in this place) by cold-hearted professors of religion, "the world, the flesh, and the devil," and are also trying to hold up to view that blessed hope spoken of by Paul (Titus 2: 13), and contending earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints, under discouraging circumstances.

Yes, to such I would say, in the language of an inspired apostle (Gal. 6: 9), "Let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." How truly that has proved in our case. God has added, from time to time, unto this church, "such as should be saved." One good substantial pillar, within a few days, has joined us, and two or three more expect to do so at the earliest opportunity. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."—1 Cor. 15: 58. JACOB WILBUR.

CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Did a holy life consist of one or two noble deeds—some signal specimens of doing, or enduring, or suffering—we might account for the failure, and reckon it a small dishonor to turn back in such a conflict. But a holy life is made up of a multitude of small things. It is the little things of the hour, and not the great things of the age, that fill up a life like that of Paul and John, like that of Rutherford, or Brainerd, or Martyn. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles nor battles, nor one great heroic act or mighty martyrdom, make up the true christian life. The little constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Siloah, "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not the "waters of the river great and mighty," rushing down in torrent noise and force, are the true symbols of a holy life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, little indulgences of self and of the flesh, little acts of indolence or indecision, or slovenliness, or cowardice, little equivocations or aberrations from high integrity, little touches of shabbiness and meanness, little bits of covetousness and penuriousness, little exhibitions of worldliness and gaiety, little indifferences to the feelings or wishes of others, little outbreaks of temper, or crossness, or selfishness, or vanity; the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up at least the negative beauty of a holy life. And then attention to the little duties of the day and hour, in public transactions, or private dealings, or family arrangements; to little words, and tones; little benevolences, or forbearances, or tenderness; little self-denials, and self-restraints, and self-forgetfulnesses; little plans of quiet kindness and thoughtful consideration for others; to punctuality, and method, and true aim, in the ordering of each day—these are the active developments of a holy life, the rich and divine mosaics of which it is composed. What makes yon green hill so beautiful? Not the outstanding peak or stately elm, but the bright sward which clothes its slopes, composed of innumerable blades of slender grass. It is of small things that a great life is made up; and he who will acknowledge no life as great save that which is built up of great things, will find little in Bible characters to admire or copy.—Bonar.

EARTH'S DEATH STRUGGLE.

Soon with fitful, wild commotion,
Earth will close her sad career,
All her elements in motion,
What a scene; how dark and drear;
Then the thought—'tis almost here!

See, the heavens gather blackness,
Hark! the dismal thunders roar,
Lightnings gleam amidst the darkness,
Such as ne'er were seen before—
Now the day of mercy's o'er!

See huge stones come down in showers,
Spreading ruin all around,
While with wild terrific glare
Fire and brimstone reach the ground—
Refuge then cannot be found!

Earthquake shocks in hideous clamor
Constantly convulse the land,
While the sea, pent up no longer,
Madly foams without a strand—
Who'll be able then to stand?

O the pestilence, how dreadful,
Worse than cancer does it eat;
See the flesh fall off by handsful,
While they stand upon their feet!
Who can the Most High defeat?

Worse than all, behold the tumult
From the Lord among them now;
Each man's hand against his brother,
Hear them make the horrid vow,—
Oh, the frightful carnage now!

May we not escape such sorrows?
Is there not some safe retreat?
Must we undergo such horrors?
Must we all these judgments meet,
When escape would seem so sweet?

Yes, a hope sweet mercy offers,
While stern justice stays the blow;
God through Christ full freedom proffers,
Free to all who to him go;
Haste, then, sinner, shun such woe.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER ONE.

It may seem superfluous for me to undertake to give a critical exposition of this chapter, after so many brethren of marked ability have written, and correctly in the main, if not altogether. But I am induced by the hope of benefitting the household of faith, to use my feeble pen, hoping, by the assistance of God, that with the vast amount of old things others have brought out, I may be able to add enough of the new to make the subject sufficiently interesting to read again.

The twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew has been truthfully called the Savior's great prophecy. My object in giving an exposition of this prophecy will be,

I. To define its character.

II. To show its natural divisions.

III. To define the events embodied in this chapter, as to their time and order.

I. This prophecy, in character, is consecuto a great extent, although one portion of it may be looked upon as complete.

A consecutive prophecy is one, the events of which follow in unbroken or successive order.

II. The natural divisions of this chapter are,

1. From the first to the fourteenth verse, covering a period from the time of Christ's public ministry to the end of the dispensation.

2. From the fifteenth to the twenty-eighth verse the subject is somewhat complex.

3. From the twenty-ninth verse to the end of the chapter, we have presented the signs of the near approach of the advent, characteristics of the time of the end, and what the duty of the people of God will be when those signs are developed.

With these preliminary thoughts suggested, we will enter upon our third proposition, which is to define the events of this prophecy.

Commencing, then, with the chapter, we read (vers. 1, 2),—"And Jesus went out and departed from the temple; and his disciples came to him for to show unto him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down."

In the above we have the destruction of the Jewish temple predicted, which led the disciples to ask three questions, recorded in the following verse: "And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?"

It is to be presumed that those who said, "Tell us when shall these things be," had it in their minds that the temple would endure so long as time should last. Hence, when the prediction was made, "There shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down," the disciples who inquired concerning the time of the accomplishment of these things associated the destruction of the temple with the coming of the Lord in judgment, and the end of the world. But the manner in which the Savior answers the above questions, makes them separate and distinct as to the time of their fulfilment.

This discourse opens with a caution against human deception as follows (vers. 4, 5): "And Jesus answered and said unto them, take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name saying I am Christ, and shall deceive many." In the fifth verse we see what the nature of the deception is, coming from a human source, by which so many will be misguided. It is many coming in the name of Jesus of Nazareth, saying, "I am Christ."

It is generally claimed that this prediction of many false Christs had its fulfilment between the middle of the second century and the beginning of the sixteenth. Buck, in his Theological Dictionary, enumerates twenty-four as having appeared between those two points, at different times, and led away many of the Jewish people after them. But the false Messiahs, appearing to the Jews, could not fulfill the Savior's prediction, for the following reasons:

1. Christ is specially cautioning his church against deception.

2. The followers of Jesus have never stood affected by the false pretensions of those who have appeared to the Jewish people.

3. Twenty-four cannot by any consistent method of reasoning be called many.

4. The false Messiahs came in their own name, entirely ignoring the Prophet of Nazareth; whereas, Jesus said to his people, that many should come to them saying, I am Christ. Or, according to the version of an English author, which I apprehend expresses in clearer light the sentiment of the text, "Many shall come in my name saying, I am for or instead of Christ, and shall deceive many."

With this view the text has had a most remarkable fulfillment right in the professed christian church. Many have indeed come to the congregation bearing the name of Christ, and saying I am for and instead of Christ, arrogating names, titles, and a work which alone belong to the Son of God. The extended catalogue of supreme pontiffs who have filled the Roman See, have all in their turn claimed to be Christ's Vicegerent, or Vice Christ; that is, one for, or instead of, Christ.

Again, the Roman church recognizes a human mediatorship, and a power vested in man to expiate transgression. Its confessors claim that they have power to grant absolution to the penitent, for, and instead of, Christ, or as his divinely appointed agent. But the gospel reveals the fact that Christ is the the only head of the church, and the only mediator of the New Testament, and the sole intercessor between God and man, "The man Christ Jesus."

Oh, what a deception has been the great Western Apostasy. How many blind votaries of christened idolatry, or papal superstition, have for the last thirteen hundred years come bending at the shrine of the image of the Virgin, and committed their souls to human hands. Every functionary in the Romish church, from the pope down to the humblest friar, claims to stand instead of Christ, as mediator to the church on earth, and thus the abomination of desolation stands in the holy place. And have there not been many who have claimed to occupy the before named relationship of mediator to the Christian church? and have not many been deceived? If so, the prophecy has met with a fulfillment in those false mediators, which we cannot possibly find in the false Messiahs of which Buck speaks as having appeared in every instance to the apostate Jews between the middle of the second and beginning of the sixteenth centuries.

The next events predicted by the Savior are recorded in verses 6, 7: "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. See that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass; but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famines and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places." The sixth verse must have had its fulfillment in the barbarian incursions from the North.

Alaric, with his hordes of warriors, swept in like a storm of fire and hail about the last of the fourth century, desolating Gaul, causing the seat of empire to be removed from Rome to Bavaria, and the sacking of the city of the Czars; and this was followed by the naval wars of the Vandals, under Geneceric, who, under the symbolic representation of a burning mountain cast into the sea, took Carthage, ravaged the Mediterranean shores, and destroyed the Roman fleet at Majorian; and all this was followed by the aggressive wars of Atilla, the king of the Huns, and of Odoacer, king of the Ostrogoths, who succeeded in extinguishing the imperial government in the West. "Nation against nation," etc., seems to have had its fulfilment subsequent to the breaking up of the Roman empire, when the barbarians established themselves as distinct kingdoms upon its ruins.

In this particular prediction of nation against nation, there is something peculiarly striking. For Jesus says when such things occur the end is not yet. And still, in various other portions of the prophecy, we are plainly taught that the last part of the gospel age is to be signalized by wars and agitations among the nations of earth. But it is plain from the reading of the above, that the difference between the wars realized subsequent to the breaking up of the Roman empire, and those which are to designate the time of the end, is to be seen in this respect. Nation against nation implies wars of an aggressive nature; while those which will cause men's hearts to fail them for fear and for looking after those things coming on the earth, to be realized in the last end of time, will be of a domestic or civil character.

"And there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places." I understand this to have had its fulfillment in the reign of the Emperor Justin, of Constantinople, as may be seen by the following quotation from Gibbon. In the concluding part of the forty-third chapter of his "Decline and Fall, he says:

"The near approach of a comet may injure or destroy the globe which we inhabit; but the changes on its surface have been hitherto produced by the action of volcanoes and earthquakes. The nature of the soil may indicate the countries most exposed to these formidable concussions, since they are caused by subterranean fires, and such fires are kindled by the union and fermentation of iron and sulphur. But their times and effects appear to lie beyond the reach of human curiosity; and the philosopher will discreetly abstain from the prediction of earthquakes till he has counted the drops of water that silently filtrate on the inflammable mineral, and measured the caverns which increase by the explosion of the imprisoned air.

Without assigning the cause, history will distinguish the periods in which these calamitous events have been rare or frequent, and will observe that this fever of the earth raged with uncommon violence during the reign of Justinian. Each year is marked by the repitition of earthquakes of such duration that Constantinople has been shaken above forty days; of such extent that the shock has been communicated to the whole surface of the globe, or at least of the Roman empire. An impulsive or vibratory motion was felt, enormous chasms were opened, huge and heavy bodies were discharged into the air, the sea alternately advanced and retreated beyond its ordinary bounds, and a mountain was torn from Libanus and cast into the waves, where it protected as a mole the new harbor of Botrys in Phœnicia. . . . Two hundred and fifty persons are said to have perished in the earthquake of Antioch, whose domestic multitude was swelled by the conflux of strangers to the festival of the Ascension."

Again, the same author, in speaking of the pestilences which characterized the reign of Justinian, says:

"Ethiopia and Egypt have been stigmatized in every age as the original source and seminary of the plague. In a damp, hot, stagnating air, this African fever is generated from the putrefaction of animal substances, and especially from the swarms of locusts, not less destructive to mankind in their death than in their lives.

The fatal disease which depopulated the earth in the time of Justinian and his successors, first appeared in the neighborhood of the Pelusium, between the Serbonian bog and the eastern channel of the Nile. From thence, tracing as it were a double path, it spread to the East, over Syria, Persia, and the Indies, and penetrated to the West, along the coast of Africa, and over the continent of Europe. In the spring of the second year, Constantinople, during three or four months, was visited by the pestilence; and Procopius, who observed its progress and symptoms with the eyes of a physician, has emulated the skill and diligence of Thucydides, in the description of the plague of Athens. The infection was sometimes announced by the visions of a distempered fancy, and the victim despaired as soon as he had the menace and felt the stroke of an invisible spectre. But the greater number, in their beds, in the streets, in their usual occupation, were surprised by a slight fever: so slight, indeed, that neither the pulse nor the color of the patient gave any signs of approaching danger. The same, the next, or the succeeding day, it was declared by the swelling of the glands, particuly those of the groin, of the armpits, and under the ears; and when these buboes or tumors were opened, they were found to contain a coal, or black substance, of the size of a lentil. If the tumor came to a just swelling and suppuration, the patient was saved by this kind and natural discharge of the morbid humor. But if they continued hard and dry, a mortification quickly ensued, and the fifth day was commonly the term of his life. The fever was often accompanied with lethargy or delirium; the bodies of the sick were covered with black pustules, or carbuncles, the symptoms of immediate death, and in the constitutions too feeble to produce an irruption, the vomiting of blood was followed by a mortification of the bowels. . . . Youth was the most perilous season; the female sex was less susceptible than the male; but every rank and profession was attacked with indiscriminate rage, and many of those who escaped were deprived of their speech, without being secure from a return of the disorder.

The physicians of Constantinople were zealous and skillful; but their art was baffled by the various symptoms and pertinacious vehemence of the disease: the same remedies were productive of contrary effects, and the events capriciously disappointed their prognostics of death or recovery.

The order of funerals, and the right of sepulchres were confounded: those who were left without friends or servants lay unburied in the streets, or in their desolate houses, and a magistrate was authorized to collect the promiscuous heaps of dead bodies, to transport them by land or water, and to inter them in deep pits beyond the precincts of the city.

Their own danger, and the prospect of public distress awakened some rumors in the minds of the most vicious of mankind; the confidence of health again revived their passions and habits; but philosophy must disdain the observation of Procopius, that the lives of such men were guarded by the peculiar favor of fortune or Providence. He forgot, or perhaps he secretly recollected, that the plague had touched the person of Justinian himself; but the abstemious diet of the emperor may suggest, as in the case of Socrates, a more rational and honorable cause for his recovery. During his sickness, the public consternation was expressed in the habits of the citizens; and thus idleness and despondency occasioned a general scarcity in the capital of the East.

Contagion is the inseparable symptom of plague, which by mutual respiration is transferred from the infected persons to the lungs and stomach of those who approach them. While philosophers believe and tremble, it is singular that the existence of a real danger should have been denied by a people most prone to vain and imaginary terrors. Yet the fellow citizens of Procopius were satisfied, by some short and partial experience, that the infection could not be gained by the closest conversation; and this persuasion might support the assiduity of friends and physicians in the care of the sick, whom inhuman prudence would have condemned to solitude and despair.

But the fatal security, like the predestination of the Turks, must have aided the progress of the contagion; and those salutary precautions, to which Europe is indebted for her safety, were unknown to the government of Justinian.

No restraints were imposed on the free and frequent intercourse of the Roman provinces; from Persia to France the nations were mingled and infected by wars and emigrations, and the pestilential odor which lurks for years in a bale of cotton, was imported by the abuse of trade into the most distant regions.

The mode of its propagation is explained by the remark of Procopius himself, that it always spread from the sea-coast to the inland country; the most sequestered islands and mountains were successively visited; the places which had escaped the fury of its first passage were alone exposed to the contagion of the ensuing year.

The wind might diffuse that subtle venom; but unless the atmosphere be previously disposed for its reception, the plague would soon expire in the cold or temperate climates of the earth.

Such was the universal corruption of the air, that the pestilence which burst forth in the fifteenth year of Justinian was not checked or alleviated by any difference of the seasons. In time, its first malignity was abated and dispersed; the disease alternately languished; but it was not till the end of a calamitous period of fifty-two years that mankind recovered their health, or the air resumed its pure and salubrious quality. No facts have been preserved to sustain an account, or even a conjecture of the numbers that perished in this extraordinary mortality. I only find that for months, five, and at length ten thousand persons died each day in Constantinople; that many cities of the East were left vacant, and that in several districts of Italy the harvest and the vintage withered on the ground. The triple scourge of war, pestilence and famine afflicted the subjects of Justinian, and his reign is disgraced by a visible disease of the human species, which has never been repaired in some of the fairest countries of the globe."

It appears to me that there cannot be found a more striking fulfillment of Christ's prophecy of pestilence and earthquake, than what is furnished in the foregoing extract from Gibbon. A. ROSS.

For the World's Crisis.

THE EARTH THE HOME OF THE SAINTS.

We can prove it by the word of God. And why a single doubt should linger in the mind of any in regard to so comprehensive a subject, is more than the writer of this is able to account for. And yet there are thousands, even in this "age of gospel light and religious liberty," who not only entertain doubts, but repudiate the idea. They have been taught by their fathers that such a doctrine was "fallacious," and are willing to adhere to their "say so," rather than to investigate the matter for themselves. So, on the whole, we attribute it more to willing than to willful ignorance.

By Heb. 9: 15, we learn that the "called" according to the prophecy of God, have the promise of "an eternal inheritance." In Gal. 8: 16, we read,—"Now to Abraham and his seed (which the apostle informs us in the same verse is Christ), were the promises made." Here is not only a promise brought to view, but promises—implying more than one; but that the promise of the inheritance is included is evident from the eighteenth verse: "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise."

So Abraham and Christ have the promise of an eternal inheritance—not according to modern theology, but "according to the apostle Paul." And in verse twenty-nine he says: "If ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." So you see, dear reader, you and I, if we are Christ's, are "heirs of an eternal inheritance," also.

In Rom. 4: 13, we learn where this inheritance is located: "For the promise that he should be heir of (heaven?) the world (kosmos, earth) was not to Abraham, or his seed (Christ), through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." It must be obvious to all intelligent minds that the foregoing connected links of divine testimony teach us beyond all cavil, "that Abraham and his seed through Christ Jesus, have the promise of this earth for an eternal inheritance."

Some people think the idea a preposterous one, that the saints should ever inherit the earth; but what do we know about the future, except what we read? And if the Word teaches that the saints are going to inherit the earth, who is going to controvert it? We think the earth was good enough for man's inheritance before the curse was stamped upon it; and if, as all must admit, "it was his adherence to Satanic falsehood which brought the curse upon the earth," when the seed of the woman bruises the head of the old arch demon, will it not restore this planet to its pristine beauty, and redeem it from the curse?

In Luke 19: 10, we read: "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." We know that God made man a happy being, and gave him "dominion over the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fish of the sea, and over the whole earth." See Gen. 1: 28. We also know that "that dominion was lost." In Micah 4: 8, Christ has the promise of the first dominion. We read of no dominion prior to that given to Adam. Will Christ ever receive that? If any one should have any misgivings in regard to the matter, let them turn with me to David's language in the 8th Psalm, and to Paul's application of it in Heb. 2d, and such misgivings will cease to perplex his mind. David says: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels (remember, Christ took not on the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham), and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou hast made him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet: all sheep and oxen; yea, and the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea."

Is not this precisely the dominion given to Adam? But Paul quotes this language of David, and applies it to "Christ, in the world (oikoumenen, habitable earth) to come." He says: "But unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak;" and then referring to David's language, in the 8th Psalm, and quoting it almost verbatim, adds: "But now we see not yet (in this dispensation), all things (spoken of by David) put under him," but will in the world to come, whereof we are speaking.

Dear reader, you cannot fail to see that Christ is to receive the first dominion—the identical one given to Adam—"in the world to come." But before Adam transgressed the righteous law of God, and lost his dominion, "the beasts of the field, which now prowl in the wilderness, seeking to devour each other, lay subordinate and submissive at his feet." Even thus it will be in the world to come, under the dominion of "the second Adam"—Christ; for even thus the holy prophet hath predicted: "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; the calf and the young lion, and the fattling together, and the little child shall lead them."—Isa. 11: 6.

In those days of primeval innocence, when man talked face to face with his Creator, and inhaled the spicy breezes which waved the mellow fruits of life's fair tree, the "thorn" and "thistle" which now infest the fields, had no place in all that vast domain. . . . Neither will they have in the bright world to come. They are a mark of the curse. The Almighty said to Adam, after he had transgressed his law: "Cursed is the ground for your sake: thorns and thistles shall it bring forth," etc.; but the prophet, contemplating its restitution, says: "Instead of the thorn shall come the fir tree; and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be unto the Lord for a name, and for an everlasting sign, which shall not be cut off."—Isa. 55: 13.

So it will be seen that the "blighting robe of curse which now envelops the earth," will be entirely withdrawn. No shadow of its ghostly form will ever more be seen. And how, it may be asked, is all this great change brought about? We answer, "Through the atoning blood of Christ." It may appear strange to some that the crimson blood, which dyed the soil of Calvary's brow, should effect this earth; but, strange as it may appear, we think it is susceptible of proof.

Christ, in the parable of "a treasure hid in a field," beautifully illustrates the plan of redeeming this rebellious planet: "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a treasure hid in a field, the which, when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth the field." Matt. 13: 44. The kingdom of heaven, like all other kingdoms, in order to exist, must be composed of at least four "parts," or "elements." These "parts," or "elements," we think are all brought to view in this chapter, under different metaphors, or parables; and as Christ declares, in verse thirty-eight, that the field is the world (kosmos, earth; the same promised to Abraham), the element brought to view in the foregoing parable must be "the subjects," the "SAINTS OF GOD," as they, and they alone, can be said to be "hid in the . . . earth." The saints are literally hid (buried) in the earth; and Christ saw them as a treasure, and selling all that he had, even his last drop of blood, that he might make sure of the treasure, "purchased the field which contained it."

And Paul tells us in Eph. 1: 12, 13, that we are even now sealed "by the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest (foretaste) of our inheritance, UNTIL the redemption of the PURCHASED POSSESSION." We have a "foretaste of the glory which is to be revealed unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ;" yea, we have "tasted the good word, and the powers of the world to come," and soon we shall receive the full reward of our labors, in the kingdom of God—"the purchased possession."

But this is not all the evidence we have that the earth is to be the home of the saints. God has declared it by the mouth of his holy prophets, in language so explicit that none need be mistaken; and even Christ himself vindicated the same truth. In Matt. 5: 5, he says, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall INHERIT THE EARTH." He does not say, "they do inherit it"; nay, many of them have not where to lay their head in this life; but they shall, in future, "inherit the earth." The meek! Moses was a very meek man, therefore he will inherit the earth; then if orthodoxy succeeds in getting away to some unknown clime, they will lose the society of meek old Moses. Give me the society of Moses and Abraham and all the holy prophets, together with the Son of God, on a renewed and redeemed earth, and you are welcome to your Elysian fields afar off, and all you can get there with you.

This language of Christ only corroborates the testimony of David, in the 8th Psalm. At the 9th verse he says: "For evil doers shall be cut off; but they that wait upon the Lord they shall INHERIT THE EARTH." Evil doers are not cut off yet, nor will they be till the Lord comes; but on the contrary, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse," until that event; then they shall be cut off, and they that wait upon the Lord "shall inherit the earth." 11th verse: "But the meek shall INHERIT THE EARTH, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Is this true of the meek in this life? Do they delight themselves in the abundance of peace? Answer, ye who can. At the 18th verse he says, "The Lord knoweth the days of the upright, that their inheritance shall be forever." 22d,—"For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and such as be cursed of him shall be cut off." 29th,—"The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever." 34th,—"Wait upon the Lord, and keep his way (not your own), and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land."

We think the foregoing ought to convince any one, even the most skeptical, that this planet is destined to be the eternal abode of the saints; but line upon line, and precept upon precept is needed now-a-days, to convince people (and then they are not convinced) of, not only this, but any truth which seems to clash with preconceived opinions. Therefore we will add the testimony of one whose wisdom once attracted the attention of a foreign queen, but would, no doubt, if living in this age of divine knowledge, be branded as a fanatic or something worse. "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it."—Prov. 2: 21, 22. "Behold, the righteous SHALL NEVER BE REMOVED; but the wicked SHALL NOT INHABIT THE EARTH."—Prov. 10: 30. Behold, the righteous shall be RECOMPENSED IN THE EARTH; much more the WICKED AND THE SINNER."—Prov. 11: 31.

This last quotation shows that the whole human family are to receive their recompense in the earth; and Christ says (Luke 14: 13) that the righteous are recompensed "at the resurrection of the just." Therefore they are to dwell in the earth, in their resurrected state. But if the wicked are recompensed in the earth, as Solomon declares in ch. 18: 30, "They shall not inhabit it"; and in chap. 2: 23,—"They shall be rooted out of it," we leave the advocates of endless woe to say what is to become of them. If they have any perplexity, however, in finding an answer, we will refer them to Malachi, who flourished as a writer nearly four hundred years before Christ. His writings are preserved, and may be found in the last part of the Old Testament: "For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

As "the wages of sin is death (Rom. 6: 22), we think the wicked can receive their reward in the earth, and at the same time be "cut off from it," be "rooted out of it," and "not inhabit it"; but if it were "endless woe," we could not conceive the place of their habitation. Let us be prepared to avert their awful doom. J. W. TAYLOR.

MANNER OF CHRIST'S COMING.

The manner of the coming of the Lord is thus described in Scripture. When Jesus returns to earth, a grand retinue of angels forms his escort from his Father's throne to a locality in the heavens, termed by Isaiah, the "chamber" (ch. 26: 20); by Paul, "the air" (1 Thess. 4: 17); by John, the "sea of glass" (Rev. 15: 2), as is evident from Matt. 16: 27: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels," etc. So, also, ch. 25: 31, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." At this point in the celestial journey a delegation, comprising the saints of all ages, meets the King of Glory, and the second stage of the journey is made with the glorified saints as a retinue. See Zach. 14: 5;—"And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee."

When King Immanuel comes to reign, he will not come alone, nor unattended. We can form no conception of the coronation glories when Messiah is invested with dominion under the whole heaven. All the holy angels escort him to some locality in the empyrean, where the flame-colored crystal—"the sea of glass mingled with fire"—is located. The transition from the Father's throne to this gemmed crystalline expanse, in the deep æther, is made without being known to the inhabitants of earth. His ministering angels gather to this Crystal Palace all the "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty," "his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other," to receive their crowns of glory, and robes of honor and beauty, preparatory to sharing kingly and priestly dignities with Jesus in God's kingdom. This gathering, too, is made unknown to the careless, ungodly world.

So far Jesus "comes as a thief": yes, while the ungodly are working, and heartless professors joining in scoffing at the advent and its kindred doctrines, Jesus has silently, unobservedly, come to mid-heaven and gathered his saints—two are in the field, one is taken and the other left—two are in one bed, one is taken and the other left—two women are at the mill, one is taken and the other left. Gone, like Enoch from the antediluvian world, and like Elijah from wicked Israel.

From the grave, too, all the jewels are rifled. The treasures are taken from those dark, secret safes, as some saints were taken when the Lord arose; and foolish virgins, cold professors, and an ungodly world, first became aware of the change, by the absence of "the pure, the good, and the holy." The heralds of the advent no more proclaim "the Coming One." The little broken bands that loved the theme of the Lord's appearing are mysteriously gone. Some mouldering heaps in the "green grassy grave-yards," where past generations have lain down, bear witness that buried treasures have been unearthed, and all these arrayed in white robes come up to share with Jesus in his triumph. After receiving their crowns and royal and priestly appointments for the "world to come," the apostles receive the thrones of Israel, and other honored ones receive authority over ten cities, and five, as the case may be, and the last stages of the advent journey are made.

"The Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." "The Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee." Olivet cleaves asunder as the once-pierced feet light upon it. From the sea of glass to Olivet, is the open, visible stage of the journey of the King of kings, when every eye sees him. Thence from Olivet to Zion. And how different from the scenes when Jesus was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." The agonies of a world's redemption once pressed Jesus here. Now an eternal weight of glory rests upon earth's royal king.

To conclude this hasty outline, the coming of the Lord seems thus arranged: From the Father's throne to a locality in the deep aerial, attended by the angels only; here all the saints meet him, and the cabinet of God's kingdom is organized; from the aerial he comes to Olivet (and some mysterious passages, like Isaiah 63: 1, and Habakkuk 3: 3, and others, show that his journey is made by Sinai, Paran, Edom, and Bozrah, destroying his enemies in his way. See, also, Rev. 19: 20, 21; Ezra 38: 22, and others), when the great physical convulsion of Zach. 14: 4-8, take place; thence to Zion, where he is seated on David's throne to reign forever. Rest finally comes to poor, groaning creation, and an oppressed world enjoys righteous rule at last. This coming is a proximate event. Man has long ruled the world with an oppressive sceptre; but the successions of earthly dynasties have nearly run their course. The long periods are nearing a termination, and the signs have specially been displayed for the warning of this now-passing generation.—Prophetic Times.

"IS COMING UP."

What is coming up? "The cause of Christ is coming up." Where? "In Hoosick, N. Y." Who said so? "Eld. Charles E. Piper and other ministers of the gospel, who have labored within the last few weeks acceptably in this place, in the word and doctrine. They were convinced from what their eyes saw, their ears heard, and what the Spirit of God whispered in their hearts, that the church was getting up on higher ground; was waking out of sleep, and putting on the armor of God, that they may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

This is truth, and I write it to encourage some who have assisted in sowing the good seed here, in other days, who may have been somewhat discouraged about us; while iniquity did abound, and the love of many waxed cold, and might almost be ready to say that their labor had been in vain in the Lord; and to strengthen some other portions of the scattered flock, who are still trying to be righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, as did Zacharias and Elizabeth (Luke 1: 6), but are opposed in every step of progress (as we have been in this place) by cold-hearted professors of religion, "the world, the flesh, and the devil," and are also trying to hold up to view that blessed hope spoken of by Paul (Titus 2: 13), and contending earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints, under discouraging circumstances.

Yes, to such I would say, in the language of an inspired apostle (Gal. 6: 9), "Let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." How truly that has proved in our case. God has added, from time to time, unto this church, "such as should be saved." One good substantial pillar, within a few days, has joined us, and two or three more expect to do so at the earliest opportunity. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."—1 Cor. 15: 58. JACOB WILBUR.

CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Did a holy life consist of one or two noble deeds—some signal specimens of doing, or enduring, or suffering—we might account for the failure, and reckon it a small dishonor to turn back in such a conflict. But a holy life is made up of a multitude of small things. It is the little things of the hour, and not the great things of the age, that fill up a life like that of Paul and John, like that of Rutherford, or Brainerd, or Martyn. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles nor battles, nor one great heroic act or mighty martyrdom, make up the true christian life. The little constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Siloah, "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not the "waters of the river great and mighty," rushing down in torrent noise and force, are the true symbols of a holy life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, little indulgences of self and of the flesh, little acts of indolence or indecision, or slovenliness, or cowardice, little equivocations or aberrations from high integrity, little touches of shabbiness and meanness, little bits of covetousness and penuriousness, little exhibitions of worldliness and gaiety, little indifferences to the feelings or wishes of others, little outbreaks of temper, or crossness, or selfishness, or vanity; the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up at least the negative beauty of a holy life. And then attention to the little duties of the day and hour, in public transactions, or private dealings, or family arrangements; to little words, and tones; little benevolences, or forbearances, or tenderness; little self-denials, and self-restraints, and self-forgetfulnesses; little plans of quiet kindness and thoughtful consideration for others; to punctuality, and method, and true aim, in the ordering of each day—these are the active developments of a holy life, the rich and divine mosaics of which it is composed. What makes yon green hill so beautiful? Not the outstanding peak or stately elm, but the bright sward which clothes its slopes, composed of innumerable blades of slender grass. It is of small things that a great life is made up; and he who will acknowledge no life as great save that which is built up of great things, will find little in Bible characters to admire or copy.—Bonar.

Webster's New Dictionary is hardly less wonderful than the incomparable language of which it is the perfect embodiment. It is "by far the largest volume published in this country." As far as is known, it contains "very considerably more matter than any single volume besides in the world." It affords an opportunity for comprehending most thoroughly the best language on earth. The human mind can scarcely have a thought of which there is not a representative in this wonderful book. Without enumerating the various departments, which reach from the man who knows the most to him who knows the least, in perfect adaptation to all, we would say, use this dictionary if you would have every mystery of words in English books unraveled.

This work, well used in a family, will be of more advantage to the members thereof than hundreds of dollars laid up in money.—Alliance Monitor.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 27, 1865.

CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

Before we can make another weekly visit to our readers, we shall have bidden farewell to 1865. We have hastened through another year. How rapidly our days are being numbered. Soon the last will come, and 1866 may witness the event.

It is now a good time to review our course of life for the past year, and see wherein we need to reform in order to be ready for the coming of the Son of man. To our mind, the figures "1866" are peculiarly interesting and significant. They seem to betoken some startling events; but if we are pure in heart, we have nothing to fear.

In reviewing the past year, many of our readers can speak of very rich blessings received; while others have passed through deep sorrows; and yet those very afflictions may have been of far more value than thousands of gold and siver; and may, in the end, be found the means of their salvation. Joyful homes have been desolated by the hand of death; and the loved ones will not again hasten to "wish you a happy new year." The lovely child, the dear companion, venerable parent, and the bosom friend, who cheered us a year ago, are now no more. We have heard the earth rumble upon their coffins, and spent many lonely hours since, while thinking of those dear ones torn from our fond embrace. But thank the Lord, the end of death's works is at hand. Soon will be heard the triumphant song, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" If faithful, we shall soon be out of the vale of sorrow, and shouting an eternal triumph on the hill-tops of glory. Then let us not murmur at our lot here, but bear patiently all our losses, crosses, trials and afflictions, till Jesus comes to bring them to a perpetual end.

REVIEW OF THE YEAR.

It is well to review our lives, that we may see what we should avoid, and what should be repeated in the future, if permitted to live. There is no time when such a review is more appropriate than at the close of the year. And when was there a time that we had more need of being thorough in our heart-examinations than at the close of the present year, on account of our nearness to the judgment? Let us examine ourselves, as the Bible directs, instead of our neighbors.

Have we done wrong, spoken or thought wrong, during the past year? and left undone what we should have done? Have we defrauded any one out of half a cent's worth? Have we spoken unkindly to any one? or indulged in evil speaking, backbiting, joking, or any other evil propensity? Then let us do it no more. Begin now to reform, and be thorough in the work. Set a double watch where Satan has made his successful attacks. Be assured he will attack us again on weak points. Where he got the victory this year, he will try to conquer again. Let us be prepared for him, trusting in the Lord.

In reviewing the year 1865, do we see any acts, or words, for which we feel sorry? Then let us resolve in the strength of the Lord not to repeat them again. We ought to make visible progress in divine life every year. If one should start on a journey, and find after traveling a whole year that he had made no progress, but was further from the end of his journey at the end than at the beginning of the year, he would think it best to change his course at once; but it is to be feared that many professed christian pilgrims are not now as near the Lord as they were twelve months ago? Is it best to continue another year in the same road? It may be the last year of the journey. Is it not high time to throw off the weights? every one of them? Come, let us be free in the Lord.

If it be found, after a careful review of the year, that there is any "hatred," or "variance" towards any one, have it removed at once. Go and confess it all, and carry the heavy load no further. The Bible says that those who indulge "hatred, variance, . . . and such like, . . . shall not inherit the kingdom of God."—Gal. 5: 20, 21. That feeling of "hatred" and "variance" will cost the possessor too much if he holds on to it till Jesus comes. He can "not inherit the kingdom of God," if he holds such feelings towards any one; no matter how much he may have been abused, cheated, or insulted. Forgive it all, and then pray, Father, forgive me as I forgive those who trespass against me. Let all such things be attended to at once. Time is short. The day of the Lord is at hand. Forgive and be forgiven.

Let the review of the past year be thorough; and whatever is found wrong in word, deed, or thought, that has not been forgiven and made right, make it the first business to receive attention. Let us pass the line of 1865 "pure in heart," that we may be ready to see the King of kings, and be admitted into his palace to behold him in his glory.

BAD HABITS.

Now is a good time to break off from all bad habits. Dear reader, do not let them follow you any further. Be determined, by the help of the Lord, that they shall be "broken to shivers" before you enter 1866. Be a free man when you enter the new year. All bad habits are costly, besides the misery they bring. O what a constant luxury it is to be free from them all. Let every one rise up in the dignity of his manhood, and the strength of the Lord, and bid the bad habits an eternal farewell. If you turn them off with some expectation that you may call for them again, be assured they will haunt you worse than ever, till you take them back to your embrace. Make no compromise. Crucify them, crucify them. Pierce them to the heart's core. Let it be a war of complete extermination. Kill them dead—dead, DEAD. Banish to the gulph of oblivion the cider, gin, whiskey, brandy, ale, and every other intoxicating beverage, with their fellow laborer,—tobacco, in all its forms. Make a clean sweep, and shout the victory's song.

Having done this, then stop all backbiting, scolding and fretting, evil speaking and joking, judging and evil surmising; be patient and kind to all, long suffering, forbearing, tender-hearted and forgiving, that you may be holy and happy, all ready to welcome Jesus. Will you do it?

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

When the new year comes, almost every one is disposed to make presents to their friends. Their dearest and best friends get the best gifts. We have been thinking as Jesus is our best and dearest friend, he should have the best and richest gifts. If he were on earth now, how delighted his disciples would be to send him useful presents. Yet he has so arranged things that we can have the privilege of showing our love for him, as truly as though he were now on earth. How? He says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Let us rejoice at this opportunity of making him a new year's gift, and most gladly improve it. It may be our last one. Instead of making costly gifts to our rich friends, after the manner of the world, let christians make presents to Jesus, by giving to his poor children. Hunt up the widows and orphans, and other needy ones, and make them glad with a new year's gift. Send them food, fuel, and clothing for the cold winter. Jesus does not desire rich presents of jewelry, or other fancy articles, for they will not administer to his comfort, as personified in his poor children. Perhaps that lone widow, or poor neighbor, has been struggling for months to save money enough to take "our paper." Send it, and make her heart glad every week.

Another excellent way to send a present to Jesus would be to make a donation to the Tract Fund, Freedmen's Mission, or Italian Mission. By so doing, Jesus may be made to rejoice in the hearts of many of his humble followers. Shall it be done? If we give to the Lord, it only adds to our joy and peace, which are of more value than all the treasures of earth, that perish with their using. Let us sow bountifully, and we shall also reap bountifully. Whatsoever we sow, that shall we also reap.

RULES OF LIFE.

we propose the following rules to be adopted by all of our readers for the year 1866:—By the help of the Lord, I am resolved—

1. To speak evil of no one.
2. To speak no unkind words to any one.
3. To bear every thing patiently.
4. To avoid all joking.
5. To forgive every one.
6. To return good for evil.
7. To judge no one.
8. To allow no evil imaginations.
9. To give one-tenth of all I receive.
10. To do all to the glory of God.

SPIRITUALISM.

We purpose to give a series of articles on Spiritualism, showing its cause, morals, doctrines, and politics. We purpose to make them of value to every body; and give important facts that every one should know. We intend to begin with the next number. These articles will be valuable to send to those who are not thoroughly posted in the phenomena of Spiritualism. It will be a good time to make your friend a new year's present by sending him the Crisis for six months or a year. Try it. It may be the means of his salvation. Many have been led from darkness to light by reading "our paper"; and we hope many more will receive the same benefit the coming year. We purpose to spare no pains on our part that will tend to make "our paper" such an one as should be in every family.

HAVERHILL.

Our meetings in Haverhill, Ms., have been much favored by the presence of the Lord. Several have been converted, roots of bitterness have been extracted, and backsliders reclaimed, and others are seeking the Lord. The prospect is very encouraging. We found some hindrances at first, which Satan had introduced by causing a "variance" of feeling between some members; but the enemy was obliged to give up his prey, which caused us much joy. The adversary is trying all possible means to cause alienation of feeling among brethren, knowing if he can succeed, that he can keep them out of the kingdom. He does not care what produces the trouble, because the result will be the same. He has one very successful way of getting good men into his snares. It is this:—If he can persuade one to do or say something wrong, then to get a good brother to look at it, saying to him, Now have nothing to do with the one who has done the evil, for if you do, you sanction the sin. So the good Bro., instead of going to the offender, with a purpose to "restore such an one in the spirit of meekness," as the Bible directs, stands aloof from the erring one; treats him with coldness and neglect, by which means Satan starts a "root of bitterness," causing "many" to "be defiled." The hard feeling, or "variance," felt by the good brother, is just as sure to defile him, as the wrong deed defiles the one whom he shuns. The simple truth is, we cannot indulge hardness towards any one, and feel free in Christ.

This great truth was apprehended in Haverhill, and worked some blessed results. This point needs special attention every where at the present time. Let us search every corner of our hearts, to see if there is any root of bitterness growing there towards any one living; if so, have it out without any respect to the cost. Let us pass into the new year without a spot upon us, or a cloud on our heavenly sky.

We had a blessed communion season at Haverhill, which afforded much comfort to the saints, and conviction to the sinner. Four rose for prayers. The work is onward. Pray for them.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE RAINBOW.

"The Rainbow" is a very interesting monthly, edited by Wm. Leask, D. D., and published at No. 9 Paternoster Row, London. It is mainly devoted to the subject of the speedy coming of Christ, and the establishment of his kingdom. The following is an extract from one of its correspondents on the subject of punishment, published in the November number:—

"I am thankful to find you say, in your notice of the pamphlet on 'The Second Death,' the subjects on which it reverently treats ought to be discussed, for, whatever it may be, we are confident there is something wrong in the common notions respecting them.' This has long been my own conviction. For years the doctrine of eternal torments, traditionally received, was a sad burden to me; but my mind has, I am thankful to say, been relieved since I arrived at the conclusion, after long and earnest study, that the common assumption that man is naturally an immortal being, has no foundation either in reason or Scripture. That this life is not the whole of any man's existence is evident from Scripture; that 'whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," is equally clear; that 'God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son,' I earnestly believe; but that it is the will of our loving Father in heaven that any of his human creatures should exist to all eternity in torment, I cannot conceive. Throughout the Bible I believe that God veils his reserves of mercy, lest men should presume upon them; but as the sun of Revelation dips below the horizon, it casts athwart the deepening gloom a few rays of divinest hope in such passages as Eph. 1: 10; 1 Cor. 15: 24, 28; Rev. 21: 3, 5. Hope—not for the incorrigible sinner—for him I see no hope save in the blackness of annihilation—but hope that the time will come at last when God's universe shall be delivered forever from sin and sorrow, and in all the divine unlimited fulness of the words, 'God shall be all in all.'"

HELP HIM.

It sometimes happens that a church has a young minister, or an old one, who does not happen to be among those called "smart" (fortunate for him); yet he is one of the Lord's ministers, whose labors he loves to bless, because he is humble and trusts in him. Now it often happens that such an one has a "hard time"; not because he was at fault, but for the reason that he had to do all ohe work, and do it too without even the sympathy of his professed brethren; for all they did was to look coldly on, and see him work.

We wish to recommend a better way. When you have a weak minister, all take hold and help sustain him, and we think you will see some of the most blessed results you have witnessed for a long time. While he talks, pray for him, instead of sitting as critics; and when he gets through, exhort, pray and sing, looking to the Lord for help, and we think you will not be disappointed.

A word also to the preacher. Do not preach so long that no one will feel like saying any thing when you get done. This is a very common fault, judging from the complaints we hear from the different churches. While you preach "the everlasting gospel," do not try to preach it everlastingly. Leave the congregation hungry for more, if you would leave them in a healthy condition. Do not stuff them with all they can get down, and thus cause a moral dyspepsia, so that they will have no more relish for good food.

The tempter often says to the weak preacher, Now if you do not preach a sermon of pretty good length, they will think it is because you can't; and Satan knows if he can get one to preach a long and a poor sermon, that then he has most successfully crippled the usefulness of that man. If people complain because you are too short, you may expect they will be your constant hearers. Not so when they feel you are "too long"; then their seats will often be vacant; if not, they will be occupied with less delight. Think of these things.

ITALY.

Italian affairs are becoming more and more interesting as we approach the end of the present dispensation. All civilized nations are watching with deep interest the movements in Italy, expecting some radical change before another year passes away. All seem to be agreed that the temporal power of the Pope is near a perpetual end. It is evident that Napoleon is anxious to get rid of the Pope as soon as it can be safely done, without exciting the feelings of the Catholics against himself. He is endeavoring to get the power that has been held by the Pope, and use it for his own exaltation in the Catholic nations. The plans of Napoleon are deep-laid, and well executed, and usually attended with success.

The following is from the Boston Daily Journal of Dec. 10th, 1865:—

Victor Emmanuel.—Victor Emmanuel, on the 18th of November, delivered at Florence, before the Italian Parliament, a brief but very significant address. He congratulates his subjects upon the progress of events and the present condition of Italy, and alludes to the demands of popular education, and announces his determination to separate the State from the church, and to govern the people in accordance with the new era which is dawning upon the Italian people. The address was warmly applauded, especially those passages which alluded to religious freedom; and the L' Italie, a leading paper in Florence, remarks that the King understands his people, and they will give their gold and their blood if the national programme can be carried out.

The evacuation of Rome by the French troops indicates the movement which is on foot. In fact, an article appeared recently in the L'Opinione Nationale of Paris, which foreshadows the future of Italy and the future career of Victor Emmanuel. That paper intimated that before many months the Pope, finding himself powerless to govern his subjects, or to enforce the payment of taxes, or even to protect his people against the brigands, would solicit Victor Emmanuel to relieve him of his earthly government, which interfered with his spiritual duties, and Victor Emmanuel would kindly consent to assume the burden. This will be accomplished without any revolution, without any perceptible shock. France is satisfied that the government of the Pope cannot effect reforms in keeping with the spirit of the age, and the Emperor therefore evacuates Rome, and will bid the King of Italy God-speed in his efforts to ameliorate the condition of all Italy, if he has not already informed his Holiness that the march of events demands his retirement from the care of temporal matters.

The reception of the King at Florence was every way most enthusiastic. The streets were thronged with people, and the city was illuminated in the evening."

THE EARNEST CHRISTIAN.

Will Bro. Grant please give us some information through the Crisis in relation to the "Earnest Christian?" We judge from the articles he takes from it, that it must be a valuable periodical. We want to see it. Where is it published? Who are the editors? What are its terms? Of what denomination is it? By giving the information desired you will much oblige A Friend.

We cheerfully comply with the foregoing request, as we take pleasure in recommending the Earnest Christian as the best monthly with which we are acquainted. It is published at No. 62 Buffalo St., Rochester, N. Y. It is edited by Brn. Benj. T. Roberts and D. F. Newton. The latter is the author of "Home Thrusts," and formerly editor of the Golden Rule, published in New York. They are Methodists of the genuine stamp; or more properly speaking, true christians, so far as we can judge. The price of the Earnest Christian is $1.50 per year.

CITY HEATHEN.

We think there are no worse heathen in any part of the world than may be found in our large cities, in this most enlightened part of the world. If one can engage in missionary effort, he need not go to India, China, or Hindostan, to find plenty of work. Instead of paying out a large portion of what is given for foreign missions, to salaried clerks, living in the best style, let it be used where its full value will be turned to good account, in giving light in the dark corners of great cities.

A city missionary in New York lately conducted some of the members of the press through a portion of the thickly settled parts of the city. The following statements show the result of their observations:—

"It is difficult to find language with which to portray the shocking, indecent and murderous places in which a large proportion of our population is doomed to live. In one place, near Broadway, up and down which noble thoroughfare sweep the throngs of business and fashion, they found a building containing over twelve hundred persons, occupying rooms no larger than an ordinary closet, where there are no provisions for air, light or water, no hope in case of fire, and where the sun never sends a solitary ray. People are born, live and die in such places, and other people know nothing of their existence. The abodes of poverty in our great cities is the one subject which now demands the most earnest attention. Not alone because a deadly epidemic has already appeared upon our shores, after sweeping through cities of Europe, but also because these resorts of misery are fester spots upon our civilization.

With what regard can a benificent Providence look upon the erection of costly church edifices, and their adornment with every form of elegance and beauty that refined taste can invent and unlimited wealth can purchase, when their spires cast shadows over the wretched hovels where the miserably poor are obliged to drag out their existence! What mockery of christian labor it is to send missionaries to Asia and Africa, and the islands of the sea, when such fields as these, right about us, and a part of our boasted civilization, are unoccupied and neglected! Men talk and make theories about social science; they speculate upon the wants of the community and the duty of the government; but what have they to say—what will they do—about the greatest evil which society has to contend with? We have philanthropy factories where sympathy is created for the sufferings of the slaves, and a tremendous agitation is carried on upon evils which are somewhere in the distance, beyond our vision; and who calls attention to these plague spots which infest our cities—these hells where our poor are condemned to live surrounded by death? Nations go to war for an idea, spend millions and millions of money, and sacrifice thousand and thousands of lives, and the people shout and applaud and rejoice; but who will find a sufficient cause to spend money in giving to the swarming poor of the city cleanly and healthy homes? Is there no glory in that idea? War consumes in a day enough to make the poor of a great city comfortable through a winter. In a month it demands a sacrifice of treasure which would give them pleasant homes to enjoy forever. Ideas are well enough, but there is no danger of our neglecting them. There are things which demand our attention and do not receive it. How many millions of money have been thrown away upon useless, hurtful objects, when it is needed so much for the relief of human misery; and the relief of misery in a way that would tend to the moral improvement of the world!

New York is not singular in its abodes of poverty. Boston, with all her boasted institutions and charities, has them in great abundance. Her men of business know but little about them; her glittering thrones of fashion never think of them. If they could see how one-half of the people live they would not be able to refrain rom exclamations of horror. When shall we, with all our discussions, come to the discussion of this great question, and feel its disgrace as though it were an insult?"—Boston Daily Herald.

"Bethlehem."—An old Sunday School teacher says of "Bethlehem":—"I think it one of the best little books a child can have put into its hands on Christmas. It is very simple, and brought down to the comprehension of children. How much better to have this peeping out of little stockings than to see 'Mother Hubbard,' or the famous 'John Gilpin.'" L.

LETTER FROM BRO. H. K. FLAGG

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Here we are, just commencing our mission labors. We left Chicago Wednesday morning last, and after riding across the prairies one hundred and eighty-four miles, came to Springfield (the home of the late President), where we stopped over night and through the next day with the Advent brethren. There are but three Advent families in the place. We administered to them the Lord's Supper, after which we had an excellent season of social intercourse upon the coming kingdom. At six o'clock P. M. we continued our journey, thirty-eight and a half miles, to Cartinville, Ill., where we found two of Bro. Elliot Braley's daughters, who were expecting us. We went out about a mile, where we stopped over night with a Bro. Dresser. The next day we visited Bro. Braley and his family, consisting of himself and wife and five daughters, three of whom are married. All, together with a son, parents and children, are waiting for our coming king.

The brethren and sisters living in Holliston and Westboro, Mass., will remember Bro. Elliot Braley, as he formerly lived in those towns. He moved with his family from New Hampshire, nine years ago, to this place. And were all our brethren who move from the East out here as faithful to hold up the light, churches would spring up all through the West. Bro. Braley has prayer and conference meetings at his house twice every week. The result is, that a number of their neighbors are receiving and coming into the truth.

Bro. Himes preached in the Methodist church on Friday evening, to a large and attentive audience. The next morning he left for this place. But as the brethren were anxious that I should remain over the Sabbath, I did so. And Saturday evening I preached in the Methodist church also, and I had a good time. The next day (Sunday) I preached forenoon and evening in the Baptist church. The good Lord was with me by his spirit. And I must say that I have not met with such christian cordiality, both from the ministry and people of the different churches, as I met with here, for many years. Notice had been given out that I would preach in the afternoon at the Lutheran church; but when the hour of meeting had come, we found the house locked up. The minister had taken the key, saying that he would not have an Advent sermon preached in his house. Poor man! God bless him. Just that moment the Methodist preacher came along and invited us to go into his class meeting; saying that he would change it into a general class meeting, so that we could all speak. We accepted the invitation, and had an old-fashioned, free meeting. Each spoke of his own views with christian freedom, and the response that came from the minister and members throughout the house, gave unspeakable evidence that their was christian fellowship throughout the meeting. Such a feast I have not enjoyed for a long season among those differing with us on the subject of Christ's speedy coming. Bro. Braley and family very generously helped me after a godly sort.

This morning I continued my journey fifty-nine miles more, to this place, where I found Bro. Himes and Sr. Prescott in waiting for me, on the east side of the Mississippi. We came across the river to the home of Sr. Prescott, where we found both a welcome and a christian home. Sr. Prescott was formerly from Manchester, N. H., but now residing here. She is very extensively known here among the colored people, having labored among them with charming success. She has a devoted sister with her, Sr. Curtis, who also came from New Hampshire one year ago. The hearty welcome with which they both are received among the colored saints, places them in just the position to introduce us into our field of labor at once. Bro. Himes preached to crowded houses in two different African churches on Lord's day, and he was received with hearty welcome.

Dec. 14. We are being received with an excellent spirit by the African brethren in this city; and I must say, I have felt really ashamed to think of calling myself a missionary among a people whose devotion to Christ exceeds any thing I have ever seen at the East. And I have certainly thought, so far as real piety is concerned, that a portion of the colored race here might with great propriety send missionaries among us East.

Remember us in your prayers, and when you pray for me, don't forget my family, will you? whom I have left with the Lord. My next letter will give you our mission work.

Your unworthy brother in the blessed hope,
H. K. Flagg.

For the World's Crisis.

MANY THANKS.

Many thanks to the brethren, and sisters, and children, who have been sending money to the office of the Young Pilgrim, to furnish the poor boys and girls of our Mission School in Philadelphia with a hundred copies semi-monthly, for a year to come, of the "Young Pilgrim." Many thanks to you all, and others who have decided to make up the amount needed. You have done it for Christ, and in the name of our Master we thank you. You have sent joy to over a hundred families. Does not that pay well? Can you possibly be happier than when doing others good?

Many thanks to the Advent Sunday School of boys and girls in New Haven for the barrel of clothing sent to our Mission School. It was the first barrel we have received this winter. Several little boys and girls who were nearly naked are now nicely clothed. Dear children, I know that you labored hard to get up such a lot of clothing. You have been real good little missionaries for Jesus. You will not lose your reward. I wish that there were many such Sunday Schools among us. May God bless and save all of you in his coming kingdom.

Many thanks to the brethren and sisters at Kast Hall, Boston, of the churches in Lynn and Salem also, for the barrels of substantial God bless you's for the needy of this Mission. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." I thank the Lord for a religion that has got an edge to it.

Many thanks to all the brethren and sisters elsewhere who have sent us benefits, and who purpose to continue to do so. We will try to be faithful stewards of the Lord. Pray for us.

Many thanks to all the Israel of God whose thanks ascend to the Savior of the poor and the neglected. God bless you.

We remain yours, in the highways and hedges, missionaries of Christ,

For the World's Crisis.

AN APPEAL.

Dear breathren and sisters of the Advent faith: to those of you who read Bro. Taylor's article in the Crisis a few weeks ago, in behalf of him who is laboring in defence of the truth we hold so dear, in a foreign land, I would say that in my estimation, the subject is of great importance. I would not think to add a word to what Bro. T. has said, for "what shall he say who cometh after the king?" but I have felt ever since reading that article a new and peculiar interest in having that mission sustained; and permit me to ask every one who has not yet made a free-will offering to this blessed object, to re-read that article, and then put into practice the desires which must arise in every christian heart to help forward the glorious work. Let every man, woman and child give something; let even the poorest give their mite; it will make them feel better; the Lord, who loveth a cheerful giver, will surely bless you with all that you need. I feel that we, as a people, should immediately come up to the work of fully sustaining that distant mission. I hope there will be many responses all over the land, and that offerings will come flowing into the treasury of the Lord, till there shall be no lack. That the mission is an important one, none can doubt; and could we realize its importance as we ought, Bro. Czechowski would be most abundantly sustained, and others with him.

Who will help to spread the glad news of the coming king in the regions beyond? As Bro. T. remarks, Bro. C. seems to be the man for the post he occupies, which is an important one; he is qualified to gain access to those who have felt the crushing power of papal tyranny; and shall he be fettered for the want of means? Shall he be hindered in any degree from the proclamation of the pure, free gospel of Jesus? It is not for us to say. If our professed consecration be entire, I believe we shall find something to give; and let those whom God has blessed with this world's goods, heed the apostle's exhortation, and abound in the grace of liberality. Come, friends, let us make a New Year's offering for this Mission. We will do something here, and may something be done everywhere, and be done now.

For the World's Crisis.

A LETTER.

The National Thanksgiving is past, with its accustomed routine of family greetings and palate pleasures, and with them we trust the free-will offerings of grateful hearts. It was a good time here in Castleton. We listened to a sermon giving some of the many reasons we have to be thankful—nationally, in a church capacity, and individually. Truly we may say, "How manifold are his blessings." God loves a thankful heart. After partaking of rich hospitalities proffered by benevolence, we repaired to our conference room to enjoy the best prayer meeting I have enjoyed within nineteen months. Though I have enjoyed many within that period which were excellent, that on Thanksgiving eve is inscribed on the tablet of the memory as No. 1. Perhaps it was because the prayers were so fragrant with gratitude, that the Eternal himself seemed pleased to listen, and shed upon us a richer perfume by far than all the costly odors so profusely poured on the Aaronic priesthood.

I know that inspiration expressly commands us to let our requests be made known with thanksgiving; and when mandates from this source are complied with, the smiles of heaven's King are reaped. And then a consciousness of having made some sacrifice for the comfort of the poor and unfortunate,—a consciousness of having exerted one's self to cause grateful emotions to spring up in their hearts, no doubt strengthened faith in Him that is soon to say, "I was naked and ye clothed me." Never was I more conscious that God loves the spirit of sacrifice. Whatever self-denial we practice for Jesus' sake, is a rich investment in heaven's bank, the value of which will appear when our King takes the diadem of earth.

As the large feathery flakes were whitening the earth on the eve just mentioned, convincing all that Brumal with his ice-covered tread was to bear away for months to come, some of us did enjoy the thought that two barrels of clothing were just about completed that would keep quite a number from the jaws of this rigid monster. These two barrels are well worth seventy-five dollars, which make four barrels for the Freedmen, within about six months, from Castleton, Vt. And now, my dear brethren and sisters, it is not because I love you less, or because I feel less interest in the Crisis, that I have not penned a word for that paper since Camp Wilbraham, but because I have been doing all I could in this direction. Personal correspondence has necessarily been dropped, with a few necessary exceptions. But Heaven smiles and cheers, and your hearts will of course beat in unison, and soon, yes, very soon, we'll greet not only each other, but all of God's family, where justice and due honor will be meted out to all.

"O hail! happy day."

No more sorrow, no more oppression; therefore I do most earnestly pray, "Thy kingdom come." Your sister, B. MATHEWSON.

ANNIVERSARY DAY.

The second Sunday in December of the year eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, was the day when the blood of Jesus was applied to my heart. I had been under conviction for sin for about three weeks. For the first two weeks I uttered no prayers. I knew not where I might find Jesus. On the first Sunday of that month, in the evening, I attended a Methodist prayer-meeting, in the Boston St. M. E. church in Lynn, Mass. The burden of sin was resting heavily upon me. God's love toward me, manifested especially in the gift of his dear Son, had broken my stubborn, flinty heart at last. There I was in that church, a poor, miserable sinner. The pastor of the church, in the course of his remarks to the unconverted, urged upon us the necessity of calling on the name of the Lord, and among other things he said, "Depend upon it, that hour when you find peace in believing will be the happiest hour in your life." I there learned who could relieve me of my burden. That night I sought the Lord, and felt that he was seeking me; but unbelief kept me in darkness for an entire week. At last the joyful day and hour arrived. I gave up self and all that I had to Jesus. I called upon the name of the Lord, believing that he would save me.

Whilst seated in a room of my boarding house, wondering how I should know positively my acceptance of God through Christ, all at once my burden of sin rolled off, and that sweet "peace that passeth understanding" filled my entire being. What a joyful hour! A fountain of love and joy was in my heart. I loved God, and Jesus, and the Holy Spirit. I love God's people, and poor sinners. Truly it was the happiest hour of my life. I knew that the angels of God were rejoicing over me. By faith I could see my heavenly Father, and at his right hand the blessed Savior. I knew that they loved me. I knew that I loved them.

Soon after my conversion, I was baptized, and joined the First Baptist church in the same city of Lynn. My heart at once went out in pity for the perishing, and the Lord was pleased to make me an instrument in leading some of them to Christ.

Eight years have passed away since I found Christ. To-day, by the grace of God, I am still pressing "forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." I love christians of every denomination. Every one that has the spirit of Christ is my brother and my sister. Christ did not make me a bigot, but he made me a christian. I love the name. To-day I glory in naught but my infirmities, and boast of naught but Christ.

Four years ago I became identified with Adventists. God enlightened my mind upon his word. Then I felt it to be a duty to labor in the capacity of a missionary, and God has made me an instrument in leading souls to "the Rock that is higher than I." I have written some articles on my missionary labors, not without considerable hesitation, for fear that I should make self too prominent. I have written after being urged to do so, with this consideration that the saints of Jesus might with me magnify the grace of God. I have yet many struggles of mind in this direction. I think often that the work of God can best be told in that day when Christ shall make up his jewels. I desire to keep Christ before me, and self behind me, for I feel that without him and the Holy Spirit I can do nothing.

My eighth anniversary was passed in Boston and Charlestown. I found Christ when the evening shades had fallen upon the earth, and my eighth anniversary evening was a joyful one indeed. In company with my brother I attended the young people's prayer-meeting at the High St. Methodist church in Charlestown, at 6 P. M., and endeavored to speak for Christ. I was cordially received, and felt the presence of the Lord there. At 7 P. M., that meeting closed. From there I attended the Freewill Baptist meeting in Seminary Hall. The Spirit of the Lord was there. My heart was full and running over. I took part in the exercises several times, and at last the pastor came to me, asking me to request sinners to come forward to seek the Lord. I complied, and five came forward. The fire was burning bright. Jesus was glorious beyond comparison. How gladly I could point them to Jesus as the Savior of the perishing. How emptied of self I felt! "When I am weak, then am I strong." Thus I celebrated my anniversary.

If these lines should meet a sinner's eye, let me entreat of you to call upon this same precious Savior. He is a thousand times more willing to save you than you are to be saved. Come, for all things are ready.

If the Lord will, I shall continue to labor in this city among the poor colored people, who need salvation as much as any of us do. The Lord has given me many tokens of his approval of my course in this direction. I am not faultless, but am looking for help to overcome from Him who now sits at the right hand of God, that I may be able to stand when he shall appear. May God bless you all. Amen. Yours in the highways and hedges,

Philadelphia. F. H. BURBANK.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER TWO.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—After the unusual silence of two or three months, I again take my pen to address you and the dear brethren and sisters who are interested in my labors in Europe. Since writing my last report, my time has been very much occupied in missionary labors about home, as well as in other places. Until the first of November, we had meetings every evening at our house, some of the people being much interested in the preached word. There are a few here who seem to have received the truth into good and honest hearts, who are trying to obey it.

Nov. 5th, I left home and joined Bro. Geymet, who had been laboring a few days at Missy, on the opposite shore of Lake Neuchatel, and found a large room crowded with those who had come to hear me. I preached there two evenings to good congregations with much freedom, and also two evenings at Payern, two miles from Missy. I then visited several places on the lake-shore, viz: Port Alban, Chambrey, Cudrefin, Campeten, Marine, Neuchatel, Boudri, Bevaix, Gorgie, Concise, and Onnens, leaving Bro. Geymet to do what he could in Missy. This vicinity of Lake Neuchatel seems to me a very interesting field of labor. The evenings of Nov. 15th and 16th, I preached at La Chaux, a village on the top of Mont Jura, near the frontier of France, and four hours walk from this place.

The 17th, I made application to the "Syndic" of the flourishing village of St. Croix, twenty minutes walk from La Chaux, and to the minister of the National Church of that place, for their large house of worship, which was kindly granted me. I accordingly wrote for the village paper a notice that I would commence the 25th inst. a course of evening lectures upon the fulfillment of prophecy, etc., specifying the subject of each lecture, and invited all to attend. The first evening the large temple was crowded, and the congregation very attentive. We continued our lectures every evening, excepting Sunday, till the close of the month, the house being filled every evening with attentive hearers. The ministers of the place, Mons. Dupont of the "National," and Mons. Favre of the "Free Church," attended and assisted in prayer. The greatest hospitality was shown us by ministers and people. Much bitterness of feeling, I was informed, had existed in that place between the different denominations, and one lady said to me, that no one before had been able to unite them. Much interest was manifested in the truths we preach, and quite a number of the best and most intelligent people promised to continue their investigation of them. Two of them are college professors, one of whom has just gone to Holland to teach. Many of the youth, especially, gave good evidence during our meetings of being converted to God. To His great name be all the praise for the interest of the people in his truth. May He cause the word preached to bring forth much fruit to his glory.

The people whom I left showed the same interest to hear, but I deemed it better to close my lectures at that time, partly on account of the very bad weather, cold and snowy, the place is so elevated; and I did not wish to tire the people. They are quite unaccustomed here to such courses of religious lectures, which are so common in the United States. The people of this flourishing village are intelligent and very industrious. They are nearly all engaged in the manufacture of watches and musical instruments. Though living in a cold region, too high for agriculture, they live in comfort and refinement.

On my return from Saint Croix I stopped at Vuitebœux, a small village at the foot of the mountains, two hours walk from Grandson, and there being no church in the place, I asked permission of the "Syndic" and head teacher to deliver a lecture in the school house the evening of the 2d inst., which was granted. The house was filled with hearers that evening, who listened attentively; but when I asked if I could have the use of the house in which to continue my lectures the evenings of the following week, it was refused me. I was then offered the use of a large salon in a hotel in the place, which I thankfully accepted, and appointed this evening (the 4th inst.) for the first lecture there. It is a hard, wicked place, I judge, and needy enough of plain, heart-searching, Bible preaching. May the Lord bless the labors of this week to the everlasting good of the people of that place.

We receive excellent letters from Italy, and feel much encouraged to learn that the few who "gladly received the word" there are still faithful to the light given them, while others, whom we left less decided, have since increased in strength.

The field here is open on every hand. I have been invited to visit the city of Bade and deliver a course of lectures there, and I intend to accept the invitation soon. I received a few weeks since a very kind letter from Bro. Thorp, of Leeds, Eng., containing a donation of sixty-five francs from the brethren of that place. I am very thankful to the "Board of American Advent Mission Society" for the one hundred dollars which they have ordered to be sent me.

Truly your brother in Christ,

M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

EXHORTATION.

Dearly beloved brethren and sisters scattered throughout this great land:—The year we are just about to enter upon may be one in which great and solemn events may transpire. Sometime within its short limits, the final destiny of both the living and the dead may be irrevocably fixed; they who are to be holy still, and they who are to be filthy still. In view of this solemn truth, we are led to exclaim with the poet—

"Great God, on what a slender thread
Hang everlasting things!"

Many good and great men have within the last fifty years expressed a strong hope of seeing the King in his beauty in 1866. They may be mistaken; but is it not evident to all who study the prophetic word in connection with the signs of the times, that the day of the Lord is very near, yea, that it hasteth greatly? There are some of our brethren in the ministry who are proclaiming with great positiveness that the Lord will come in 1867, and give dates which, to their minds, are conclusive evidence of the fact; and I do not doubt their honesty. But human knowledge and wisdom are very imperfect. The word of the Lord is perfect, but the dates of profane history may not be. Suffice it to say, that enough is known to satisfy the most incredulous that it is high time for the church to arouse from her slumbers, from her worldly-mindedness, her conformity to its foolish fashions and habits, and calmly and intelligently put forth every effort in her power, trusting in divine aid, not only to be ready herself, but also to be instrumental in saving others from the terrible doom that awaits the ungodly.

Dearly beloved brethren and sisters, could we but realize that it is highly probable that in a few short months we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, would we not use all the means in our power to spread the solemn truth among our fellow men? I would not advise, as some do, to give all your worldly goods away, for then your ability to do good would be limited indeed. But should we not, as good stewards of the household of faith, cut off every foolish expenditure, and give our surplus to sustain young and energetic men, full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, that they may go to those dark places where the light of Advent truth has not as yet penetrated, many of which may be found in every State of the Union. You may ask, Why do they not go? I answer, How can they, unless they are sent? Our ministers cannot travel far without money, neither could they sustain themselves or their families without being seconded by those brethren of means who are desirous of seeing widely extended those great and fundamental truths of christianity which they must regard as our richest and most hopeful inheritance. And is there not money enough locked up in the coffers of professed Adventists, if freely given and properly applied, to send the glorious news of the coming kingdom to all the benighted parts of this great land? And if we see the sword coming and do not warn the people, can we expect to stand acquitted at the day of judgment? I do not desire to see any undue excitement, for that only unfits men for the solemn duties and realities of life; and what we have to guard against, especially in these times, is fanaticism. Having observed it closely in its various forms since 1843, I believe it is more to be feared than vipers, because of its consequences. It bewilders the mind, begets spiritual pride and self-elevation, always professing to be something higher and holier than others, professing to speak with tongues, etc.

We cannot have too much love, for that will prompt us to every good word and work. We cannot have too much humility, for then we will feel our entire dependence upon God to aid us in doing anything aright. We cannot have too much zeal, when put forth in accordance with the teachings of the word of the Lord. And we need much of the Holy Spirit in these perilous times to give direction and guidance to all our labors in the Master's vineyard. But all must labor, and all must give an account personally to God. It does not follow that all must engage in preaching the gospel; all are not called upon to do so, either by reason of natural qualities or the preparation of the mind; but all who have the means, can do so by proxy.

Now, as the time is very short that we shall have in which to labor, we shall not regret at its close that we have done too much, even if we have to make a few sacrifices. Our money, our lands, and our worldly goods will be of no use to us after the sounding of the last trump. Let us therefore, in the name of the Lord, bestir ourselves, and make one determined, organized effort to send out faithful men to proclaim to the perishing, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" And may the glorious hope of being sharers in that land of eternal rest about to be revealed, sustain us amid all our trials and temptations. For the first conscious impress of immortality and eternal life will more than compensate us for all our sufferings here.

Yours in the hope of eternal life at the coming of Christ, WILLIAM STUART.

LEONARD. Died in South Waterford, Oct. 2d 1865, Sister Esther, wife of Solomon Leonard, aged seventy-three years.

Sister L., in her early christian experience, was united with the Methodist church; but when, in 1843, the sound of Jesus' coming soon was heralded throughout the land, she with her husband embraced the doctrine and was filled with joy; and when years had rolled away, and many had grown heart-sick because of deferred hope, and were letting their faith wane down and die, still these waited, leaning on the "sure word" with a steadfast faith and an unfaltering trust, confident in hope, that he who said I will return, would be coming soon.

But, alas! the wife has fallen, and our brother waits in sorrow and prays by his fireside alone, "Thy kingdom come." May God bless the aged pilgrim, and the children thus afflicted, and bring them an unbroken circle to the deathless land.

Remarks were made at the funeral by the writer from John 16: 22. JAS. A. LIBBY.

RING. Died in East Livermore, Me., of typhoid fever, Sept. 4th, 1865, Eldora A., daughter of Bro. Henry M. and Sister Sarah F. Ring, aged twelve years and four months.

Eldora was an amiable and affectionate child, dearly beloved by her parents, sister, brother and associates, who were suddenly called to mourn her death. She is cut down in the innocence of childhood, by the fell destroyer, death. But she met the enemy with calmness and resignation, feeling ready and willing to die.

Thus Bro. and Sister Ring and family are again called to mourn their dead, yet not as those who have no hope. They are comforted in all their afflictions with the "blessed hope" that Jesus is soon coming to bring up their children "from the land of the enemy," to enjoy eternal life with them in the kingdom of God. I. C. WELLCOME.

OAKS. Died in Lyons, N. Y., Dec. 10th, of diphtheria, Willie H., only child of Joseph B. and Elizabeth J. Oaks, aged four years, five months, and eighteen days.

Words of comfort appropriate to this hour of affliction were delivered by the writer.

Willie was a lovely child;
In conversation meek and mild.
His last words, so fitly spoken,
Remind me of the Lord's last token;
Confessing faith in Jesus' name,
That by him he should live again;
Then, parents dear, weep not in vain,
Your seeming loss is Willie's gain.

ADAMS. Died at West Stoneham, Me., Dec. 14th, 1865, Mr. Albion Adams, aged twenty-two years, eight months and ten days.

After having been in the service of his country over three years, he returned home to his family sick, and died of consumption. He fell asleep in Christ, looking to him as the only hope. He left a bright evidence that he would have part in the better resurrection.

A sermon was delivered from Job 14: 14, 15, by the writer. C. M. CURRIER.

PRESSEY. Died in Derry, N. H., Dec. 12, 1865, Enoch Pressey, in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

My father loved the Savior, and gave strong evidence of a change of heart. We trust he is one of those who shall sing the song of the redeemed on the other shore. He loved the Crisis much. It has been the means of enlightning his mind. That and the many prayers that have been offered in his behalf, have been answered in his salvation.

MARY A. PRESSEY.

BRECKENRIDGE. Died in Woburn, Mass., Dec. 3d, Walter F., son of Samuel and Emily L. Breckenridge, aged six years and eleven days.

I attended his funeral, from the residence of Bro. James Lazell, speaking words of comfort to the afflicted, assuring them upon the authority of God's word that the little boy would again live, for God had promised to raise the dead. C. GOODRICH.

The continental news is unimportant.

The Army and Navy Gazette says there are between 19,000 and 20,000 troops of the regular army in Ireland.

The King of the Belgians died on the 9th.

Hamburg papers state that a portion of the Heligoland rock, having been long undermined by the sea, had fallen and was engulphed in the waves. Out of 500 inhabitants on the Island, seventy are said to have perished.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Dec. 19. A St. Louis dispatch says the scene of the ice disaster on the river Sunday was a most exciting one. The levee was a perfect promenade of all kinds of people gazing at and commenting upon the scene of smashed and sunken steamers. The river is frozen solid, and huge chunks of ice five inches thick were piled up in shapeless masses around the doomed steamers, flat boats and broken wharves. A group of four boats, tightly jammed together, and so damaged that it was not easy to distinguish one from another, lie in the stream in the verge of the channel. All the others are crushed against the bank. Some were broken fairly in the middle; others had their pilot houses, upper decks and chimneys carried away.

New York, Dec 19. A special Washington dispatch says that while the President was preparing his message the French Minister emphatically stated that the Emperor would much regret any expression in the message which would make it impossible to recede from his Mexican scheme without humiliation. The Minister also assured Mr. Seward that the French troops would be withdrawn from Mexico in a little while, and asked for patience on the part of our government. It is reported that Gen. Logan is satisfied there will be no difficulty, and that the Republic of Mexico will soon be peacefully reinstated.

Fortress Monroe, Dec. 20. The U. S. steamer De Soto, from Port au Prince 13th inst., has arrived here. She reports Gen. Salnave at Monte Christo, in San Domingo, with his staff and Senate. He was recruiting his army, which was being strongly reinforced by deserters from Geffrard's forces. There was great excitement at Port au Prince. Reinforcements were being sent forward to Cape Haytien, where an attack from Salnave was expected. Gen. Geffrard sent a commissioner to the San Domingo government to request the delivery of Salnave, and afterwards offered $40,000 for his capture and various sums for the persons of his Council. The Haytiens universally favor the revolution against Geffrard.

New York, Dec. 21. A tremendous gale is raging here. It commenced about six o'clock this morning. The Ferry boats on the river are making long passages, and many vessels in the harbor are dragging their anchors. A schooner was totally wrecked at Sandy Hook this morning. Crew saved. The French brig Prosper is ashore there also. An unknown schooner was totally wrecked this morning at Long Branch; Captain, wife and three of the crew were lost; two of the crew were saved.

Washington, Dec. 21. The Republican of last evening has information that the imperial troops in Mexico are gradually approaching Vera Cruz with a view to embark for France. The statement seems to be supported by detailed facts.

New York, Dec. 24. It is reported that Colonel O'Mahoney has received dispatches from Head Centre Stephens, calling for prompt and decisive action by the Fenians. The crisis is said to be near at hand.

San Francisco, Dec. 23. Advices from Mexico state that a revolution against Maximilian had taken place, and that Gen. Lopez and his officers have been driven from power.

METEORIC EXPLOSION.—The Charleston Courier of the 11th says the inhabitants of Charleston were much surprised by an unusual phenomenon that occurred at about half-past eight the previous evening. The air at the time was still, and a slight shower was falling. Suddenly a vivid flash of light, considerably different in character from ordinary lightning, everywhere prevailed, and after an interval of about one minute came a very heavy explosion, producing in many instances a jarring of windows similar to an earthquake. A colored sentinel described the phenomenon as a falling star, and pointed to the southern heavens as the region from which he saw it descend.

ANCIENT MINE DISCOVERED IN SPAIN.—The workmen in a Spanish silver mine, while pursuing their excavations recently, suddenly found themselves in passages whose origin dates from the remotest centuries. They discovered a thorough and scientific system of mining, the implements being in such a good state of preservation that it could be determined that it was not a Roman, but a Carthegenian or Phœnician mine. The hatchets, sieves for ore, but particularly a smelting furnace and two anvils, excite the interest of engineers in the highest degree. All these articles were carefully collected and preserved for further investigation and study.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AMERICA.—The latest South Americin news says that the allied troops were still being pushed forward after the retreating Paraguayans, though the complete devastation of the abandoned country by the latter and a violent storm and consequent rise of the rivers greatly retarded the pursuit. The Brazilian fleet had proceeded up the Parana river as far as Bella Vista.

NEGRO TROUBLES IN GEORGIA.—The Athens (Ga.) Watchman says that for the last two weeks there has been considerable excitement in Morgan, Greene, Walton, and a portion of Clarke and Jackson counties, in reference to an apprehended rising of negroes, information of which was revealed by negroes. Many colored people have been arrested and two companies of Union troops have been sent to Washington, Wilkes county, for the purpose of suppressing an outbreak.

CONSECRATION.—"GIVE ME THY HEART."

Here's my heart—to God I give it;
  Voice and tongue—to praise his name;
I have life—to him I live it;
  Hands—to him devote the same.
I've a field—to sow and reap it—
  And must reap whate'er it grows;
I've a paradise—I'll keep it,
  For it blossoms as the rose.

I've a conscience—thus protected,
  Worth a throne and diadem;
I've a mansion, well selected,
  In the new Jerusalem.
Hence I have, in this connection,
  Thus prepared—I have a home;
Such a home that my affection
  Does not, will not, cannot roam.

I have feet—with God they're walking,
  For with gospel peace they're shod;
Most familiarly I'm talking,
  As I take my walk with God.
I have thought, the greatest pleasure
  Which the universe can sing;
There is no material treasure
  Which can such possessions bring.

I have ears—to hear the story
  Men and angels love to tell;
Eyes—to see the rising glory
  Which shall Zion's triumph swell.
I have prayer—to God I make it,
  While mine eye his throne surveys;
I've a golden harp—I'll wake it
  To a song of endless praise.

A. H. Grosvenor.

For the World's Crisis.

ANALYSIS OF THE GOSPEL.

The apostle Paul was "separated unto the gospel of God." Rom. 1: 1. The Holy Ghost speaking by him pronounces a two-fold, emphatic curse on any one "who shall preach any other gospel than that which we have preached unto you." "Let him (says he) be accursed." Thus the gospel is guarded as by "the cherubim and flaming sword that" kept "the way of the tree of life."

Again, "The Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen (that is, the nations of the earth), through faith preached before the gospel unto Abraham. In thee shall all nations be blessed." Gal. 3: 8. This is a free quotation from Gen. 22: 14: 18, where God declares to Abraham that his "seed should possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." On this broad basis "the gospel" stands, confirmed by "the oath" of "the everlasting God." Amen.

I. "The promises." This might at first sight have seemed to centre in Isaac; but the idea expands as we advance. This isolated promise was all there was for about a whole generation. Then the promise was re-affirmed to Isaac; and in the third generation it was "confirmed to Jacob for a law, and an everlasting covenant." Thence, on we trace the line of promise through the patriarchs, the prophetic, priestly and kingly prototypes, and ritual foreshadowings of the then coming One. The age of promise was about two thousand years.

II. "Thy seed, which is Christ." This was seemingly the sole agency announced by which to accomplish the promised blessing. But on looking further, we find the subject of the seed enlarging before our contemplation, as the promise itself expanded beyond Isaac. Jesus, the Messiah, is here as "the head of the body, the church, the fullness (pleroma) of Him who filleth (pleromizes) all in all." Eph. 1: 17–23. "The saints . . . (are to be) conformed to the image of his Son, that he (the Son) might be the first born among many brethren." Rom. 8: 27–29. "If children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ," seeing we jointly suffer together, that we (Christ and the saints) also together may be jointly glorified. Verse 17. The prayer of Jesus thus appropriates and exalts his chosen as joint partakers of glory with himself, and joint sharers in the love and blessing of the heavenly Father, "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." John 17; Eph. 3: 15. The heavenly Bridegroom will honor and enthrone his bride—"the lamb's wife"—who then (at the marriage of the lamb) will have "made herself ready,"—Messiah's queenly bride.

Thus the calling of the church of each saint is an "high calling of God, in Christ Jesus," to be his royal "household" (Eph. 2: 19–22), "kings and priests unto God (who shall) reign with him on (over) the earth." Rev. 5: 10; 20: 5, 6. The present absence of Jesus gives scope to the gospel call, addressed to Jew and Gentile, who "have an ear to hear"; and he fills his official work "within the veil," contemporaneously with the times of the Gentiles and the judgment on Jerusalem. Then "at the resurrection of the just," and on.

III. The promised blessing of the nations must follow. "Amen and amen." The age of mere promise and type has already past. The progressive development of the promised "seed" (as the appointed agency who are to bless and thus dispense the full measure of divine promise—given in "the gospel preached before to Abraham")—is to fill out our passing dispensation, and end in the close of this gospel age. But, then, with "the end of this age"—with the judgment on the Gentile apostasy—we have the great burden of the promise yet assigned to the promised seed, and remaining to be accomplished by their presence and agency.

Christ and his "saints will take the kingdom and possess the kingdom" "under the whole heaven." Dan. 7: 14, 18–27. They will "possess the gate of their enemies"; and then "the kingdoms of this world will become our Lord's and his Christ's." Rev. 11: 15–18; Ps. 45: 72. Babylon, the beast and false prophet, will perish, and the old serpent be bound, "that he shall deceive the nations no more till the one thousand years are expired." Rev. 18th to 20th. Thus "the great and appearing day of the Lord" will have come. Acts 2: 14. He thus "will send forth judgment unto victory; and in his name shall the Gentiles (the nations of promise) trust." Matt. 12: 17–21. "Men shall be blessed in him; yea, all nations shall call him blessed." Ps. 72: 14–18. And this is all comprehended in the "gospel of God, preached before to Abraham."

Thus we have the analysis of "the gospel" that Paul preached, harmonious with that oath-confirmed promise gospelized to Abraham.

I. The time of promise and typical representation.

II. The time for bringing forth and preparing "the seed"; and

III. The future age for dispensing THE BLESSING.

Surely this is plain, and also made necessary to the fulfillment of all parts of prophecy, the Psalms and apostolic teachings.

Bro. Joel A. Simonds talked over this subject, and we found it enlarging and shining out more clearly as we contemplated it. It suited my apprehension of the relative position of the Redeemer. It shows that "the saints" are to be delivered, honored, and enthroned, like their Lord, for the blessed service to which they are appointed—"to inherit blessing." Nay, to dispense "blessings" to their heart's content; to return "good for evil"; like Jesus "the head of the body"—the body politic—to "rule the world in righteousness," to fill the earth with the knowledge and praise of God, as the waters fill the sea." This time of blessing will be "the times of refreshing" (giving life again)—"the times of restitution," restoring, preparatory to "giving it up to God," reconstructed, "that God may be all in all."

This view furnishes a reason for our "suffering with Christ" all through this age, that "all the members" of the "one body" may have alike foregoing education and moral and personal preparation to fill their fore-appointed place in administering the blessing afore-provided in God's "good will to man."

The elements of this analysis I have long had, enjoyed, and proclaimed; but on my late tour some talk with Bro. Simonds opened it more fully; and now I propose to ventilate the subject a little, if there be a channel through which to accomplish so good a purpose. The Lord direct. The ideas of many are all dreamy, indistinct, and unsatisfying; and thus it is with us all till the light of God disperses the mist from our heads and hearts, and lets us "see all this clearly."

This view allows "the seven times" of Israel's punishment to run their course,—the twenty-three hundred years of the Gentile treading down to justify the prophecy; nay, it recognizes the return of Judah from their Babylonish captivity, and the light and life given to the world by Christ's coming and his apostolic ministries, to take from among "the nations a people for his name," to bear "his name and share his glory."

It takes a comprehensive view of the whole plan of God, from the first promise (Gen. 3), especially from its form taken in the covenant made with Abraham, on to its crowning consummation in the new heavens and the new earth, and God be acknowledged "all in all." Amen. J. B. COOK.

WHAT IS INFIDELITY?

The advocates of the soul's immortality, the consciousness of the dead, and the future torment of the wicked, frequently prefer the charge of infidelity against those who differ from them on these points. Perhaps they find it easier to do this, than to answer their arguments. To show the utter groundlessness of this charge, we submit the following consideration:

Is it infidelity to believe that the Scriptures are the only and all sufficient standard, both of faith and practice; and that all religious questions should be submitted to their supreme authority alone? "To the law and to the testimony," etc. Isa. 8: 20.

Is it infidelity to believe that "the Lord God formed man," not a part of him, not his body merely, but man, the entire man, "of the dust of the ground"?—Gen. 2: 7. Observe, he was man before he lived; then, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul (not an ever living soul), or creature, person, as the Hebrew word nephesh signifies. This language evidently means no more than that this breath of life caused the lifeless man to live,—to become conscious. He was made alive by being made to breathe.

Is it infidelity to believe that taking away this breath constituted the death threatened in Gen. 2: 17?—"In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Heb.—"Dying, thou shalt die." We believe this to have been the case; and the true explanation of this text is given by God himself in Gen. 3: 19,—"Till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Observe, God says, "Dust thou," not a part of thee, but "Dust thou art," etc. We believe that the same breath that caused Adam to live, inspired all animals with life. Hence, "they have all one breath." Eccl. 3: 19; Gen. 8: 22. "All in whose nostrils was the breath of life" (Heb.—the breath of the spirit of life), of all that was in the dry land died." Also Gen. 6: 17. This "breath of the spirit of life," passing through the lungs, and coming in contact with the blood, vitalizes it, and gives it life. Hence, how appropriate the language, Lev. 17: 11, "For the life of the flesh is blood." Also Gen. 9: 4. These, and numerous other passages, affirm the blood is the life.

Theologians affirm that the life resides in an immaterial and immortal soul. "Let God be true," though every man be proved "a liar." The breath contains the spirit (or principle of life diffused in the atmosphere). This principle of life vitalizes the blood, and this, in its turn, gives life to the flesh, or entire creature. This spirit is no more a part of the creature, than it was a part of Adam before he lived; but it is essential to the development of the functions of life. This breath, or spirit of life, is in God's hands, and is entirely at his disposal. Dan. 5: 23,—"The God in whose hands the breath is." Ps. 146: 4,—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Job 34: 14, 15,—"If he gather unto himself his spirit, and his breath (i. e., God's spirit, and God's breath), all flesh shall perish together, and man shall return again to dust." Job 27: 3,—"All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils."

Is it infidelity to believe that man was created neither absolutely mortal, but with an adaptation for either; his future and final condition being left to be determined by his moral development? Immortality was the great privilege offered to him on the one hand, and death (literal extinction of being) the penalty on the other.

Is it infidelity to believe that as death entered by one man's sin, so life may be regained by the second Adam's righteousness, through faith in him as the Life-giver of God's appointment? and as the race had been subjected to corruption, in the wisdom of God, so they may be made partakers of an incorruptible life by a union with the Lord of life—"the quickening Spirit"?

Is it infidelity to believe that a man cannot be dead and alive at the same time? that the state of death is a state of unconsciousness; and "the dead know not anything"?—Eccl. 9: 5.

Is it infidelity to believe that, for a future existence, man is dependent entirely upon a resurrection from the dead? For if the dead rise not, then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15: 16, 18. Our Lord and his apostles invariably directed their hearers and readers to this, as the great and supreme object of the christian's hope. "I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 54. "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection from the dead."—Phil. 3: 11.

Is it infidelity to believe that the second advent of our Lord will be pre-millennial, and not post-millennial, as is now generally taught? "For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matt. 24: 38, 39. In the primitive church, the second coming of Christ, and its associate doctrine, the resurrection from the dead, seemed to occupy the very first place in their theology. They were always dwelling upon it. It seemed to be ever present to their minds. This must be evident to all who carefully read Paul's sermons and epistles. But in modern theology these doctrines occupy a very subordinate position, and are regarded as things of comparatively small importance. How is this? Does it not arise from teaching the unscriptural doctrine that men go to heaven or hell immediately at death? for in that case, what importance can men attach to the advent of Christ, and a resurrection? But if men can have no future existence without a resurrection, and without Christ coming to raise them, then we see at once why the early christians attached so much importance to them.

Is it infidelity to believe that this earth renewed and purified from sin, will be the eternal dwelling-place of the saints; and that Christ will here sit upon the throne of his father David, and reign for ever and ever? Dan. 7: 27,—"And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." Ps. 37: 9; Matt. 5: 5; Luke 1: 32, 33. "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Dan. 7: 14.

Is it infidelity to believe that God meant what he said, Ezek. 18: 20,—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die," in a literal and not a figurative sense? Through the whole Bible, life and death run together like parallel lines; and what right have men to alter the plain meaning of God's words? "I set before you life and death."—Deut. 30: 19. "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Rom. 8: 13. There is not a word in Scripture about eternal misery for the sinner. Men use these words freely, but the Bible never. Nor is there one passage which, if fairly interpreted, gives countenance to the idea. The wicked are threatened with death, destruction, and words of like import, but never once with conscious suffering in a future life, either eternal or temporary. O that men would be content to take the words of God as they find them, and not subvert and destroy their meaning, for no other purpose than to support their theories.

Is it infidelity to believe that, when both sin and the sinner shall have been destroyed, the universe shall become "one solid temple of pure gold"? Rev. 5: 13,—"And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Amen."

If believing these things constitutes infidelity, then, be it known unto you, men and brethren, I AM AN INFIDEL.—Harbinger.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE CONCERNING PROPERTY.

To whom does it belong?

The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of Hosts.—Hag. 2: 8.

If property is placed in my hands by the providence of God, is it not my own, to be used as I please?

The kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his servants, and delivered unto them his goods.—Matt. 25: 14.

And said unto them, Occupy till I come.—Luke 19: 13.

It is more blessed to give than to receive.—Acts 20: 35.

His Lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.—Matt. 25: 23.

Many that were rich cast in much.—Mark 12: 41.

What are the evils attending the pursuit and possession of property?

Behold all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit.—Eccl. 2: 11.

He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver, neither he that loveth abundance with increase.—Eccl. 5: 10, 11.

They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which, while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.—1 Tim. 6: 9, 10.

He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house.—Prov. 15: 27.

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth.—Matt. 6: 16.

How are we to employ what God entrusts to us?

Honor the Lord with thy substance.—Prov. 3: 9.

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate, laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.—1 Tim. 6: 17, 19.

Is giving a means of grace?

As ye abound in everything, in faith and utterance and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also.—2 Cor. 8: 7.

Should the poor use this means?

And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing. And he said unto them, This poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury. For all they did cast in of their abundance, but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.—Mark 12: 42–44.

Their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For to their power I bear record, yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves.—2 Cor. 8: 2, 3.

Every man shall give as he is able.—Deut. 16, 17.

What is the effect of giving on the prosperity of the giver?

Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.—Prov. 3: 9: 11.

There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself.—Prov. 11: 24, 25.

Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men (angels) give into your bosom.—Luke 6: 38.

He that giveth to the poor shall not lack; but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse.—Prov. 28: 27.

He that hath pity on the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will he repay him.—Prov. 19: 17.

Should he regulate his benefactions by a system?

Upon the first day of the week let every every one of you lay by in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.—1 Cor. 16: 2.

Every man according to his ability.—Acts 11: 29.

Of all that thou shalt give unto me, I will surely give a tenth unto thee.—Gen. 28: 22.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. —Missionary Advocate.

THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

The following will show some of the reasons for a revised translation of the Scriptures. Manuscripts, much older than any known at the time of King James' translation, which is the one now in common use, have been since discovered, and afford important aid to those now employed by the Amer. Bible Union, in translating the Bible:—ED.

1. The profane freedom which still prevails among the French, in the use of the word God, prevailed in England at the time of the former translation, and has marred many parts of that translation by the irreverent, not to say blasphemous, introduction of the name of the Deity where it does not occur in the original, and in a manner which tends to promote profanity at this day. Thus "God forbid" occurs twenty-three times in one version. In no case is the name of God in the original, which simply say "by no means," or, "may it not be." "God speed" is used several times without any mention of the Deity in the original. "Would to God," and "would God" are used twelve times where the original expressed only a wish, without a mention of God. "God save the king" is a mistranslation of the same character. The original agrees with the instruction of Christ. "Let your speech be simply yea, yea, and nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." The translation, it is claimed, violates it.

2. At the period when the translation was made, the English people were not characterized by delicacy and modesty of expression. Some parts of the Bible are needlessly so translated as to make it improper to read it in course in public or before mixed audiences. The authors of the present revision promise to furnish a version equally faithful, and more in accordance with the purer standard of taste now prevailing.

3. The Bible ought to be a standard of grammatical accuracy. The changes in the language effected by time have made some of its expressions ungrammatical. Thus, "be" for are. "Things that be not," "we be," "they be." "Which" for who or whom. Formerly "which" as a pronoun represented persons. "Them which," "them that," used for "those who," are grammatical errors of frequent occurence. "His" for its occurs frequently, the pronoun its being new and little used in 1611—now generally used in reference to things. Adjectives are used for adverbs, the nominative case of pronouns for the objective, and vice versa. "Shall" and "will" are confounded.

4. The common version is the work of fifty-four men, all of whom, except one, were connected with the church of England. So far from being non-sectarian, the translators, in their prefatory dedication, express the hope that "the church of England shall reap good fruit thereby." In accordance with this bias they translate the word "episcopos" variously, as bishop or as overseer, accordingly as may be necessary to sustain prelacy. They insert the unauthorized statements that Timothy was "ordained the first bishop of the church of the Ephesians," and that Titus "was the first bishop of the church of the Cretians," neither of which are parts of the original. They put the word "Easter," an unscriptural term, derived from the name of a Saxon goddess, in place of the word "passover" (Acts 12: 4), as divine authority for their observance of that day. They call robbers of temples "robbers of churches," to sustain the Romish idea that edifices of wood or stone consecrated to divine worship are churches. They sanction the Romish practice of canonizing christians by prefixing St. to the name of the writers of the New Testament.

5. It is claimed that in many instances the defects of the old translation have formed the basis of valid skeptical assaults, which a fair translation would have disarmed. Thus, in Ex. 3: 22, the common version represents God as directing the Hebrew women to "borrow" from the Egyptians what they never designed to repay. The same deception is inculcated in respect to the men in Ex. 11: 2. The original means to demand. Having toiled as slaves without pay, they had the right to demand part of what was due them. So in Sam. 12: 31; Chron. 22: 3. David, "a man after God's own heart," is represented as sawing up the Ammonites, hacking them with axes, and burning them in brick-kilns; thus inhumanly destroying a whole nation because their king had offended him. A correct translation, it is claimed, would state that he "put them to" or "set them to work at" saws and axes, and brick-kilns, etc., that is, taught them to labor at agricultural and mechanic arts, making them a peaceful and useful people. So in Jer. 20: 7, Jeremiah is made to say, "O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived," instead of, as the original declares, "Thou hast persuaded me, and I was persuaded." So in Isa. 3: 23, glasses are spoken of at an age in which glass did not exist. The Hebrew word translated "glasses" signifies "mirrors," which were made of polished metals. So in Num. 12: 3, it is objected by infidels that Moses declares of himself, "Now the man Moses was very meek above all men which were upon the face of the earth." This passage Dr. Horne retranslates thus: "Now the man Moses was depressed (or afflicted) more than any man of that land."

The above examples suffice to show the general grounds on which the revisers seek to establish their first point, viz: that the present translation is defective. But besides the errors which have arisen from the change in the English language, since the translation was made, and from defective translation of the common Greek version, the Bible Union have entered upon the work of collating ancient manuscripts and correcting the errors in the Greek text of the New Testament.

It is gratifying to know that, as stated by Dr. Horne, "the very worst manuscript extant would not pervert one article of our faith, or destroy one moral precept." At the same time, the greater the accuracy to which the original text can be brought, the more perfect will be the light shed on our articles of faith and rules of conduct.

For the World's Crisis.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, and the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

At the closing remarks of our last article on this text, we treated upon the subject of Lazarus being raised from the dead, to show that there is no such thing brought to view in the whole transaction as an immortal soul, existing as a separate conscious entity; consequently the saint could not have a reward until the resurrection; neither could the sinner be punished until the day of judgment.

We will now pass to the next proposition, which is to show the nature of the punishment of the wicked, which is a second and eternal death. "Sin is the transgression of the law."—1 John 3: 4. We are also informed by inspiration that "the wages of sin is death." But what was the penalty in relation to Adam and Eve? Was it literal death? or was it spiritual death? We answer it was literal death, or the death of the whole man. But there are a large number of well meaning men, who say it was "a spiritual death," because Adam died that day. Truly he died that very day, because he had become a sinner, and dead in trespasses and sins; but would it be a penalty for sin to tell Adam and Eve that if they commit sin they should become sinners?

Let us look into this matter a little more carefully, and see what the real penalty was, as declared by their Creator.

In the first place, God made Adam from the dust of the ground, and as soon as he set him to breathing, he pronounced him a "living soul." Did God say any thing here about an immortal soul? Not a word. Please look at Gen. 3: 19, read carefully, and see if God does not positively declare that Adam was "dust," and to dust he should return. Now we ask if God made any exception in favor of an immortal soul, when he pronounced the sentence of death on Adam? We answer, not in the least; but the whole man was declared to be dust, and unto dust he must return.

I think Adam and Eve did die that day, literally, in the very day they ate of the forbidden fruit, for "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day"; and Adam and Eve both died within the first thousand years from the creation. If any part of Adam and Eve was immortal, and did not die, then Satan told the truth, and God told the lie. Which way will you have it, kind reader? Shall we dispute the whole Bible, and say that the serpent told the truth? Facts prove that God told the truth, and Satan told the lie; for Adam and Eve did both die.

Can you discover any intimation of endless, conscious misery in all the sentence pronounced on Adam and Eve for their transgression? Not a word of it; but the whole account shows that "the wages of sin is death," which is cessation of the life of the whole man.

We will now take up the different expressions made use of to denote the dreadful punishment of the wicked in a future state. We will first refer to Matt. 7: 13:—"Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Is there not a perfect antithesis between the words destruction and life? If the word life, in the above passage, means eternal existence, then of course the word destruction means eternal death, or non-existence. But if it be claimed that destruction means eternal, conscious misery, then, of course, both roads lead to eternal life.

Vernon, Vt. B. PERHAM.

FUTURE COMING OF CHRIST.

There are two stages in the coming of Christ: he will first come for his saints, and subsequently come with his saints. In the first place Christ will appear in mid-heaven with his angels, or descend to the atmospheric heaven to gather his saints, who will then "be caught up into the air" (2 Thess. 4: 17,) and will remain above, in their "chambers," "for a little moment," "until the indignation be overpast." (Isa. 26: 20); and, in the second place, "the Lord my God shall come, and ALL the saints with thee" (Zech. 14: 5,) which includes both the changed living saints, and the resurrected ones, who had previously been "caught up together" to "meet the Lord," and having remained till the close of the "indignation," they now "ALL" return with their Lord, at which time "the Lord shall be King over all the earth." (v. 9.)

. So, instead of having Christ come to bring an army of disembodied saints, to imprison in tenements of clay, he is coming, first, to gather his slumbering and living saints to meet him, and then come with them to the renovated earth. He comes for his saints before coming with them. W. SHELDON.

A STORY FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

THE WOOLEN STOCKING.

"Why do you cry so much?" This was a question which Ella's friend, Louisa, asked her when she called one afternoon and found her crying as if her heart would break.

"Mother gives me so much knitting to do that I never have time to run about and play," was the answer which Ella made to Louisa.

"Now don't get impatient and angry, for your mother is very kind to you. She has made you knit, just as my mother makes me knit; but our fathers are poor, and we ought to do some work to help pay expenses."

Now, I must tell you about Ella's father, and what he was. He was a good, honest man. He was a mason in a large manufacturing town in Germany. He had to build very high walls, and chimneys as high as shot-towers. Many a time he came near falling off, but in every case he caught hold of something and was saved. At the time of which I am speaking he was building a great chimney for a sugar refinery. Everybody who saw him working on it thought it a very dangerous place.

Ella went to her mother, and taking a seat beside her, said:

"Father will finish the big chimney to-day; won't he, mother?"

"Yes; he said that he was going to throw the whole scaffolding down this very afternoon. And I am very glad of it, for I am always anxious about him just before he finishes a high chimney. There is great danger, and your father is usually the last to get down."

"Then," said Ella, "Willie and I will go to see him, if you will consent, and we will have a good time calling to him before he comes down."

"Hurrah!" shouted Willie, who was an interested listener. Consent was given by their mother, and soon they were running through the streets just as fast as they could go. By-and-by they reached the great chimney. The scaffolding was nearly all down, for the workmen had been taking it down very carefully all day. The last piece was taken off. Willie and Ella saw a great crowd of people gathered all around. They had come to witness the laying of the last brick on the top of the chimney. By-and-by the last stroke of the trowel was made by Mr. Singer, the father of Ella and her brother. He took off his hat and cheered. All the people below answered him with loud shouts of congratulation.

But in a little time after the cheering had ceased, they heard Mr. Singer call aloud, as if in great distress, "the rope! the rope!"

The workmen who had taken down the scaffolding looked around, and, behold! there was the great rope lying flat on the ground! It was the one which was to have been fastened at the top of the chimney for Mr. Singer to come down on. Strange to say, it had not been thought of during the whole day. It should have been fastened before any of the scaffolding was removed.

A deep silence prevailed. Everybody was panic-stricken. It was impossible to throw the rope to the top of that high chimney; and it was equally impossible for Mr. Singer to come down without a rope. All the people were at a loss to know what to do. And the father of little Ella and Willie! He was in a perfect terror. He walked around and around the narrow top of the chimney, trying to see something which could help him down But all in vain. He became very dizzy. The ground seemed to be farther and farther from him. He thought he was three times as high as he really was. He shut his eyes, for the people began to cry and scream; and that scared him more than ever. He heard his two little children crying as if their hearts would break. He thought he must fall; he did not see how he could hold on another moment.

Ella and Willie ran home as fast as they could. They could not tell what was the matter at first: but by-and-by they were just able to gasp, "Mother, mother, father can't come down? The rope is on the ground, and nobody can get it up to him! Oh, mother, the people are crying, and he certainly will fall down!"

Mrs. Singer was calm and silent. Had a stranger seen her conduct he would have said that she had but little feeling. But that would be a great mistake. She had as much as anybody else. But she was in the constant habit of trusting in the Savior under all circumstances. She went calmly back to her private room, offered up a prayer to God, put on her shawl and bonnet, and went with her little heart-broken children to the scene of the great danger.

When they came to the place, they heard the people saying to one another, "Now he is about to fall! Now! now! Oh, what can save poor Mr. Singer!"

Mrs. Singer called out to him with great calmness, "My dear husband, you must not fall, for our sake. Here we are—our little children and myself. Hold on! Take off your stocking and begin to unravel it. Tie the end of the yarn to a bit of mortar or a piece of brick, which you can break off. Then keep on unravelling, and let the bit of mortar or brick slowly down. Do you hear me, my dear husband?"

The people were as silent as the grave. He made a motion with his hand, indicating that he understood what she said. The people did not know how a stocking and a piece of mortar could save her husband.

Mr. Singer slowly took off one of his boots, pulled out the end of one of his stockings, which he slipped off his foot, fastened it to a piece of brick, and gradually unravelled the stocking. The thin thread came down shaking in the wind. But at last it reached the two hands which were stretched out ready to receive it.

What was to be done now? Let us wait and see what Mrs. Singer is still thinking about. She said:

"Give me a large ball of strong twine." In a few minutes she had it, and fastened the end of it to the end of the yarn. "Now, draw up the yarn again," she called out to her husband. He heard her, and slowly drew it up. By-and-by he held the twine in his hand; the other end of the twine being still on the ground. Then Mrs. Singer fastened the twine to the rope, and called out:

"Now, if you can draw the rope up and fasten it to the top of the chimney, you will be safe." He heard her. People who were looking up at him through opera-glasses saw him smile. They breathed freer, for now they could see how he might get down again.

Finally the rope was at the top. "God be praised," shouted everybody. "God be praised, that noble man is almost safe now!" His wife said, "Yes, God be praised. He will answer prayer. He has answered mine. He it was who showed me how to rescue my husband." Then she buried her face in her hands.

The question now is, "Is Mr. Singer so weak that he has not strength enough to let himself down?" His wife bows in prayer, saying: "Now I can do no more, Heavenly Father; but I pray to thee to save him. Do save my husband, for Jesus' sake." The people were moved to tears. She arose calmly, took a seat, and did not even look up to see how her husband was getting along. She looked as if perfectly sure that her prayer was answered.

All at once the people shouted at the top of their voices, "He is safe!" He is safe! Ella and Willie ran up to their father, and he kissed them many times. He was weeping, and his heart was feeling too deeply for him to speak. He could only weep and smile. God had saved him. All hearts were happy.

The next day was Thanksgiving day. The people sent many little presents to Mr. Singer and his family. In the evening Ella's mother called her up and said, "My child, do you know that the stocking which you knit was the means of saving your father's life? You cried because I wanted you to work a little. Neither you nor I knew then what your work would eventually do. How glad I am that you obeyed me! I know you are very thankful for what you have done. I hope that you and all the girls and boys in this great world will always do willingly what their parents tell them. Such work may save the life of somebody whom they love."—Methodist.

SELFISHNESS.

Katie was not a very good little girl; she often teased her brother in many ways. It made her mamma very sad to think her little daughter was so naughty. One day Charlie had a nice book given him by his kind papa. When Katie saw its red covers and pretty pictures, she wanted it very much. Snatching it from Charlie's hand, she ran away to her own room to look at it; but she did not enjoy the book, because she had been so unkind to her gentle brother.

By and by she felt so unhappy, that she could not help crying, and very soon she carried the book back to Charlie, and asked him to forgive her. Now Charlie loved Jesus, so he very willingly forgave his sister. Then they kissed each other, and played merrily for a long time.

When Katie prayed that night, she asked Jesus to make her a christian like Charlie, and help her to be a good girl all the time; and she felt that he would answer her prayer. —Freedman's Journal.

"COULDN'T LOOK ME IN THE EYE."

"I don't want your boy, sir," said an eccentric merchant to a father who was seeking employment for his son. "He hung his head all the time I was talking to him; and I never want to do business with any body who can't look me in the eye."

Although some good boys may drop their heads when spoken to through bashfulness, it is usually done from a less innocent cause. He who takes money from his mother's purse, apples from his neighbor's tree, or who hides in the stable, or sits in the store to smoke a cigar unknown to his friends, will not be very likely to look them honestly in the face when he comes home.

Little folks, be sure your sins will find you out. A guilty conscience needs no accusing.

KEEP THEM OUT.

"I don't want to hear naughty words," said a little boy. "It's no matter," said another boy, "what Joe Town says; it is in one ear, and out of the other." "No," rejoined the little boy, "the worst of it is, when naughty words get in, they stick; so I mean to do my best to keep them out."

That is right; keep them out; for it is sometimes hard work to turn them out when they once get in.—Well Spring.
